

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

- + Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.
- + Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.
- + Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.
- + Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.

Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. Den gesamten Buchtext können Sie im Internet unter <http://books.google.com> durchsuchen.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. THE WAR ON THE GOLD COAST: ASHANTES IN AMBUSH.

prise, which is usually specially sensitive in view of anticipated troubles, is becoming reassured by existing phenomena. It has to be borne in mind, of course, that winter is not yet past, and that once again the seasons may prove unpropitious. But, on the whole, the outlook of trade is cheerful. The future brightens as we advance towards it, and there is no reason visible which should prevent our moving onward into the unknown without any further distrust of appearances than is required by ordinary precaution.

But what is likely to be our domestic policy this year? What will the Government and Parliament do, or attempt to do? Nay, perhaps there are not a score of men outside the Cabinet, if even there are any inside of it, who can give a precise and trustworthy answer to the question. For ourselves, we cannot say that we are looking forward to a very sensational, still less to a very productive, Session. It is impossible to forget that in all probability it will be the last Session of the present Parliament, and that it will be followed by a general election. Great measures are seldom carried under such conditions—measures, we mean, embodying great principles of permanent policy. Mr. Gladstone, being Chancellor of the Exchequer, may be expected to submit to the country a brilliant Budget, possibly affecting the financial arrangements not of the year only but of some years to come. Beyond this, the country is in the dark. A new Reform Bill, which some people seem to expect, strikes us as extremely problematical. For, a further extension of the County Franchise would logically carry with it a redistribution of seats; and any great experiment in this direction would probably have too uncertain a bearing upon the general election to warrant a trial of it just at this time. A comprehensive and well-digested measure for the adjustment of local to Imperial taxation is more likely, we think, to constitute the pièce de résistance of the approaching Session. But this is mere speculation, which facts may presently dissipate into thin air. We must await with patience the Ministerial announcements. We have no clue to what they will be. This, however, we may be permitted to surmise. With a prosperous trade, and the prospect of a rapid acquisition of wealth, nothing in the shape of political agitation is likely to go very deep beneath the surface. The country will have its periods of temporary excitement, but beyond this there would appear to be no present probability of its being stirred.

We relegate such matters to the future. The year upon which we have entered is fraught with events affecting individual interests, which, after all, will come closer to our experience and our hearts than any of the public matters to which we have adverted. Here we are precluded from anticipation by the very nature of the case. But we are not prohibited from the indulgence of good wishes. With heartiest fervour, therefore, we close these observations by expressing a hope that all our readers may enjoy "a Happy New Year."

MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

The Special Artist of this Journal will be at St. Petersburg to attend the marriage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh to the Grand Duchess Marie, which is now eagerly anticipated. It has been erroneously said that there is a difficulty about the arrangements for the double marriage. This is stated as being owing to the rite in the Russian-Greek form being performed at night. No authority is given for this; and it may be here stated that when the Czarewitch was married, in 1866, the ceremony was performed about midday. In that case there was no double marriage, for Princess Dagmar was previously baptised into the Russian Church, under the name of Marie Feodorovna. The marriage took place in the chapel of the Imperial Palace, where the Greek rite will, no doubt, be celebrated in the coming marriage. There is a very handsome English church in St. Petersburg, situated on the Angliakaya Naberejna, or the English quay, where the Protestant forms may be gone through; and as the two churches are not more than half a mile apart, there can be no difficulty in arranging the time so as to suit each other. The ceremony in the Greek form occupies about an hour. It does not take place at the altar, but outside of the iconostasis, which is equivalent to the rood-screen in a Latin church. Within this screen the place is considered so holy that a woman cannot enter; so a small temporary altar is erected in front of it, upon which is placed a copy of the four Gospels—these forming, without the Epistles—one book; and at this the marriage ceremony is performed. All monks in the Russian Church are celibates; but it is an imperative obligation, again, with the secular clergy to marry, once in their lives only; which has given rise in Russia to a proverbial saying, "As precious as a priest's wife," to express a value which cannot be replaced. A monk, however high his position in the Church, cannot officiate at the nuptial service; this duty is always performed by a married priest. At the marriage of the Czarewitch the Metropolitan of St. Petersburg at that time was a monk. He received the Imperial party as they entered the church, and blessed the bride and bridegroom, sprinkling holy water on them; but he retired as soon as the marriage began, and the ceremony was performed by one of the secular clergy.

A circular has been addressed by the Local Government Board to the various boards of guardians regarding the education of pauper children. Hitherto the action of the guardians in this respect has been regulated by Denison's Act, which has expired, and it is pointed out in the circular how the instruction of these children is provided for by the Elementary Education Act. Attention is called to the fact that the parents of these children have the right to select the school; and, so long as the children are sent to any public elementary school, the guardians cannot object to it. They are recommended, however, to make provision for ascertaining the number of school attendances, and generally to see that the children really receive a useful training.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, continued at Osborne House. On Christmas Eve her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove through East Cowes and Newport. The Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Arthur arrived at Osborne. On Christmas Day the Queen, Princess Beatrice, the Duke of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service at Whippingham church. The Rev. George Prothero and the Rev. Thomas Macnamara officiated. On the following day the Duke of Edinburgh took leave of her Majesty, and left Osborne, previous to his departure for Russia. In the evening the children of Whippingham school sang in the inner hall of the pavilion at Osborne. On Saturday last Major-General Sir Thomas and the Hon. Lady Biddulph dined with her Majesty. Lieutenant R. B. Lane (Rifle Brigade) arrived at Osborne. On Sunday the Queen, Prince Arthur, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service at Whippingham church. The Rev. George Prothero and the Rev. Thomas Macnamara officiated. On Monday Prince Arthur proceeded to Sandringham. Lieutenant R. B. Lane left Osborne. The Queen, with the members of the Royal family, has walked and driven out daily. Her Majesty took the first and second prizes in the class for deer-hounds at the Aberdeen Dog Show. The Queen has consented to lend various pictures to the Art-Instruction Department of the London International Exhibition for 1874. The Queen has, on the nomination of Earl Cowper, K.G., appointed Major Philip Limborch Tillbrook, late unattached, one of her Majesty's Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms, vice Colonel Henry Hume, C.B., who is appointed an Exon of her Majesty's Royal body-guard of the Yeomen of the Guard. Lord Ilchester will succeed Earl Cowper, who has resigned the office of Captain of the Gentlemen-at-Arms.

Her Majesty's Royal bounty to the poor of the metropolis and its environs was distributed at the Almonry Office, in Middle Scotland-yard, Whitehall, on the 19th and 20th ult., to the clergymen who co-operate with the Lord High Almoner, and the alms were continued to be distributed on Monday and Tuesday in the following week to the applicants previously recommended by the clergy in various localities in and about London. The number of persons who were relieved in sums of 5s. and 13s. exceeded 1000 in the aggregate. The majority of the recipients exceeded sixty years of age, and there were numerous blind men and persons greatly afflicted who were admitted to participate in this bounty. The selections were made by the Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor, Lord High Almoner, and the Rev. Ernest Wilberforce, Sub-Almoner, assisted by Mr. John Hanby, Secretary and Yeoman of the Royal Almonry in Ordinary.

Her Majesty's New-Year's gifts to the poor of New Windsor, Holy Trinity, and Clewer, which consist of beef and coals, were distributed to the numerous recipients on New-Year's Day.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales attended Divine service on Christmas Day at Sandringham church. The Rev. W. Lake Onslow officiated. Their Royal Highnesses were also present at the morning service on Sunday. The Prince and Princess partook of the sacrament at the holy communion. The Rev. W. Lake Onslow officiated. Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein and Prince Arthur have been on a visit to their Royal Highnesses. The Prince and Princess will come to town early next week, preparatory to their departure for Russia. Their Royal Highnesses' children will remain at Sandringham during the absence of the Prince and Princess upon the Continent.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke of Edinburgh presided, on Monday, over a meeting of the Committee for the Army and Navy Amateur Fine-Arts Exhibition, held at Buckingham Palace. On Tuesday the Duke left London en route for St. Petersburg. His Royal Highness travelled from Charing-cross by the ordinary boat-train, at 7.40 a.m., to which a saloon-carriage was attached. Upon arriving at Dover his Royal Highness was received by the chief officials of the garrison. A guard of honour of the 7th Royal Fusiliers, under the command of Captain Meyers, was in attendance, with the band, and a Royal salute was fired from the castle. The Duke embarked on board the special steamer Samphire, Captain Goldsack, and crossed the Channel to Ostend. A large assemblage of the townspeople witnessed his Royal Highness's departure. The Duke arrived at Berlin at eight o'clock on Wednesday evening, and was received at the railway station by the Imperial Crown Prince and Imperial Crown Princess of Germany and the British Ambassador, by whom his Royal Highness was accompanied to the Imperial Palace. The Duke resumed his journey north yesterday (Friday), and his Royal Highness is expected to arrive at St. Petersburg in time to pass the Russian Christmas Day (Jan. 6, 1874) with the Russian Imperial family. The marriage of the Duke with the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna will be solemnised on the 10th (22nd) inst. The Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Arthur are expected in Berlin in the middle of the present month, en route for St. Petersburg, in order to be present at the nuptials of their Royal and Imperial Highnesses. On the 18th inst. their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by the Imperial Crown Princess of Germany, will leave Berlin for Königsberg. The Crown Prince of Germany will not leave Berlin until the 19th inst., as he is to represent the Emperor at the festival of the Order of the Black Eagle, on the 18th, and give a grand banquet in honour of the anniversary. He will join the Crown Princess, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and Prince Arthur at Königsberg, and continue the journey with them to St. Petersburg.

The coming of age of Viscount Maidstone was celebrated on the 26th ult. by a ball to the tenantry and others upon the Eastwell estate. The festivities took place in the school-room at Eastwell, Kent. Presents of game, venison, and wines were sent to contribute to the entertainment by the Earl and Countess of Winchelsea, the Duke and Duchess of Abercorn, and the Rev. Montague Oxenden.

Major Lyon and the officers of the Royal Horse Artillery stationed at Dorchester military centre gave a ball on Tuesday night, at the Corn Exchange, to the county aristocracy. The room was brilliantly adorned with military trophies. Lord St. Lawrence and about 250 guests were present.

The City Press says the total quantity of meat received at the Metropolitan Meat Market on Monday week was 1095 tons, this being nearly 100 tons in excess of the consignments of any previous day. The average daily weight of the meat and poultry received during the year is 500 tons.

A numerous deputation of steam-ship owners on Wednesday waited upon Dr. Lyon Playfair and Mr. Dodson, with reference to the acceleration of mails to the East. Both right hon. gentlemen promised that every attention should be given to the subject.

The Extra Supplement.

"HOMELESS."

This picture, by Mr. H. B. Roberts, was in the last exhibition of the Royal Academy. It is a scene of striking pathetic force. The terrified women and girls, driven into the open country by the fierce approach of a public disaster, see the vehicle to which alone they trusted for shelter and carriage, with their household goods conveyed in it, suddenly destroyed by fire. It may have been struck by a random shell from the enemy's field battery on the hill above their native village, where thousands of armed men are engaged in deadly conflict. The aged mother and the anguished wife seem to be overcome with horror at the prospect before them. Destitution, cold, and hunger await them in the coming night. The horse which should have aided their flight to a place of safety has been seized for the uses of war; they cannot travel far, but must lie down and die. They fear this even less than the wanton violence of soldiers who may discover their helpless situation. Only the elder of the two little girls, with the activity of youth, exerts herself to save a bundle of blankets from the burning waggon. Over the hill, to the right, a party of men, attracted by the blaze, are running towards this distressed family. It is to be hoped they come with no evil intent, but the tender mercies of war are sometimes extremely cruel.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

The latest news from Cape Coast Castle is to Dec. 15, when Sir Garnet Wolseley, with 500 sailors and marines, had gone up the country, seventy miles towards the river Pra, in pursuit of the Ashantees, who were making a precipitate retreat. The Himalaya had arrived with the second battalion of the Rifle Brigade, but they were not yet landed; and it is said the ship was to cruise about a few days for the benefit of their health, which seems rather strange when Sir Garnet Wolseley must be so much in want of soldiers. The Tamar, with the 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, was at Sierra Leone on the 7th ult. The 42nd Highlanders were expected. The other portion of the military forces, consisting of the native levies under Captain Glover, R.N., had gone up the river Volta. There was a rumour of the intention of the King of Dahomey to join the King of Ashantee in hostilities against the British settlements on the coast; but this rumour is scarcely believed; it would be alarming, if it were true.

Our illustration on the front page of this paper is a lively representation of the native manner of fighting in the bush or forest. The men are naked, with the exception of a cloth bound over the lower part of the body, from the waist to the thigh; and their nimble movements, under cover of thick underwood, demand the utmost vigilance on the part of our officers to prevent a surprise while on the march. Their weapons are clumsy flint muskets, loaded with slugs, or sometimes with pebbles, and the wounds they inflict are not always mortal.

The shipment of stores at Woolwich is continued; the Elizabeth Martin was to leave this week for Cape Coast Castle and Adlah at the mouth of the Volta, with provisions, muskets, ammunition, glass beads for the payment of the natives up the country, and three hundred pairs of handcuffs for prisoners or mutineers. The additional stores can hardly be yet required on the Gold Coast, where there must be by this time an enormous accumulation, including, at a rough estimate, some 7000 tons of provisions, partly live cattle from England; 2000 tons of ammunition, and 4000 tons of coals. The number of rounds prepared for the 7-pounder mountain gun has been 2000, and the ball and buckshot cartridges exceed 10,000,000.

We may here notice the publication (by Messrs. W. Blackwood and Sons) of Fanti and Ashanti, by Captain H. Brackenbury, R.A., assistant military secretary to Sir Garnet Wolseley, and Captain G. L. Huyshe, of the Rifle Brigade, also attached to the Staff. This little volume contains three essays, written during their voyage from England, on the topography of the Gold Coast, and on the relations between the European settlements, and the protected tribes, and the kingdom of Ashantee. Much of the same information has been given in two or three articles which appeared in our own Extra Supplements about a month ago. Admiral Sir John Dalrymple Hay, in his small book on Ashanti and the Gold Coast (Stanford, Charing-cross), presents a good historical sketch of the origin of the dispute, and of the commencement of this war.

The winter conversazione of the Working Men's College, in Great Ormond-street, was held yesterday. A selection of vocal music by the college choir, an exhibition of drawings by the art-class, and an exhibition of fruits by the Natural History Society, formed the special attractions of this reunion of the old friends, teachers, and students of the college.

According to the monthly report of Dr. Frankland, the river waters distributed by the metropolitan companies during the month of December were efficiently filtered, and were clear and transparent when drawn from the mains; the quality of the Thames waters exhibited in each case a marked improvement upon that which had been supplied during November, whereas the quality of the Lea water supplied by the East London Company had deteriorated.

"The Creation" is to be performed at the concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, on Thursday next, the 8th inst. The solo singers announced are Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Raynham, and Signor Giulio Perkin, who will make his first appearance in London on this occasion. Dr. Stainer will preside at the organ, and the performance will be conducted by Mr. Barnby.

The total number of paupers last week in the metropolitan districts was 106,579, of whom 36,457 were in workhouses and 70,422 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the two previous years, this was a decrease of 3856 and 17,598 respectively, but this decrease decreased with the year 1870 was 40,286. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 530, of whom 473 were men, 125 women, and 82 children under sixteen.

E." to the funds of the Cancer Hospital, Brompton; and a similar sum has been paid by "C. H." to the funds of the Queen Charlotte Lying-in Hospital. "V. S. T." has given a fourth donation of £1000 to the British Hospital for Skin Diseases, in Great Marlborough-street. A gift of £1000 has been made, in addition to previous donations, by "T. B. K.," to the Royal Dramatic College. The Skinners' Company has voted £10 10s. to the funds of the North-Eastern Hospital for Children, Hackney-road.

THE LATE PROFESSOR AGASSIZ.

THE LATE PROFESSOR AGASSIZ.

The death of this eminent natural philosopher at New York, which was recorded three or four weeks ago, is a great loss to the world of scientific students. He was a Swiss, who had lived in America during the past quarter of a century, and both countries were justly proud of him. Louis Jean Rodolphe Agassiz was born on May 28, 1807, in the village of Motier, Canton de Vaud, between the Lake of Neuchâtel and Morat. His father was the pastor or parish clergyman there, and afterwards at Orbe, in the same canton. In 1818 Louis Agassiz went to school at the Gymnasium of Bienne, whence he was removed, in 1822, to the Academy of Lausanne. He studied the experimental sciences, medicine, and comparative anatomy, at the Universities of Zurich, Heidelberg, and Munich, taking the degree of M.D. He attached himself while at Munich to Spix and Martius, whose travels in Brazil had attracted his interest; and on the death of the former he joined the latter, at his request, in the publication of a monograph of the fishes in that country, comprising nearly 120 species, many of them but little known. The interest awakened in him by superintending this elaborate book through the press was such as to induce him to make further researches into the nature and classification of fishes, and more especially of the salmonidæ and of the fresh-water fishes of Central Europe. He published the first part of an elaborate work on this subject, with illustrations, at Neuchâtel, in 1839; a second and third part following after a few years' interval. His next work in this direction, in which he had the assistance of M. Vogt, was devoted to the embryology of the salmon tribe. He had already devoted much attention to the subject of fossil fishes, and had published the results of his studies in a work entitled "Recherches sur les Poissons Fossiles" (Neuchâtel, 1833-41). He next came to England to study the fossil strata of this country and its treasures, issuing, in 1844, an elaborate account of those discovered in the old red sandstone of the Devonian system. The direction of his studies at this period may be traced in the titles of his next publications—"Description des Echinodermes Fossiles de la Suisse," "Monographie des Echinodermes Vivants et Fossiles," "Etudes Critiques sur les Mollusques Fossiles," and "Mémoire sur Moules des Mollusques." From these studies he passed to another branch of natural history—the study of the glacial system of his native mountains; and he published, in 1840, at Neuchâtel, his "Etudes sur les Glaciers," which suddenly made him famous, and opened a subject of philosophical inquiry to which little attention had been directed up to that time. He entered more fully into the subject in a second work, published by him at Paris in 1847—"Recherches sur les Glaciers." Since 1838 he had held the Professorship of Natural History at Neuchâtel, where most of his works were published, and where he had the assistance of the local society of natural history. About the year 1847 he was invited to Boston, United States, to occupy a similar chair in the Harvard University of Cambridge. In 1852 he was appointed to the Professorship of Comparative Anatomy in the Medical College of Charleston, South Carolina; but this post he resigned after two years, and returned to Cambridge. His name was not forgotten on account of his retirement to the other side of the Atlantic. A prize was awarded to him by the French Academy of Sciences; and about the same time he was invited to come to France in order to hold one of the chairs in the Faculty of Science at Paris, which he declined. While engaged in his professional duties he found time to write several scientific works, including "The Principles of Zoology, for the use of Schools and Colleges;" "Lake Superior, its Physical Character, Vegetation, and Animals;" "Outlines of Comparative Physiology;" and—the magnum opus of his life—"Contributions to the Natural History of the United States." In his "Outlines," which, says "Chambers's Cyclopædia," was written in conjunction with Mr. Gould, "the Professor upholds the doctrine of the successive creation of higher organised beings on the surface of the earth." Besides his original labours, Professor Agassiz devoted himself also to the general literature of natural history. Not only was he the author of "Nomenclator Zoologicus," containing the systematic names of all the genera of animals, both living and fossil, with references to the authors of the books where they are described, but he also laid the foundation of the great work, "Bibliographia Zoologica et Geologica," edited by the late Mr. Hugh E. Strickland and Sir William Jardine, in four volumes, published by the Ray Society.

THE LATE LIEUT. F. H. EARDLEY-WILMOT, R.A.

THE LATE LIEUT. F. H. EARDLEY-WILMOT.

This gallant young officer, of whose late heroic death we must all have read with mingled feelings of enthusiasm and sorrow, was the fourth son of Sir John Eardley-Wilmot, Bart. He joined the Military Academy at Woolwich in January, 1865, and received his commission in the Royal Artillery in July, 1867, when he was appointed to the B battery 4th Brigade, to which his Royal Highness Prince Arthur was attached while undergoing instruction in that branch. Ever ready at the call of duty, he was among the foremost to volunteer for the Ashantee war, and, his services being accepted, he set sail with Sir Garnet Wolseley and his brilliant staff in the Ambriz. On his arrival at Cape Coast Castle he was employed in the almost hopeless task of training a small body of natives in the use of the Gatling gun; and finally, towards the end of October, he joined the little garrison at Dunquah. From this place it was determined to make a reconnaissance on Nov. 3, and accordingly Lieutenant Eardley-Wilmot, accompanied by Lieutenant Jones and a small detachment of natives armed with rockets, was sent forward, the denseness of the bush not permitting the use of artillery. Coming soon upon a large body of Ashantees, a heavy and well-sustained fire was opened upon them. Early in the fray, Lieutenant Eardley-Wilmot received a severe wound, completely disabling the use of his arm; but, retiring for a minute to have it bound up, he was soon again at the head of his men, endeavouring by the example of his own intrepid conduct to kindle a faint spark of courage in their hearts, and firing the rockets himself with his now sole remaining arm. The Fanjees, however, hung back, and it became necessary to send for assistance. Lieutenant Jones was accordingly dispatched to Colonel Festing with the following lines hurriedly written in pencil on a scrap of paper:—"Dear Colonel,—Please send twenty men; 2nd West Annamaboes dwindled to about eight." Unhappily, the aid came but too late, Colonel Festing arriving on the scene only just in time to see his noble young comrade receive his death wound. A bullet fired from the adjoining bush had struck poor Wilnot in the region of the heart, and, raising his unwounded arm above his head, he fell on his face and instantly expired. Colonel Festing immediately rushed forward, amid a storm of bullets, and bore his body to the rear, receiving in this noble act of self-disregard a severe wound in the hip.

Thus fell Wilnot, the first victim in our Ashantee war, adding one more to that splendid list of England's heroes who have died gloriously, sword in hand and with their face to the enemy, the motto of the Royal Artillery always being engraved on their hearts—"Quò fas et gloria ducunt." Of his personal character we may say that he was loved and respected by all who knew him; his manly heart won golden opinions in that noble branch of the service to which he had the honour to belong; while his cheery smile and genial manner carried sunshine into every home he entered; for

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

THE RUSSIANS AT KHIVA.

The military expedition of General Kaufmann, in the early part of last summer, to subdue the Tartar principality of Khiva, has been illustrated by several sketches engraved for this Journal. They were drawn by officers of the Russian army, and were obtained by us through the agency of Mr. McGahan, special correspondent of the New York Herald, the only newspaper reporter allowed to join the expedition. He will shortly publish a complete narrative of the whole campaign. The illustration we now present is one that shows the scene in the garden of the Khan's palace, after the surrender of Khiva, when the General had an interview with Mohammed Rehid Khan to arrange the terms of a treaty of peace. "This treaty," says a Russian official writer, "is intended to obviate future disagreements between the various Central Asia principalities, which could only lead to mutual destruction and anarchy. Clauses 2 and 3 lay down a line of frontier which is to hinder the predatory inroads of the Turcomans, and to secure to us safe caravan routes by land and by water. The cession to Bokhara of a portion of the territory on the right bank of the Amou Darya, or Oxus river, and of the southern confines of the Steppe between that river and Turkestan, as provided for in clause 4, aims at placing the caravan routes under the guardianship of the Ameer of Bokhara, who will be responsible for their safety. The restrictions enacted in clause 5 with reference to the navigation of the Amou Darya are indispensable as long as the Khiva and Bokhara nomads are addicted to robbery and in the habit of profiting by the river for the furtherance of their unlawful practices. Clauses 6 to 15 refer to commerce, and are based upon the principle of mutual rights. Past experience showing how easily Khiva can be made an asylum for Russian criminals advised the enactment of clause 16. Clause 17 prohibits slavery and the traffic in human beings. Clause 18 finally stipulates for the payment of an indemnity, which is not only to refund to us our expenses, but also to serve as a severe penalty upon the inhabitants. If we thus succeed in pacifying the Turcomans, if we convert them to orderly and steady habits and render them powerless to attack the Khan, we shall have solved the difficult task of guarding our frontiers, developing commerce, and preserving the independence of Khiva."

In order to guard the newly-acquired territory, as well as to see to the collection of the imposed war indemnity, General Kaufmann decided to build a fort, with a strong garrison, on the right bank of the Oxus. But soon after the Russians had crossed to the right bank of the river the Turcomans returned to Khiva from the deserts, where they had been driven by General Golovachev, and demanded of the Khan to lead them against the foreign invaders. Their request being refused, they began to plunder and oppress the native inhabitants. They laid siege to the town of Pitnyak, and tried to carry the place by storm, but failed; and, on the report that the Russians were about to attack them, they raised the siege and dispersed. It is needless to add that whoever dares to oppose the Turcomans is instantly massacred. The unhappy Khivese are in a deplorable condition. Overloaded with taxes by the Khan, on the one hand, in order to satisfy the demands of the Russians, and robbed or murdered by the Turcomans, on the other, they are on the verge of despair, and loudly pray to Russia for protection. It is just possible that their prayers will not remain long unanswered, and that in a short time we shall hear of the annexation of Khiva to Russia.

Mr. Henry Deane, a local solicitor, was, on Tuesday, elected without opposition Coroner for the northern division of Leicestershire.

The gentlemen cadets at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, resumed their studies, on Monday, at the close of a short vacation of ten days for Christmas. The next examination of candidates for admission to the Academy will begin on the 20th inst., at the London University.

The Edinburgh School Board, on Monday, resolved to apply to the Education Department for building grants towards the erection of the seven new schools which it has been agreed to erect throughout the various districts of the city. A motion made by Mr. Blackburn, proposing that plans should be procured for the two schools to be erected in Leith-walk and Fountainbridge, was also unanimously adopted.

At a large and influential meeting at Edinburgh, on Tuesday, under the presidency of the Duke of Buccleuch, resolutions moved by the Lord Advocate of Scotland, Lord Shand, the Rev. Dr. Lindsay, the Bishop of Edinburgh, and others, were unanimously carried, approving of a proposal for combining with some ecclesiastical architectural design a statue of the late Dean Ramsay, in token of the affectionate regard in which he was held by all classes and denominations of his countrymen. In connection with the movement the Bishop of Edinburgh read the following extract from a letter which he had received from the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone:—"The experience of life seems to show me that there have been in our generation, as doubtless in others, a certain very limited number of individual types of persons, peculiarly formed and gifted, to whom no other person approaches (I speak of them in their own kind) or can be compared. Such was Dean Ramsay. In this rare and deep sense it is true that we have known and shall know nothing like him."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent at Paris.)

Thursday, Jan. 1, 1874.

Versailles was all alive this afternoon with the customary State reception of the Jour de l'An, observed with precisely the same ceremonial as during the presidency of M. Thiers—the members of the diplomatic body, the grand officers and functionaries of State, together with numerous deputations of the Parisian clergy and magistrature, being received by the Marshal-President in the grand salon of the Hôtel de la Présidence. No speeches were made, the Marshal merely exchanging complimentary phrases or shaking hands with the leading members of each deputation.

The National Assembly voted about 80,000,000*fr.* of the new taxes yesterday, and adjourned until the 8th inst. On its reassembling, discussion of the bill relative to the nomination of mayors will have precedence. Throughout the week it has occupied itself with examining the different clauses of the Budget, and rejecting hosts of amendments one after the other. Among the few that have been adopted is one moved by M. Ganivet, who noticed as an indefensible anomaly in the postal service that printed matter sent by book post in France cost twice as much as if it came from Belgium or Switzerland, the obvious consequence being that it would be advantageous for many French merchants and tradesmen to have their circulars and catalogues printed abroad, to the prejudice of home industry. M. Chesnelong, on the part of the Budget Committee, opposed M. Ganivet's amendment, but it was eventually carried against the Government by 350 votes to 302. The deficit in next year's estimated receipts amounts to £5,755,000*fr.* for which the Assembly are endeavouring to provide by increasing the taxes on sugar, oil, and salt. It is rumoured that a proposition will shortly be made by the Government to increase the land tax—a proceeding which can only heighten its unpopularity among the agricultural classes. The new year will be ushered in by a batch of interpellations. General Du Temple, for instance, wishes to inquire into the Italian policy of the Government; M. Haentjens is indignant that the Bonapartists are persecuted, and wants to know the reason why; while M. Ricard is about to raise once more the question of the state of siege and the continued suppression of provincial newspapers.

The burial of François Victor Hugo, the second son of the illustrious author of "Les Misérables," furnished the Parisians with the pretext of making a grand Republican demonstration on Sunday last. From an early hour the approaches to the street where he died were blocked by a dense crowd, the house itself being thronged with friends, while the Boulevards, along which the procession had to pass, were lined with serried masses of spectators. It is estimated that no less than 8000 people followed the hearse, among whom were numerous Republican deputies and journalists, the procession being so long that when the hearse reached the Porte St. Martin the last mourner had proceeded no further than the Boulevard Montmartre. The burial was performed without any religious rites, Victor Hugo having previously announced that both he and his son believed in God and the immortality of the soul, but not in the necessity of priesthood; and when the coffin had been lowered into the grave, Louis Blanc delivered an elaborate oration, which, in spite of the sanctity of the place, elicited frequent bursts of applause. After quoting the verses written by Victor Hugo after the death of his eldest son, a couple of years ago, in which the illustrious poet touchingly refers to the loss he has sustained, and says that he is almost alone in the world, M. Louis Blanc proceeded to remind his hearers of the life and works of the deceased, whose translation of Shakespeare is the best in the French language, his essays on the plays of our great dramatist revealing a perfect acquaintance with all the subtleties of the English language. "Victor Hugo believes in God and in the immortality of the soul," said Louis Blanc, in conclusion; "and that belief will enable him, borne down by affliction as he is, to live for that other family which belongs to great men—humanity." Scarcely had the speaker finished than a stentorian shout of "Vive la République!" burst forth, and a crowd of people pressed round Victor Hugo to shake hands with him. M. Gambetta, having been recognised by the bystanders, received an overwhelming ovation, and the ordinary solemn stillness of the cemetery was disturbed by a succession of boisterous rires.

Marshal Bazaine left Trianon-sous-Bois for the Ile Ste. Marguerite on the evening of Christmas Day. The Government appears to have feared a manifestation, and, instead of the prisoner being openly conducted through Paris to the Lyons Railway station, he was conveyed in a closed carriage, escorted by a detachment of gendarmes, to Villeneuve St. Georges, on the same line of railway, and distant some twenty miles from Versailles. The night express to Versailles was here intercepted, and the Marshal, arriving at Antibes late on Friday, was immediately conducted across to the Ile Ste. Marguerite, his appointed place of detention. Madame Bazaine and her family have arrived at Cannes, where a villa had been previously engaged for them. They will have every facility for visiting the prisoner, who, according to the Bonapartist journals, is occupied in drawing up a grand scheme for the reorganisation of the French army.

Christmas Day was enlivened in Paris by an Asiatian juvenile fête, held in the dancing-hall of the Elysée Montmartre. A gigantic Christmas tree, covered with toys and brilliantly lighted up, with Alsatian mould clinging to its roots, had been given by Madame Kestner, wife of the deputy of that name. A couple of orchestras were in attendance, and upwards of 2000 children received presents, those requiring it having not merely toys and cakes, but substantial winter clothing given to them. M. Coquelun, of the Théâtre Français, and M. Siebecker recited, amidst frantic applause, some verses stigmatising Marshal Bazaine as a traitor, and somewhat imprudently hinting at revenge, and the celebration of Christmas at no very distant time on Alsatian soil.

An explosion, which resulted in great loss of life, occurred the other day at a percussion-cap factory in the Cours de Vincennes, at Bel-Dir. Six women at work were killed on the spot, and of five others who were grievously injured one has since died in the hospital, while the other four remain in an almost hopeless condition. The premises are entirely destroyed. The eleven women killed or wounded were the only persons in the building at the time of the accident. The noise of the explosion was heard far and wide, and alarmed the entire St. Antoine quartier.

A complete rupture between Senors Castelar and Salmeron was the result of a fresh conference, on Wednesday, at Madrid, and all negotiations for a modification of the Cabinet are at an end.

Nothing definite can be stated of the Carlist war in the north, or of the siege of Carthagena.

HOLLAND.

The Government has received news from Penang that a serious engagement was fought on the 26th ult., and that the object aimed at by the Dutch was accomplished. The Dutch troops lost sixteen killed and sixty wounded. The Rajah of Pedir had reinforced the Kraton with a body of 1500 men, and the Dutch squadron had sailed for his territory to chastise him. The bearer of General van Swieten's letters to the Sultan had been imprisoned, and the letters were destroyed without being delivered to him. The populace (it is added) had obtained supreme power. The cholera is reported to be decreasing, and the weather is favourable.

RUSSIA.

A treaty containing eighteen articles has been concluded between the Emperor and the Ameer of Bokhara. By this treaty the territory recently annexed by Russia on the right bank of the Amou Darya is ceded to Bokhara. There are various stipulations with a view to promote commercial intercourse between the two States, and articles 11 and 12 state that the subjects of each are permitted to exercise all trades in the territory of the other, and to acquire landed property, subject to the laws of the country. The Bokhara Government undertakes not to harbour refugees or other fugitives from Russia, and will abolish the slave trade.

AMERICA.

The Virginian affair is at an end so far as concerns the vessel herself. She is stated to have foundered in a gale off Cape Fear on the 26th ult., and the United States frigate Ossipee, which should have brought her to New York, arrived without her. The survivors of her crew were, on landing, examined by the New York authorities and released. Before this news arrived, it was announced that the Spanish Government had followed up the advantage it gained by the decision of the American law officers, and required the restitution of the Virginian and the payment of an indemnity.

INDIA.

A telegram to the Secretary of State for India, from the Viceroy, states that the crop prospects are generally the same, and are still dependent upon the winter rains. Prices were for the most part unchanged. The Chief Commissioner of Oude reports, under date of Dec. 27, that the rain had been pretty general, and that the prospects were much brighter.

The Times correspondent at Calcutta telegraphs, under Wednesday's date, as follows:—"There has been again a slight rain at Behar, promoting heavy dews. Prices are moderate. Double advances are offered to cultivators. The relief works in Saran and portions of Purneah, Rajshaye, and Dinajepore are busy, but not elsewhere, all planters and a few of the zemindars helping. The Bhagalpore zemindars have informed the authorities that they will neither take advances nor help the tenantry. The poor in Shahabad are using unripe crops. Districts with a surplus are exporting new rice. The non-agricultural classes are anxious. The rain has saved the crops in Rajpootana, except a small district in Mulernee." Nearly 70,000 tons of grain have been stored by the Government in Bengal.

The Tuesday evening lectures to men at St. Paul's Cathedral will be resumed, on the 13th inst., by Canon Liddon.

Special prayers were offered up on Christmas Day, in the garrison churches throughout the United Kingdom, for the officers and men engaged in the Ashantee Expedition.

Dean Stanley preached his annual sermon to children last Saturday, which, being St. John's Day, naturally led him to dwell upon the life of the Beloved Apostle.

Mr. Wait, member for Gloucester, has given to the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester Cathedral a cheque for £100 towards the restoration of the noble pile.

The parish church of St. Nicholas, Kelvedon Hatch, near Brentwood, was reopened recently, after a thorough restoration. A sermon was preached by Bishop Piers Claughton.

The Rock states that the Archbishop of Canterbury has convened a meeting of Bishops, to be held at Lambeth Palace, on Tuesday, the 13th inst., to consider divers weighty and important matters connected with the Church.

The Church of the Holy Trinity, Sittingbourne, which has been rebuilt on a greatly enlarged scale, and which now contains 640 sittings (half of them free and unappropriated), was consecrated a short time ago by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The executors of the late Charles Dickens have erected a mural tablet in Rochester Cathedral, the chief object of which is to connect the memory of Dickens with the scenes in which his earliest and latest years were passed.

The parish church of St. Gwendoline, Talgarth, Breconshire, was reopened a few weeks ago with full choral service, after undergoing a thorough restoration. The Bishop of Hereford preached and celebrated on the occasion. The church is seated to hold 400 persons, and has been restored from a condition almost ruinous under the superintendence of Mr. Thomas Nicholson, the diocesan architect.

The Church of St. Mark, Myddelton-square, has been recently undergoing a process of renovation, which was very much needed, to adapt it to the wants of the parish, and which has cost the friends of St. Mark's upwards of £1000.

On Sunday afternoon Canon Liddon, in concluding an eloquent sermon at St. Paul's, made a brief reference to the losses of eminent men which have been sustained not only by England, but by Europe, during the past year, and which he brought forward as an appropriate illustration of the truth of his text, that man's life was, at the best, but transitory—that he faded away like the grass.

The Earl of Devon has written a letter condemning the prosecution of the Dean and Chapter in respect of the reredos in process of completion in Exeter Cathedral, remarking that it appears to him worthy to fill the most important place in the great work of restoration in the cathedral, and suggesting that a subscription be opened to defray the expenses of the Dean and Chapter in defending themselves.

The committee of the Society of Schoolmasters, of which the Archbishop of Canterbury is president, has this winter granted assistance to distressed masters of endowed proprietary and boarding schools, their widows and orphans, to the amount of £252, in sums of £30, £20, £15, and £10, according to the circumstances of each case; and no deserving applicant has failed to obtain relief. The grants are strictly private, and are administered with the most delicate consideration for the feelings of the recipients.

On Thursday morning the Bishop of London consecrated the new parish church of St. Mark, East-street, Walworth, in the presence of a large assembly. The site, which has been presented, is valued at £1500, and the building itself has cost £4778. It is to accommodate 659 persons—£300 is still required to complete the structure. The district, which contains 7000 souls, has lately become an ecclesiastical parish, and has been endowed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with £200 a year, and upon the consecration a further endowment of £100 per annum and £1500 for a parsonage will be granted.

Last week the Bishop of Gloucester reopened the church of Bourton-on-the-Water. At a subsequent luncheon speeches were made by the Bishop, the Archdeacon, Sir Thomas Bazley, M.P., the Rector, the Rural Dean (Hon. H. P. Cholmondeley), the Revs. E. F. and Broome Witte, and by Mr. Moore, the churchwarden. The original church consisted of chancel, central tower, nave, and south chantry. All but the chancel was pulled down ninety years ago, and a miserable building was put up in its stead. Through the unwearied exertions of the Rector, however, it has been restored. The unseemly gallery and fittings of the present building have been removed, and replaced by benches of good and plain design, intended eventually for the new church, which it is intended as soon as possible to build. The works have been under the direction of Mr. T. G. Jackson.

The chancel of Sympson church, Bucks, was lately reopened, after thorough restoration by Mr. Augustus Brown. The ceiling and square east window have been removed, and a paneled roof, handsomely decorated, and a three-light window, filled with cathedral glass, relieved by neat designs in coloured glass, have been substituted. The chancel has been laid with Staffordshire, the sanctuary with Minton, tiles; handsomely carved oak altar, sedilia, and choir seats have been provided. Major W. E. Hamner, of Stockgrove, has borne the whole expense of the above. At the same time, the north and south transepts have been restored by Miss Bidwell, sister of the Rev. G. S. Bidwell, Rector. A handsomely carved oak pulpit and reading-desk have been provided by funds contributed by the relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Bidwell; and the parishioners and some other friends have repaired the arch leading from the nave to the central tower, which was in a very dangerous state.

The Bishop of Winchester paid his first official visit to Southampton on Tuesday week for the purpose of consecrating a chancel and vestry which has been added to the Church of St. Luke. There was a large gathering of the clergy of the neighbourhood. The works consist of a chancel 33 ft. long by 23 ft. broad, built of Portland stone, and a chamber for organ and vestry about 20 ft. square. The whole of the fittings are of wainscot oak. The brass altar rails, a gift, are very massive and handsome, the twisted pillars branching off on both sides into passion flowers. In harmony with these are two large brass standards with which the chancel is lighted. The east window is a triple lancet, supported by red granite shafts tied in by brass bands. This has been filled with stained glass by Messrs. Hardman, a gift from Mr. J. Bernard in memory of his only child, who was drowned in Southampton Water about sixteen months ago. The Guardian states that the result of the whole alterations, which have been in the hands of Mr. St. Aubyn, has been to transform a structure, which was before painfully cold and unecclesiastical, into a modern and almost beautiful church.

Mr. Henry Nettleship, Fellow of Corpus Christi, has been appointed Classical Lecturer at Christ Church.

On Christmas Day the University sermon was preached in the cathedral, Christ Church, by the Rev. R. G. Faussett; and, in addition to the full choral service with the sermon, a second and equally impressive celebration was held in the afternoon, when there was a very large attendance. At Magdalen and New there were also full musical services, both in the morning and evening, which attracted large congregations; while at the numerous churches with which the city abounds the day was solemnised in the most appropriate manner, the decorations at many places of worship being of the most elegant kind. The annual custom of serving up a boar's head in the hall of Queen's was duly observed in the evening. The monster head, weighing upwards of 60 lb., was bedecked with bays, rosemary, laurels, holly, and mistletoe, and was served up on a massive silver dish, surmounted with flags and a gilt crown, and was borne on the shoulders of two of the attendants, who were preceded by the Rev. Sackett Hope, who sang the solo part of the Boar's Head song, the college choir and singing-men joining in the chorus. The custom of serving up the boar's head at Queen's has been observed for about 500 years, one authority quoting 1350 as being the probable year of the first festival; but its origin is somewhat obscure. The ceremony attracted an unusual number of visitors, many being unable to gain admission to the college hall.

At the last Previous Examination, or "Little Go," one of the students of the Ladies' College at Gorton, near Cambridge, passed the examination in such a manner as to deserve a first-class. Another student passed the additional subjects, which embrace mechanics, trigonometry, and algebra.

Dr. Hayman, it is stated, has given notice to the Governors of Rugby School that he intends moving the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus, or seeking such other remedy as the law may afford, for what he holds to be his wrongful dismissal.

The Rev. W. P. Robinson, Head Master of Foyle College, Londonderry, has been appointed Warden of Trinity College, Glenalmond. The Rev. Dr. Thornton, on resigning the wardenship of this college, has received from the students in the theological department who are in college, and those who have been under his care, some silver plate, and a copy of Dr. Pusey's "Daniel;" and from the boys of Trinity College, a silver epergne.

Mr. W. M. Furneaux, one of the masters of Clifton College, has been appointed a sixth-form master at Marlborough College. Mr. Furneaux, who was educated at Marlborough, was a scholar of Corpus College, Oxford, where he gained a classical first-class both in moderations and final examination.

The Rev. George Musgrave, of Borden Hall, has founded in perpetuity a yearly gift of two silver medals to the Clergy Orphan School at Canterbury, for the two best essays penned, in the presence of the prepositors, on a thesis, intended to elicit extensive acquaintance with the truths of Divine revelation; the text-books for such reading being "Pearson on the Creed," "Butler's Analogy," and "Paley's Evidences."

The Christmas distribution of prizes at Newton Abbot College took place on the 22nd ult., in the presence of a numerous gathering of ladies and gentlemen. The Earl of Devon, president of the council, occupied the chair.

The Rev. Dr. Stantial has been presented with a massive silver candelabrum by the boys, past and present, of Chatham House School, Ramsgate, on his retirement from the head mastership, which he held for over eleven years.

The clever sketch of a masquerade at the Buddhist Monastery of Hemis, in Ladak, Middle Tibet, which appeared in our last week's paper, was one of those drawn by Captain E. F. Chapman, R.A., who accompanies Mr. Forsyth in the diplomatic mission to Yarkund and Kashgar.

The Board of Trade inquiry into the circumstances attending the collision between, and the loss of, the Lochearn and the French mail-boat Ville du Havre on Nov. 22, commenced on Tuesday, at the Greenwich Police Court, before Mr. Maude, and Captains Harris and Wilson, nautical assessors. Mr. Hamel, in opening the proceedings, said the inquiry was not ordered with a view of finding cause of blame upon any side, but to investigate the facts which led to such a lamentable loss of life, and to prevent, if possible, the recurrence of such a catastrophe. A presentation was made at Bristol, on Monday, to Captain Unquhart and the officers of the American ship Trincomine, in which the eighty-five survivors from the Ville du Havre were brought to this country. The testimonial consisted of a silver salver worth £25, a cheque for a similar amount, and a binocular glass, the total value being about £70. The presentation was made at the Merchant Venturers' Hall by Mr. Powell, the master of that guild.

MARKET. BERLIN.

BY THE WAY.

The rehabilitation of the dodo was to have been one of the topics of the new year. Faith in this strange creature had lingered in some few constant bosoms. One of the most learned of our humourists pathetically sang some years ago—

But don't deny the dodo :
That wounds my very heart.

Still, the majority of us believed in the extinction of the bird, and, moreover, had private doubts as to whether the dingy old picture of it which hung near a window in the old British Museum (we know not where it is now) had not been evolved from the depths of somebody's immoral consciousness. But the other day we were informed that a real live dodo had been captured, and was coming over to be purchased at any price for the Zoological Gardens. The directors of that establishment, though sorrowing in their hearts for the death of Miss Betsy, the interesting but ill-conditioned she-monster rhinoceros, a friend of twenty-four years' grunting, roused themselves for a noble bidding for the stranger. We should see the dodo again. Selecting the morning of the new year for the blow, Professor Owen comes forth with a brief but crushing letter. Something may have been caught, but it is no dodo—only a dodlet. He knows all about the animal. The word has gone forth.

Philosophy would clip an angel's wings :

and we cannot expect her to be more merciful to those of a dodo. But we should like to hear the other poet on the subject, which might support a threnody worth the listing.

Every reader of books will rejoice that the German Emperor has conferred upon Mr. Thomas Carlyle the Order of Merit vacant by the death of Manzoni. Any honour to the philosopher of Chelsea will delight the intelligent part of his countrymen, if not the class he has described as "mostly fools;" but it is especially right that he should receive this distinction from Germany. His whole life has been passed in making us English better acquainted with German literature and with the German nature, of which the former, in all its completeness and thoroughness, is the genuine outcrop. Mr. Carlyle's criticisms, in days long gone by, introduced thousands, and in the directest manner, to Goethe and Schiller, and Jean Paul and other illustrious; and in many of his more original essays he was palpably teaching us Germanism without professing to do so. Then, in later life, came his grand History of Frederick the Great, for which Prussia owes him a debt that can hardly be said to be liquidated by the bestowal even of the honourable decoration just conferred. He has been the interpreter between us and our kinsfolk, and has undeniably brought us closer together by his practical insistence upon the Scots maxim that blood is thicker than water. With sincerest pleasure we record the gift of this Order.

Heroism in humble life is, we fear, growing scarcer and scarcer. The many now adopt the wise course proposed by a soldier in one of the comedies—"Right, Jack, we'll argue in platoons." Therefore, when we read of some instance of individual exertion, or even of self-denial—as when an artisan insulted by a remonstrant wife nobly abstains from knocking her down and stamping on her—a sensation of pleasure passes through our frame, and we enthusiastically ask, with a great man, "Are they not our own flesh and blood?" So we felt, the other day, when reading that a brave young servant-girl in a country house had been stricken down by a burglar, from whose hands she had been devotedly trying to save a valuable article belonging to her mistress. The ruffian had felled her as she clasped the silver plate, and had escaped, leaving marks of blood on the window-sill. Testimonials and subscriptions instantly poured in from admiring employers of labour, and even Christmas extortions did not tend to close the hand of the liberal that maketh rich. We suppose that the flow of gold had ceased; or shall we be more charitable, and say that some importers have less brass and power of endurance than others. This girl might have gone through life with her laurels on her chignon; and, even had her story been doubted by a few sceptics, the many would have long credited it. Alas! that one who was so strong to invent has been so weak to persist! The heroine of domestic life has admitted that there was no burglar at all, that the story was of her own creation, the proofs were of her own furnishing, and that, on the whole, she would like the tale to be forgotten and herself to be forgiven. We would intercede for her but for the shock she has caused to those who are only too generously-eager to believe in kitchen heroines.

The theatres are now in full swing, to use a colloquialism pardonable at pantomime time, and though "there are degrees"—as was unkindly said by a Judge to a notorious French author who claimed to be of the same calling as Racine—we suppose that the entertainments of the season are of average goodness, and at all events quite good enough for the non-critical audiences of the present day. They are excellent judges of scenery and of costumes, and are almost as gifted as the ordinary butcher boy in selecting the taking melody from a batch of tunes. Beyond this the persons that fill the theatres do not go, and the extraordinary applause which they lavish upon what is either old, or bad, or both, might be called ridiculous, if it were not improper to think of erring fellow-creatures except with pity. But there is one thing which ought to be pointed out. As soon as a piece is established in popular favour, and it must be either very atrocious or very intellectual not to obtain that distinction, it is launched for as long a term as possible. One hundred nights are nothing, a couple of seasons is something, but pieces have run longer still. We have not a word to say against managers for this. They keep shops, and so long as the public will come in and buy, it would be Quixotic, not to say impertinent, to alter arrangements. It is hard, however, upon the artists, who have no chance of improving themselves, and who must become weary and sick of the monotony; but then, if the public do not demand better acting, it would be absurd to strive for it. The tragedian who, for Othello, blacked himself all over that he might enter the deeper into the spirit of the part, was considered over-zealous. On this we say nothing. But we owe, on the part of the Londoner, a word of acknowledgment to the manager who is good enough to remember that a London audience need not be entirely made up of Philistines and railway travellers, and that there are some educated folk in town who like to go to the play, but who will not attend to see the same pieces a dozen times. We say a special word for the Gaiety, whose director changes his bill incessantly, and is rewarded by the attendance of the best class of spectators. We forestall the taunt that one person's money is as good as anybody else's. In the case of a person who moves in society, and whose good opinion of a piece sends twenty others to see it, his money is worth twenty times as much as that of a stupid nobody whom no one would consult about anything. The Gaiety finds its reward; and its rapid production of the old comedies and other works is exceedingly creditable to Mr. Hollingshead. That the art of comedy acting does not greatly flourish among us is not his fault; he does the best in his power, and some of it is very good indeed. We have long owed him acknowledgments of his recognition of the fact that there are such people as cultured Londoners.

A CHRISTMAS MARKET IN BERLIN.

This market is for the sale of toys to amuse the children, or to hang upon the boughs of the illuminated Christmas-tree. Dolls for the little girls, soldiers in Prussian or French uniforms for the little boys, animals of different kinds, enough to stock a Noah's Ark, drums and trumpets, spring-guns and tin-bladed sabres, with a variety of other playthings, here tempt the youthful fancy to a fierce desire of possession. The Christmas-tree itself is here to be bought; in some instances, we see, it appears reduced to a mere stand or stool, covered with evergreen foliage and furnished with numerous hooks to hold up the gifts of the bounteous festival. The little dog barks with delight, as the little children crow or shout, amidst the joyful bustle of the juvenile pleasure-fair. We are glad also to see, among the elder customers, a few burly and bearded heroes of the late war. Three years ago, on the same day of the year, they were at the siege of Paris.

FINE ARTS.

The historical portrait-picture by Mr. Rudolf Lehmann, designed to commemorate the ratification of the Persian concession to Baron Julius de Reuter, is completed, and the picture has just been placed in Baron de Reuter's gallery. This large portrait composition presents unusual claims upon attention, if regarded solely from an art point of view, without reference to the certainly peculiar interest and importance of the event it memorialises. But the act of formally resigning for many years great part of the whole resources of a once mighty and rich Asiatic empire, for exploitation by a representative of modern European capital, enterprise, and civilisation, is surely an event which addresses itself so picturesquely to the imagination that it should also afford some scope for artistic celebration, if only by bringing into juxtaposition and contrast the chief actors of East and West who effected such a gigantic transaction. A rumour was, by-the-way, put afloat some time back to the effect that the Persian concession to Baron de Reuter had been withdrawn, but the rumour has been officially contradicted as devoid of all foundation; on the contrary, the Baron has, we understand, already made an energetic commencement of the great enterprise, in which he must, of course, expect to have, like M. de Lesseps before him, to contend against many sinister reports and unfavourable prognostics. We have, however, in this column, not to do with the political bearing of the concession, but with its pictorial memorial. The picture represents an apartment of the Persian Embassy, with about a dozen life-size full-length portraits of the chief contracting parties, mostly grouped around a table spread with papers, a map of Persia, a despatch-box, &c. A painting of the Shah hangs against the wall, forming an apex to the composition. The deed of the concession is being read before the witnesses. Baron de Reuter sits thoughtfully at the table to the left, holding a pen in readiness to sign the document. His son, Mr. Herbert Reuter (a youth near manhood, to whom, in the course of nature, the concession must descend), stoops over the father's chair, intently following the reading of the deed. On the same side are Baron von Donop, M. Cotte (Baron de Reuter's agent in Persia), and Mr. Lynch, now the Persian Consul-General here, who spent fifteen years in Persia and neighbouring countries, who started his own steamers on the Euphrates (since managed by a company), and who was with Mr. Layard during his researches, and brought home the Assyrian antiquities in one of his ships. On the other side are the Persian Minister, Mohsen Khan, since transferred to Constantinople; General Mahomed Aga, brother of the Minister who now supervises the projected works in Persia, acting as Minister of Works, both to the Shah and Baron de Reuter; and General Neriman Khan, Aide-de-Camp of the Shah. There are also two Secretaries of Legation, and behind all the artist has introduced a portrait of himself—following the example of many other painters of historical portrait pictures. As in all good portraiture, the fidelity of the portraits throughout is self-evident: the Oriental character of the Persians in particular is most felicitously caught. The tone is subdued, the colouring generally, if not entirely, harmonious, and the effect is broad, the light being skilfully concentrated on the heads of the principal figures without apparent artifice. Above all we must praise the natural, unstudied, grouping—the spectator feels that the ceremony is presented precisely as it may have occurred, and the figures are quite free from the stiffness and self-consciousness which ruin nearly all similar works. The finished excellence of Mr. R. Lehmann's single-figure portraits is well known; but he has here brought to bear the knowledge acquired from a thorough artistic training, combined with the fruits of long experience as a painter of foreign-life and fancy subjects. The work belongs to a class not often attempted in our school, and very rarely with any measure of success. We have had pictures of hunting meets, of the House of Commons, of Royal marriages, and other State ceremonials, by Sir Francis Grant, Messrs. Leslie, Philip, Frith, and others; but the portraits in these have been on a small scale. Very seldom, indeed, have we seen in recent English exhibitions even a passable picture with several portraits on the scale of nature. We hope, therefore, that Baron de Reuter will allow this really creditable example of the neglected art of historical portraiture to appear at the next exhibition of the Royal Academy. The public taste is shamefully abused by the ordinary run of "portrait pictures," which are painted merely to the order of a speculative print-publisher, and often are no better than, or not nearly as good as, so many coloured photographs stuck together without taste or judgment.

The private view of the exhibition of the works of the late Sir Edwin Landseer, at the Royal Academy, takes place to-day. The exhibition will be open to the public on Monday next.

M. N. Chevalier has been commissioned by her Majesty, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Edinburgh, to proceed to St. Petersburg, to execute sketches of the ceremonies at the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh and the Archduchess Marie, and of the spectacles of interest in connection therewith. It may be remembered that M. Chevalier was also commissioned by the Queen to execute pictures of the interior of St. Paul's and of the procession on the occasion of the thanksgiving for the recovery of the Prince of Wales.

Her Majesty has graciously consented to lend nine pictures by Wilkie—"The Blindman's Buff," "The Penny Wedding," "The Siege of Saragossa," "The Guerrillas' Departure," "Guerrillas' Return," "Guerrillas' Council," and others—to the Art-Instruction Department of the International Exhibition of 1874.

The financial success of the fine-art exhibition in Dundee has been so considerable that the free library committee have authorised the conveners of the exhibition committees to expend £300 on the purchase of pictures towards the formation of a permanent art-gallery in Dundee.

Mr. Newton, of the British Museum, sailed from Marseilles on the 12th ult., on his way to Troy, to inspect the objects dug up by Professor Schliemann, which the Professor believes include the treasures of King Priam.

M. Charles Blanc has been removed by the French Government from his post as Director of the Fine Arts, which he had held since the fall of the Empire; and is, it is said, to be succeeded by the Marquis de Chennevières. M. C. Blanc is an avowed Republican, and a brother of M. Louis Blanc, the Republican historian; but if these facts could furnish sufficient reasons for his removal there can be no others.

Vice-Admiral P. Ryder, chairman of the Captain memorial committee, has favoured us with photographs of the design for the window in the north transept of Westminster Abbey to commemorate the lamentable loss of "H.M.S. Captain, on Sept. 7, 1870, when Captain Hugh Burgoyne, V.C., Captain Cowper Coles, C.B., with 49 officers and 402 men and boys, perished off Cape Finisterre in the service of their country." These are the words of the inscription, on brass, beneath the window in the Abbey. The names of the lost are recorded on memorial brasses in St. Paul's, the designs for which, as well as for the window, were made by Messrs. Clayton and Bell. The following subjects are represented on the window:—The Sea giving up its Dead, Building the Ark, The Passage through the Red Sea, The Fleet of Solomon, Building the Ships of Tyre, Jonah Delivered from the Whale, Christ Stilling the Tempest, Christ Walking on the Sea, Christ Teaching from the Ship, The Miraculous Draught, and the Shipwreck of St. Paul.

THE MAGAZINES FOR JANUARY.

In the Cornhill we have to note the conclusion of "Zelda's Fortune," and the commencement of a new serial fiction, entitled "Far From the Madding Crowd," relating, as its name imports, principally to rural life. The most prominent characteristic of this story is, so far, its extreme minuteness of detail, evincing carefulness of composition rather than the glow of inspiration, and challenging respect rather than sympathy. The slapdash execution of "Young Brown" appeals to neither sentiment. In the present instalment the scene is transferred to India, and the action is prosecuted among the incidents of the mutiny, with which the writer has so little acquaintance that he is glad to eke out the details of an Indian battle-piece by borrowing from the history of the Crimean campaign. The real attraction of the story, for readers who find such things attractive, consists in its unsparing personality. Far different in spirit is the elegant tribute rendered by Miss Thackeray to Landseer—adding, indeed, little to our knowledge of the painter, but conferring a grace even on insignificant details by delicacy of treatment and kindness of feeling. The most intrinsically valuable part of the essay is a selection from Landseer's correspondence, very characteristic of the simplicity which Landseer shared in common with so many great artists. Mrs. Webster's poetical address to the swallows, if somewhat academical in composition, is dignified and harmonious. Mr. Ralston's South Siberian stories are a very interesting contribution to the popular mythology of the Turanian race. While the groundwork is the same as that of similar legends everywhere, there is a noticeable want of fancy and sentiment, and a perceptible infusion of elements derived from the more civilised nations with whom the Siberian Tartars have from time to time been brought into contact.

The current number of Blackwood witnesses the conclusion (practically complete, though fragmentary in form) of Lord Lytton's brilliant, sagacious, and worldly "Parisians"—a work which deserves remembrance as the nearest approach to a disclosure of the genuine nature of a most accomplished actor in the world of letters. "The Story of Valentine" is well written, but not particularly interesting. "Forms" contains some amusing examples of the flowers of Oriental diplomatic style. The regular monthly assault on the Government is chiefly remarkable for affording symptoms of a disposition to be reconciled to Mr. Disraeli, whose offences are, apparently, held to be expiated by the cheers of a Scotch crowd. The reviewer of Mill's autobiography harps mainly on the author's education, which he maintains to have unfitted him for sympathy with ordinary men and the conduct of practical affairs. This being the case, we should very much like to know how he happened to be so frequently in the right when differing from Blackwood on propositions admitting of the test of actual experiment. If our contemporary will re-peruse his own lucubrations on the American Civil War, and compare them with Mill's splendid essay in Fraser, he will, with his present lights, be at no loss to determine which side excelled in political wisdom.

There is nothing very original in Mr. Morley's review of Mill's autobiography in the Fortnightly, which, however, deserves the praise of being a clear and just delineation of the philosopher's intellectual character, dwelling more especially on those very points of candour, impartiality, and circumspection, the imitation of which is principally to be recommended to the eloquent but frequently prejudiced and passionate writer of the notice. Mr. Bowen-Graves indites an apology for a very different person—Marat. The obloquy due to this remarkable man has probably been exaggerated, and it is impossible to refuse him the credit of sagacity, spirit, and consistency. But the crime of having systematically familiarised the public mind with the idea of wholesale slaughter on political grounds is inexorable. Viscount Amberley has been among the Spiritualists, not without justification, for really the imbecility of his entertainers must have been witnessed to have been believed. Examining "the effect of increased wealth on wages," Mr. Fawcett arrives at the discouraging conclusion that it has hitherto been very slight. The causes he considers to be "the increase in population, the displacement of labour by machinery, and the export of capital."

The most important paper in Fraser is one on the recent Home Rule conference in Dublin, pointing out that the moderation assumed to recommend the measure to the people of England is the very feature which renders it indifferent to the people of Ireland. Mr. T. G. Bowles labours to prove the Ashantee war unnecessary and unjust, but seems only to establish that it would have been so if our treaty with the Dutch had never been made. A vindication of Archbishop Laud against Macaulay's disparaging strictures certainly seems to prove that the latter must be classed among the ill-considered deliverances of an historian always prone to sweeping judgments, and especially embittered against the ecclesiastical who had forced episcopacy upon Scotland. It must be owned that in proportion as Laud becomes respectable he becomes odious. Mr. Baring Gould contributes another curious elucidation of obscure ecclesiastical history in his paper on the Milanese Patarines of the eleventh century, a remnant of the Manichaeans, who suddenly found themselves patronised by the higher ecclesiastics on account of their opposition to the marriage of the clergy. Nothing more dismal and revolting than the religious struggles of that age can well be conceived. "An Artist's Dream" is a very pretty vision of the world of art-criticism, with, as the awakened dreamer observes, "a good deal of truth in it." There is a capital hit at the "school" who choose to employ technical musical terms to convey their ideas about painting, in which they display about as much sense as would a musician who spoke of the middle distance of a sonata.

Macmillan begins with the new year the publication of a series of reminiscences of Mendelssohn, by his intimate friend the eminent composer Ferdinand Hiller. There is nothing of surpassing interest in the first instalment, but the subject is ever fresh and ever welcome. The Ashantee campaign has suggested the communication of some of Sir Samuel Baker's experience of "savage warfare" in Africa, the substance of which is decidedly encouraging. "Little Jack," by Frances Martin, is a simple and pathetic tale; and the exposition of the game of ombre, as played in the "Rape of the Lock," will provide entertainment for many New-Year circles. The paper on national education seems designed to prove that denationalists can be fully as unreasonable as secularists. The cool proposition for the repeal of the Cowper-Temple clause, thus permitting creeds and catechisms to be taught in board schools, needs only to be named to be scouted in the present condition of public opinion. It might assume an unpleasantly practical shape in the event of the Conservatives coming into office with a strong majority. "Expectancy," a descriptive sonnet in blank verse, is exquisite in feeling; and, save for a tendency to lapse into rhyme, is modulated with a skill not unworthy of Mr. Tennyson.

The Contemporary has a long roll of interesting contributions. Mr. Fitzjames Stephens's discussion of the elements of the English Constitution conducts to the really valuable suggestion of a decided improvement of the status and emoluments of the permanent Civil Service. The writer has evidently profited largely by his Indian experience. Still greater interest attaches to a paper, by Sir Henry Thompson, on the disposal of the body after death, cremation being recommended in lieu of inhumation. The sanitary advantages of the proposal are obvious; but, as Sir H. Thompson foresees, the force of custom will long operate to prevent its being carried into operation. Mr. A. S. Murray forcibly and ingeniously contends for the antiquity of the Homeric poems on the ground of the perfect agreement of the references to art contained in them with all we know of the condition of the arts at the period to which they are traditionally ascribed. Many interesting affinities are noted between the Assyrian reliefs and the design of the shield of Achilles. The Rev. James Davies contributes a valuable study of the works of a remarkable writer, the late authoress of "Paul Ferroll." Readers who find Mrs. Browning's correspondence with Mr. R. H. Horne disappointing may safely impute the fault to their inability to take an interest in the concerns of a small literary coterie. Mrs. Browning's observations on matters of deeper interest are worth having, but these have not, so far, been very numerous.

Temple Bar will be principally read for the continuation of Major Melville's "Uncle John;" but there are other good contributions, especially the first instalment of an able paper on Chateaubriand. The Argosy is exceedingly readable; but London Society has not for the present gained in brilliancy by its change of publishers. Saint Pauls produces a new and promising fiction by John Saunders, a wildly-picturesque poem by George Macdonald, tales from the Russian of Pushkin, and a good collection of miscellaneous articles after its usual pattern. The most interesting among the appropriations of the Transatlantic is the sequel of Mr. Welles's defence of President Lincoln, with its revelations of the jarrings in the Washington Cabinet during the early days of the civil war. The Popular Science Review has an able plea for Darwinism by Mrs. Stebbing, an important article on the geology of London, by Mr. Horace Woodward, and other valuable scientific contributions. It is difficult to say anything of the Monthly Packet, the Leisure Hour, and the Sunday at Home, except that they are all well adapted to their especial public.

The new volume of the Gentleman's Magazine holds out the promise of several novel features, one of which is already presented in Mr. Francillon's fiction, "Olympia." In this the author of "Earl's Den" appears to have recovered his force and freshness; the incidents are interesting, without being melodramatic, and the style, without over-elaboration, is polished and terse. "Clytie" is spoiled, for our taste, by its undisguised personality; the hashing up of painfully notorious law cases to amuse the readers of fiction is equally an offence against art and manners. Mr. Sala's "Home of the Czarevna" is a good specimen of the better class of his descriptive papers. Tinsley makes a bold bid for popularity with three new novels at once. Two of these, Mr. Farjeon's "Jessie Trim" and Mr. Justin McCarthy's fiction, promise to prove excellent representatives of the class of fiction which deals with the sensational, yet not unreal, aspects of modern life. We can discover nothing specially worthy of note in Belgravia; nor is the Atlantic Monthly so noteworthy as usual. "Gunnar," however, continues as interesting as ever; Mr. Disraeli has found an enthusiastic admirer in Mr. Jennings; and Miss Zina Pierce describes "the externals of Washington" in a manner so convince us that, as regards purity of municipal administration, that capital has little call to look down upon New York. The most important contribution to Scribner's Monthly is the sequel of the interesting paper on the present condition of Louisiana. The illustrative woodcuts are really exquisite. The Saint James's Magazine has a good story by Mrs. Townshend Mayer, "Three Times;" another by Miss Meteyard, "The Hall of Perfumes;" and a very pretty little poem by Miss Julia Goddard. Good Words is signalled by the commencement of "My Mother and I," a new serial story by the authoress of "John Halifax," belonging to the thoroughly domestic class of fiction, to which her powers have recently been confined. Two fresh series of papers of much interest are also commenced in Mr. Augustus Hare's "Days near Rome," and Professor Wyville Thomson's letters from the expedition of the Challenger; and there are pleasing poetical contributions from Mrs. Craik, Miss Betham-Edwards, and Mr. F. Locker. The Sunday Magazine and Golden Hours present no especial features, but may be described as creditable productions on the model of Good Words, and, like it, adapted for a numerous public. Town and Country and the Churing Cross Magazine are new adventures—neither, we fear, destined to be prosecuted for very long.

The Corporation of Glasgow are to entertain Sir Bartle Frere to luncheon on his arrival in the city next week.

A discussion took place in the Aberdeen Town Council, on Monday, as to whether there should be a public display of fireworks at the expense of the Corporation on the occasion of the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh to the Grand Duchess of Russia. On a division it was resolved, by sixteen to eight votes, to expend £150.

By direction of the Master of the Mint, a circular has been issued to bankers asking for information upon the following questions:—Whether florins only should be continued to be coined, and half-crowns gradually withdrawn from circulation; whether half-crowns only should be issued, with a view to the eventual withdrawal of the florin; or whether it was desirable to issue both coins concurrently. The circular states that the number of florins in circulation is 41,500,000, and of half-crowns 36,800,000.

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

The Court reassembled, on Monday, after the Christmas vacation. Before Dr. Kenely resumed his speech for the defence, he alluded to the desire expressed by the Lord Chief Justice at the last adjournment—viz., that the learned counsel would be enabled to finish his observations within a working week. Dr. Kenely assured the Judges that, while he would use every reasonable means to confine his remarks within proper limits, it was impossible for him to pledge himself to six or any other number of days. The Lord Chief Justice said the Court would exercise its discretion. A good deal of time had been wasted in dealing with trifling topics, but, as long as the learned counsel dealt with important facts and material issues, there would be no disposition to curtail or abridge his address. After some further discussion on this point, Dr. Kenely continued his speech, returning to the Wapping witnesses for the Crown, who, he contended, had no sufficient opportunities of knowing Arthur Orton, and ought not, therefore, to be relied upon by the jury. He also argued that the evidence of Donna Maria Hayley, of Melipilla, who recognised the defendant as Orton, had been coloured by the handsome sum she had received from the prosecution, and was in other respects unsatisfactory. The learned counsel then dealt with the other witnesses called to support the Orton theory; in most instances quoting their evidence, and pointing out where it was open to doubt or suspicion. Passing next to Mr. Purcell, he said he did not say anything against that gentleman, as great allowance was to be made for him, as, being a stranger in Melipilla, and knowing hardly anything of Spanish, he was at the mercy of the people by whom he was surrounded, and naturally fell into grievous errors. Regarding the personal appearance of Orton, he reminded the jury that he had produced forty-nine witnesses who deposed to his having high cheek-bones, ears like those of a kangaroo, and bored for earrings, none of which peculiarities were to be found in "our fat friend," as he styled his client.

Most of Tuesday's sitting was occupied with reading tables compiled by Mr. Cooper Wyld, showing how many witnesses had sworn to the extreme size of Orton's hands and feet, his pockmarks, his height, and his slovenly appearance. Dr. Kenely next read abstracts of the evidence of each witness, and illustrated them with running comments. Except one brief remark from Mr. Hawkins, and one or two almost as brief from the Judges, the learned Doctor was uninterrupted during the whole day, save by the somewhat pertinent queries and observations of one or two of the jury, who follow with the closest attention all that is said. The Lord Chief Justice was absent in consequence of a severe cold.

Lord Chief Justice Cockburn was again absent on Wednesday through indisposition. Dr. Kenely continued his speech for the defence, his observations during the greater part of the day being directed to an analysis of what is known as the Orton evidence in this case. Dr. Kenely reverted to the foreman's statement about ear-ring marks being eradicable, when the foreman stated that his own ears had been pierced and showed no marks. In referring to his client the learned counsel instanced his independent treatment of his friends as a proof of patrician recklessness. "Though," exclaimed the Doctor, "I have worked for that man as I should work for my own flesh and blood he has never said 'Thank you!'" "You should take that for granted," interposed the Claimant.

Dr. Kenely began on Thursday by wishing "a happy new year" to all, and to his client "a good deliverance." He then proceeded to deal with the evidence of the witnesses who identified the defendant as the person they knew in Australia as Castro; and at the end of his summary claimed an absolute victory for the defendant, as a matter of right, upon the Orton theory, against which, he said, the testimony was as overwhelming as the waves of the Atlantic. Next he criticised the French witnesses. Passing on to the Stonyhurst witnesses for the Crown, he generally argued that it could not be relied on as telling against the identity of the defendant with Roger Tichborne. The family and military evidence was then reached, and the remainder of the sitting was chiefly occupied by comments on the Irish evidence. The Lord Chief Justice took his seat on the bench shortly after eleven o'clock.

Two hundred and fifty pounds damages have been granted in the Greenock Sheriff's Court, in the action by Mr. Andrew Weir against the Caledonian Railway for £1000, as compensation for the death of his wife, killed in the collision at Houston a year ago.

Sir Sydney Waterlow, acting as referee for the Bank of England and the claimants of the rewards offered for the discovery of the bank forgers, has made an apportionment of the sums at issue. The chief recipient is Miss Green, the private hotel-keeper, in St. James's-place, who gets £250 on account of George Bidwell, and £200 for Macdonnell. Mr. Gardner, the Edinburgh bookseller, receives £150 for George Bidwell; and the other £100 goes to the manager at Parkins and Gotto's. Of the Macdonnell reward Mr. Jesse White gets £150, and the remainder is distributed in sums of £50.

Mr. Ramaden, a coffee merchant, was sued in the Lord Mayor's Court for the maintenance of his wife, from whom he finally separated nine years ago. The lady, who appeared as a witness in the case, gave a romantic account of herself and her antecedents. She was an Italian Jewess, the widow of a physician to the Pacha of Egypt, and had married the defendant at the British Consulate at Cologne. When she first separated from him she set up a lodging-house in Bloomsbury-square. There he rejoined her, and at his instigation she commenced business as a beautifier and rejuvenator of ladies, in the Madame Rachel style. She is now living with the plaintiff, at Forest-hill, a short distance from her husband's house. The jury gave a verdict for the amount claimed.

Remanding a prisoner who was charged with being drunk while in charge of a van, and driving over a foot-passenger, the Lord Mayor observed that the prevalent idea among a certain class of men intrusted with horses is that people attempting to cross a roadway on foot are mere trespassers, but that this fancy is a complete hallucination. In the present case his Lordship declined to take bail.

At the Mansion House, on Saturday, William Henry Blackburn, formerly a clerk in the telegraph department of the Manchester Post Office, was further examined on a charge of having made a false declaration in applying for a commutation of his pension. He was committed for trial; and the Lord Mayor consented to take bail.

George Herzfeld was charged at the Mansion House, on Saturday, with embezzling over £900 of the moneys of his employer, Mr. Holthaus, of Rousdorf, in Prussia. One Mendel Wertheim, not in custody, is implicated in the same charge, he having been engaged by Mr. Holthaus as his London agent and Herzfeld as traveller. Subsequently the two had commenced trading in their own names, and had paid cheques belonging to Mr. Holthaus into their own account. He was remanded.

Alderman Besley had before him at Guildhall, on Tuesday, a shoemaker named Michael Hill, who, though extremely poor—and, indeed, homeless—seems to take a warm interest in theological controversy. An ultra-Protestant, named Stone, who keeps a coffee-shop in Bishopsgate and who labours under the painful impression that there are now "15,000 women in dungeons in England, pining and dying for their liberty," has adorned his windows with certain placards denunciatory of convents, and also highly offensive to the Roman Catholics of the neighbourhood. Of these Hill is one, and he has demonstrated his feelings towards Mr. Stone by breaking his windows. The prisoner was fined 1s. for the offence and £3 for the damage, or, in default, a month's imprisonment, with hard labour.

Abraham Hagetoran, a Dutchman, was charged at Bow-street, on Monday, with embezzling diamonds and other precious stones and jewellery to the amount of £3000, belonging to his partner, Alexander Bernard Roap, diamond merchant, of Clerkenwell. The prisoner entered into partnership with the prosecutor in April, 1872. It was arranged that the former should go to the Cape for three years, accompanied by Mr. Roap, jun., for the purpose of purchasing diamonds. He was to forward them to the prosecutor, who was to remain in London to polish and set the stones. These were then to be sent back to the prisoner at the Cape, where he was to sell them and account for the proceeds to his partner. This was done until last July, when the prisoner sent a letter stating that he was going again to the diamond-fields to try to sell the last two or three consignments of jewellery, but, owing to the slackness of the market, he did not think he should be able to do so profitably. After that nothing more was heard of him until the prosecutor received information that a ship called the Walmer Castle had arrived at Liverpool with the prisoner on board. The prosecutor went to Liverpool with a detective, who arrested the prisoner with two passenger tickets in his possession—one from Havre to New York and the other from Liverpool to New York—both taken in the name of Bernard Harvey. A remand was granted. The prisoner denied the charge entirely.

Mr. Edwin Gillespy Kemp, living at Addison-gardens, South Kensington, was charged, on remand, at Bow-street, on Monday, with forging a deed of conveyance. It is alleged by the prosecution that the prisoner has obtained sums of money on mortgage by producing forged deeds. Evidence having been given to support two charges of this nature, relating to property at Clevedon and Gordan, in Somersetshire, Mr. Flowers committed the prisoner for trial. The prisoner reserved his defence.

M. Julius Mosenthal, a merchant, who was arrested in the Haymarket for brandishing a sword, to the danger of the lieges, when taken to Vine-street police station, demanded medical evidence as to his condition. The doctor who was sent for pronounced him drunk, and the magistrate, being of the same opinion, fined him 6d., plus 7s. 6d. for the doctor's fee.

Mr. Walters, of Red Lion-street, Holborn, has obtained, at Clerkenwell, a magisterial decision adverse to cabmen who charge for conveying more than the number their vehicles are licensed to hold. The principle of the ruling was that even a cabman could not be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong.

For assuming, together with the outward semblance of a gorilla, the playful manners of one, to the great terror of women, children, and nervous people, a soldier, on furlough from the 12th Foot, was brought—in his monkey dress, complete from head to tail—before Mr. Benson, at Southwark, on Saturday last, and was ordered to find security for a month's good behaviour.

In a case of attempted burglary in the Trafalgar-road, which was heard at the Lambeth Police Court on Tuesday, testimony was borne to the courageous conduct of a constable, and he was recommended for a reward.

A servant-girl of the period, who refused to remove a tray, pulled her mistress about by the hair, and slapped a police-constable's face on her way to the station, excused herself before the magistrate at Wandsworth on the ground that a fortnight's previous abstinence had aggravated the effect of her Sunday's beer. She was condemned to a further abstinence of two months, with hard labour.

Four milk-sellers, living at Crouch-end and Hornsey, and whose names were Osborn, Gardener, Thornton, and Walker, were summoned before the Highgate magistrates, on Monday, for selling adulterated milk. Dr. Theophilus Redwood testified that in Osborn's case there was 20 per cent of water, in Gardener's 10 per cent, in Thornton's 12 per cent, in Walker's 24 per cent. In each case the milk was paid for at the rate of 5d. per quart, the full price. The Bench fined Osborn and Gardener £1 and 9s. costs each; Thornton £3 and 9s. costs; and Walker, £2 and 9s. costs.

For knocker-wrenching and lamp-smashing, at Notting-hill, and for resisting the police, Mr. Frank Foster and Captain Courtenay have been fined each £7, besides having had to pay a considerable amount as compensation.

After having received the admiring tributes of many persons, for a supposed act of courageous fidelity, Mary Reeves, a domestic servant in the household of the Rev. William Kendall, of Castle Town, Stafford, has confessed that the burglar who knocked her down three times, and who left a portion of his blood behind him on a window-sill, was a fictitious character, evolved from the depths of her moral consciousness.

A gang of counterfeit coiners was brought up at the Birmingham Police Court on Monday. They all lived together in the Vauxhall-road. The police found three of the prisoners in the garret, polishing counterfeit shillings. The room was fitted up as a workshop, and contained melting ladles, moulds, an electric battery for silvering the coins, and all the tools and requisites for carrying on the manufacture of base coin. A large packet of finished plated shillings was found ready to be circulated. There were moulds for other coins.

More than ordinary brutality having been proved against Christopher Collis, cab proprietor, of William's-mews, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, and Edward West, a driver in his employ, both these persons were, last Saturday, sentenced by Mr. Knox to hard labour for a month.—An inquest is being held at Mile-end on the body of a young carman, who was found on the pavement in Jubilee-street, stabbed through the heart. He had been going home with some companions, when he got into a scuffle with several strangers, who had the appearance of being sailors. One of these was seen to stab him and another youth, who is now in the hospital. Afterwards they ran off, and, though pursued, they escaped. The inquest was adjourned.—An inquest has been held on the young Tipperary farmer, Dwyer, who was savagely slaughtered for attempting to pass along a lane the right of way through which is disputed; and a verdict of "Wilful murder" has been returned against the two brothers Quin.

The revenue tables for the year, and for the quarter ending Dec. 31, were published on Wednesday evening. The total revenue for the year was £77,712,677—a net increase of £23,757.

A JAPANESE DINNER PARTY.

ROYAL ACADEMY GOLD MEDAL GROUP, BY WILLIAM WHITE.

A JAPANESE DINNER PARTY.

The clever artist long resident at Yokohama, Mr. Charles Wirgman, who has so often contributed to this Journal his sketches of Japanese life and manners, writes as follows upon the subject of our illustration:—

"We were asked by some Japanese at Kiyoto to a banquet, followed by a ball. The appointed evening came, and we were ready. Conducted by our hosts, who were most of them dressed in European costume, we were taken to the house called Nakamura, at the top of Gién-street. A row of slippers made of carpet stuff, laid at the entrance-door, showed us that we had to take off our boots. The floor was carpeted, and a table in the European style occupied the centre of the dining-room. The dinner was à la Russe: the European lamps and bouquets of flowers gave a cheerful appearance to the room. But the hosts and native guests were not at first influenced by these enlivening tokens of festivity. They sat down to the magnificent and well-arranged dinner in moody silence. It was in vain that we attempted to cause their grave faces to lighten up with a smile. Even the libations of claret and pale ale failed to produce any effect. They only picked their teeth and looked at their noses. Not the beautiful sucking pig, roasted whole, had charms for them. The turkey, and the 'faisan à la belle alliance,' with new potatoes, did not excite them to expressions of pleasure. The silence was painful, attempts at wit fell dead before such an audience. At length I could stand it no longer, and proposed a smoke. At the bare mention of it their faces lighted up. The conversation so long restrained now found vent, and we were happy. Champagne was proposed, but we all refused to be poisoned by that vile fabrication. Sweets were now served, and the claret was handed round by male servants. It was followed by coffee and liqueurs. Presently I became aware that seated at table with us were some gorgeously-dressed singing and dancing girls; their faces painted ghastly white, their lips green, and their teeth black, they were indeed lovely. The style of dress was quite different from that of the same girls in Jeddo; their language, too, was that of Kiyoto, a soft and beautiful speech, different in accent from that of the provinces near Jeddo. This was very pleasant. The tablecloth was removed, and saki replaced the claret. A new feast was brought in; we pledged each other in tiny porcelain cups, and then the dancing began. Diverse graceful attitudes were assumed by the performers; sometimes all the corps de ballet would join in, at other times one single girl would dance a story to the tune of a song, reciting the story with a guitar accompaniment. Then two very little girls would play, each her two drums, one held on the shoulder and the other in front, on the left side, giving unearthly yells every now and then which were painful to hear. Dance followed dance and song followed song. The girls then asked me to dance; I did so, and great was the delight of the company. The entertainment went on till past twelve, when we bade the girls good-by, leaving them to enjoy their supper. We went home through the now almost deserted street. The bright full moon shining made the town look beautiful. At the corner of the street called Kujamachi we took leave of our hosts, thanking them for a most delightful evening, though it had begun with an hour of dulness."

LIFE ON BOARD A TROOP-SHIP.

The sketches by Major W. O. Carlile, R.A., representing the ordinary scenes and incidents of daily habit among the soldiers of our army, when embarked on their voyage to a distant field of service in foreign or colonial lands, are continued by two more illustrations. They were taken on board H.M.S. Himalaya, a Government troop-ship, and it is not unlikely that the regulations are different in some respects on board a hired transport-vessel. The troops conveyed by the Himalaya upon this occasion were required to work as assistant stokers, bringing the coal from the bunks in a "skid" for the engine fires. Four men were so employed at once, taking their turn during four hours; twelve men were daily told off for the service, and were ranged in three divisions, each working its two four-hour turns, with an interval of eight hours. Their extra pay for this duty is a shilling a day while at sea, ninepence while in harbour. The ship provides them with oatmeal and water, a good and safe thing to drink in a hot climate. The evening amusements on deck, where a large audience is frequently assembled around the foremast to hear the best comic singer in the regimental company, or perhaps a sailor of the ship's crew, who is gifted with the talent of musical mimicry, present a good example of the soldier's life when at sea. An old coat of civilian fashion or livery, a battered old hat and cotton umbrella, breeches or trousers tucked up in a ludicrous manner, with a coloured neckerchief, make up the regular stage attire for one of those droll character songs, which excite much laughter when skilfully performed.

ROYAL ACADEMY GOLD MEDAL GROUP.

To the group we have engraved was awarded the gold medal for sculpture in the recent biennial competition of the students of the Royal Academy. The medal also carried with it a prize in books for the "best composition in sculpture," and a scholarship of £25, to be held for two years. The subject selected by the Academy for competition was, "Ranthea stabs herself over the Dead Body of her husband, Abradates"—the pathetic story told in Xenophon's Cyropædia, book vii., chap. 3. The group was to be in the round, baked or cast in plaster, and to the scale of 3 ft. The reader may form some idea from our Engraving of the symmetrical composition and artistic treatment of the subject. The prize-winner was Mr. William White, a young sculptor of great promise. He was born at Kilburn, in 1845; studied under the eminent sculptor Mr. J. H. Foley, R.A., from 1864 to 1869; entered the Royal Academy in 1866; and carried off the first silver medal in the antique school, and the Restoration Medal in 1869.

CHRISTMAS AT THE MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.

The patients, officers, and servants of the Middlesex Hospital were entertained on Christmas Eve with a pleasant social party, in which there was a Christmas-tree, bearing on its branches a variety of little gifts from ladies who feel an interest in the hospital. A numerous company of friends, both ladies and gentlemen, shared in the seasonable festivity upon this occasion: tea was provided in the board-room. We wish particularly just now to recommend the Middlesex Hospital to public support, which it really wants: the annual subscriptions amount to not more than £2353, while the expenditure has been increased by some necessary works of improvement. The number of inmates received throughout the year is more than 2000, while the out-patients exceed 20,000, suffering from accidents or illnesses of various kinds. There are 310 beds for the accommodation of patients. A special department is that of the female cancer wards, in which thirty-five patients, afflicted with a disease almost hopeless of cure, find either some relief or a permanent refuge. The Middlesex Hospital was first established, in 1745, in Windmill-street, Tottenham-court-road, for sick and lame persons, and for lying-in married women. It was removed, in 1755, to its present site at the top of Berners-street. Since 1807 the midwifery patients, instead of being received as inmates, are attended at their own homes by the medical officers of the hospital, to the number of nearly a thousand yearly. The cancer wards were founded by a gift of £4000 from Mr. Samuel Whitbread, in 1807, to which other gifts and legacies were added. A remarkable incident in the history of the hospital is that in 1793 it became a refuge for many of the French Royalist emigrants driven from France by the Jacobin Reign of Terror. The buildings were enlarged by new wings constructed in 1775, and again in 1834. The late Lord Robert Seymour, a zealous and munificent friend of this institution, obtained for it the Royal patronage of George IV., which is continued by her present Majesty. The medical school, established in 1835, enjoys a high reputation: it is furnished with a museum of valuable collections. The chief physicians are Dr. Henry Thompson, Dr. Greenhow, and Dr. Lavington, with Dr. Hall Davis, physician-accoucheur, and three assistants. The surgeons are Messrs. De Morgan, Nunn, Hulke, and Lawson, with assistants. Mr. R. H. Lucas is the resident medical officer, and Messrs. F. W. Lewis and Hammond Smith are the house surgeons. The remaining staff is numerous and complete, under the direction of an efficient medical committee.

At a meeting of the Brentford board of guardians on Wednesday attention was called to the fact that nearly £14 had been expended in snuff for the inmates of the workhouse during the year. The master was requested to keep his eye on the paupers' boxes to see that none was wasted.

In view of the Ville du Havre disaster, the New York Chamber of Commerce has passed a memorial to be presented to Congress asking that body to take measures for the appointment of an international committee, to be composed of delegates from the maritime nations of Europe and America, whose duty should be to draw up a map upon which the pathways of inward and outward bound ships and steamers shall be marked out so clearly that there shall be no possibility of a collision. The memorial states that the managers of one line have already laid down the tracks which their steamers should follow.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.
A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held, on Thursday, at its house, John-street, Adelphi—Mr. Thomas Chapman, F.R.S., V.P., in the chair. Mr. George Lyall, ex-Governor of the Bank of England, was unanimously elected the deputy chairman of the committee of management, and the Right Hon. Stephen Cave, M.P., one of the trustees of the institution in succession to the late Mr. Thomas Baring, M.P. Mr. Richard Lewis, the secretary, having read the minutes of the previous meeting, rewards amounting to £54 were afterwards voted to the crews of different life-boats of the institution for services rendered during the past month. Various rewards were likewise granted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts; and payments to the amount of £2142 were ordered to be made on different life-boat establishments. Several contributions and legacies were announced. New life-boats have been forwarded by the institution during the past month to Seaton Carew, Durham, and to Skerries, in the county of Dublin. The British and Irish Steam-Packet Company had kindly granted the last-named boat a free conveyance to Dublin. It was decided to form a new life-boat station at Lydd, near Dungeness, not far from where the Northfleet foundered with such a terrible loss of life. The boat is to be named after Mr. David Hulett, of Holborn, who has undertaken to defray the cost of the life-boat establishment. Reports were read from Captain J. R. Ward, R.N., the inspector, and Captain D. Robertson, R.N., the assistant inspector of life-boats to the institution, on their recent visits to the coasts.

"SEASONABLE APPEALS."

To Effie, Alice, Annie, Emily, Augusta, Louisa, Florence, Fanny, Marian, Minnie, Rose, Lillian, May, Georgina, Janet, and Eleanor: Don't flit.
To George, Henry, Arthur, Hubert, Harold, Ernest, Frederick, Philip, Percy, Charles, Claud, Robert, Reginald, and Walter (in jackets): Don't eat too much.
To M.P.s whose misfortune it is to be obliged to address their constituents at this festive season: Don't make too long speeches.
To her Majesty's Ministers, when they assemble again after the holidays: Abolish the income tax, increase salaries, pay off the National Debt, keep up the Army and Navy in the highest state of efficiency, satisfy the licensed victuallers and total abstainers, and please everybody.
To boards, vestries, parochial authorities, and district dignitaries: Try and keep the streets and pavements a little cleaner.
To Ritualists: Don't make yourselves too ridiculous.
To all punsters, jokers, and purveyors of riddles, conundrums, and acrostics: Don't tax the patience and forbearance of your friends too far.
To amateur vocalists of both sexes: The same appeal is addressed to you as to your last-mentioned contemporaries, with this addition: Don't make excuses.
To amateur dramatic performers: Don't be too ambitious; and learn your parts before you appear on the stage of the "Theatre Royal Back Drawing-Room."
To all persons who have received Christmas gratuities: Don't relax in your attention and civility now that Boxing Day is over.
To tradesmen and others: Don't be in a hurry to send in your accounts.

At an early hour on Friday week, at North Shields, the Gipsy Queen, a small steamer with four hands, was taking a number of dredgers to their work, when the steersman ran her on a sunken wreck. She went down in five minutes. All the crew were drowned, as well as fourteen of her forty-two passengers. The scene was a terrible one. The cries of the drowning could be heard for a great distance. A man who was going up the water in a small boat to dredge for coals picked up six men, and the dredgers' boat put off and saved ten. The accident occurred in a lonely part of the river, away from where ships are moored, and there was little chance of help; but it was so sudden that, even if there had been vessels near, they could have rendered little assistance. For five or ten minutes after the accident the boat that had saved six men pulled round the scene of the catastrophe, but, except some loose wood washed off the steam-boat's deck, nothing could be observed. Four of the men who are saved, though they burnt their hands very much by doing so, held by the boat's funnel until they were taken off by the Commissioners' boat; and another man, John Dunn, was rescued by the master's (St. Nay) retriever dog. The dog headed towards the shore, and Dunn clung to it, but so as not to force it under water and drown it, helping it as they went along with his feet—indeed, using the dog as a life-buoy. They were both saved by the dredging-boat. A coroner's jury has returned a verdict that the Gipsy Queen was run on a sunken hopper by bad navigation. Sixteen widows and fifty-six orphans are thrown on the world by this event.

Last week 1702 births and 1540 deaths were registered in London. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births were 352, and the deaths 156, below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The Christmas holidays have doubtless to some extent delayed the registration of both births and deaths. The annual death-rate from all causes, which in the three previous weeks had been equal to 23, 27, and 23 per 1000, declined again last week to 24. The unfavourable effect upon the London mortality exercised by the low temperature and fog which prevailed during the week ending the 14th ult. appears to have passed away. In the large provincial towns, where the same cold weather was unaccompanied by fog, the increase in the mortality was slight compared with that which occurred in London. The 1540 deaths included 2 from smallpox, 107 from measles, 17 from scarlet fever, 3 from diphtheria, 53 from whooping-cough, 28 from different forms of fever, and 7 from diarrhoea. Thus, to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 217 deaths were referred, against numbers increasing from 232 to 314 in the four preceding weeks. These 217 deaths were 71 below the corrected average numbers from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths from measles were again excessive, while the fatal cases of each of the six other zymotic diseases were below the average. The weather was comparatively mild throughout last week, and the mean temperature exceeded the average in each of the seven days; the mean for the week was 42.9 deg., and 5 deg. above the average. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the three previous weeks had been 520, 764, and 1112, declined again last week to 642, and only exceeded the corrected average weekly number by 56. Of these 642 deaths 352 were returned from bronchitis, 138 from phthisis, 87 from pneumonia, and 32 from asthma. To different forms of violence 50 deaths were referred; 44 were the result of negligence or accident, including 16 from fractures and contusions, 5 from burns and scalds, 8 from drowning, and 13 from suffocation, including 12 of infants under one year of age. Five cases of suicide and 1 of infanticide were registered. Five of the deaths from fractures and contusions, resulting from negligence or accident, were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets.—During last week 4250 births and 3556 deaths were registered in London and twenty other large cities and towns of the United Kingdom. The natural increase of population was 721. The mortality from all causes in these towns was at the rate of 25 deaths annually to every 1000 persons living. The annual rate was 20 per 1000 in Edinburgh, 23 in Glasgow, and 17 in Dublin.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Footboards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found divested of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHRISTMAS DINNER GIVEN TO THE NEWSBOYS OF MANCHESTER.

CONFIRMATION BY THE BISHOP OF LONDON AT THE BROMPTON HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION.

NEWSBOYS' DINNER IN MANCHESTER.

The trade of selling newspapers in the streets, which gives employment to so many poor children in the metropolis, has been extended to all the principal towns of the kingdom. In Manchester especially many poor families are partly supported in this way. Boys and girls who were formerly sent out to beg, or perhaps to do worse, now have an opportunity of earning a few shillings a week by the sale of the evening paper. A clever active lad, it is said, can easily manage to keep himself by this employment; the least skilful are enabled to contribute something to the slender gains of the family. The proprietors of the Evening News of Manchester, with whom most of these children deal, have always shown a kindly interest in the welfare of their little customers. Last year they invited the children to a Christmas dinner, and this in its results, immediate and remote, was found to have been the occasion of much practical good. It was therefore arranged to repeat the experiment. The Christmas dinner of 1873 forms the subject of our Illustration. It took place in the spacious hall of the Royal Exchange Restaurant, situated under the fine new building of that name, which now approaches its completion. The Bishop of Manchester and a great number of ladies and gentlemen were present, by invitation. Amongst the company were also the Mayor of Manchester, Mr. Alfred Watkin, and the Mayor of Salford; Mr. David Chadwick, M.P., and other gentlemen of local rank and influence. About 400 boys and girls sat down to dinner. The children were at first a little awed at the sight of the visitors, but soon grew uproariously merry. They were readily hushed to reverential silence when the Bishop said grace. They were then served with a substantial meal of roast beef and plum-pudding; and in the much-needed interval of rest between the beef and the pudding the Bishop made a few practical and rather humorous remarks. It was ascertained, by the old-fashioned expedient of a show of hands, that a large number of the children attended Sunday-school, and that a fair proportion of them knew something of two, at least, of the "three R's." During the dinner the band of the 1st Manchester Rifles played a selection of popular music, and whenever an air struck their fancy the children joined in, keeping excellent time and tune.

THE BROMPTON CONSUMPTION HOSPITAL.

The Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest at Brompton, which was commenced in 1841, and has been established—partly, at least—in its present buildings since 1846, is one of the most important medical charities in London. It has given relief to more than 200,000 patients suffering from the malady which is most fatal to working-class people of this crowded city, and which is the cause of prolonged misery through loss of earnings from interruption of their daily labour. The ordinary number of in-patients is about 200, some of whom remain two months in the hospital; there are above 12,000 out-patients during the year. Additional room has lately been provided by the opening of the south branch building, which enlarges the total space to the accommodation of 247 in-patients. On Tuesday week the beautiful little church or chapel of St. Luke, belonging to this hospital, was the scene of a solemn and touching ceremony. This church was consecrated in the year 1850, and has accommodation for about 200 people. It was founded by the Rev. Sir Henry Foulis, Bart., in memory of his sister, and is cruciform, consisting of a chancel, nave, and transepts. It is seated throughout with carved oak open seats, cushioned for the patients; all the windows are of stained glass, and are either gifts or memorials of benefactors. It is well worth a visit. On the day named the Bishop of London administered the holy rite of confirmation to between thirty and forty candidates, nearly all of whom were patients. The nave of the church, behind the candidates, was filled by the other patients; but room had been provided in the south transept for a few friends and others interested in the hospital. The Bishop was received at the entrance-hall by Mr. T. P. Beckwith, vice-chairman of the committee of management and churchwarden. The Rev. Arthur Brook, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Brompton, officiated as chaplain to the Bishop. The candidates were presented by the Rev. J. Hughes Owen, the chaplain of the hospital; the Rev. E. B. Allen, B.A., for twenty-three years chaplain of the institution, was also present. A peculiar incident of this ceremony was the fact of the Bishop being obliged to confirm, in her own seat, one of the candidates, a young girl, who was too ill to advance to the altar rail, and who was obliged, after the rite, at once to retire, assisted by one of the nurses.

The Standard states that Mr. Gerard Noel has resigned the office of Conservative Whip. It will be remembered that Mr. Noel, at the commencement of the last Session, offered his resignation, but that the leaders of the party prevailed upon him to withdraw it, and that Colonel Taylor kindly came forward to undertake his duties. Mr. Noel, although his health has much improved, does not feel equal to the very hard work of the position, and he has therefore felt it necessary to definitely retire.

The executive committee of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union met at Leamington on Monday. Mr. Arch, the president, was, with three other delegates, appointed to confer with Mr. Walter, M.P., and other influential Berkshire landowners, with a view to arrive at a mutual understanding as to questions respecting agricultural labour in the county. The National Union contemplate the adoption of the co-operative farming principle, and they appointed a committee to examine a Warwickshire farm of 300 acres, on which they hope to try the co-operative system. It was reported that in various districts farmers threatened a reduction of wages, which the union ordered should be resisted.—In the circus at Liverpool, on Tuesday evening, Mr. Arch and Mr. Picard addressed a large meeting on topics of vital interest to agricultural labourers. The first of these speakers objected to strikes, and said he hoped to see the time when they should be accounted things of the past.

Mr. Charles Reed, M.P. for Hackney, chairman of the London School Board, presided, on Monday night, at the annual soirée of the Leeds Young Men's Christian Association, for distributing the prizes to the successful students of the science and art classes. He said that Christian young men had the greatest advantage in pursuing scientific studies, because they were best able to make those researches which were calculated to bring their due reward. Scientific education in this country had been greatly neglected, and they were now paying the cost of generations of neglect. At last, however, the country had awakened to a proper sense of its duty, and had put upon a fair and satisfactory footing, by means of school boards, the elementary education of the rising generation. What was now wanted was that youths should be assisted in acquiring technical education and scientific instruction. These, in his opinion, must, to be successful, be based upon religion and the recognition of the authority of God—without which there could be no solid or lasting knowledge.

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

That which with fear and trembling it may be ventured to call the mania for out-of-Parliament prolixions was never more rampant than lately. Up to the very eve of, and at least in one case the day after, Christmas, members have been addressing, some their constituents, some other audiences. From amongst numerous dissertations a few extracts more or less elegant may be made. Touching on them chronologically, there has been one from Mr. Jacob Bright, who, perhaps, interested if he did not enliven (for enlivening is not his way) a Liberal club at Chorlton. Seemingly as sententious and didactic as ever, he gave out his ideas with no uncertain sound. He professed to discover that municipal and parliamentary elections are fast assimilating—are now nearly equally governed by party considerations; and that the strongest party in the municipalities invariably monopolises offices, with their honours and powers. He appears to think that this is as it should be, and, of course, he is a potential authority. He rejoiced over the success of the ballot, so far as it has quieted elections; but, in an easy, pick-tooth manner, he said that he supposed there is still a good deal of bribery. Stern, ironside politician as he is, even he, by implication, admits that your free and independent Briton still considers a vote a chattel in which he can traffic at his will. With some of the proceedings recently of Parliament he seems puzzled, confessing that in those respects the Legislature was inscrutable. Altogether, we can fancy that he delivered his address with that melancholy manner that generally characterises his elocution.

According to two usually malcontent members of the House, who used to be alternately furious and desponding while Mr. Childers was First Lord of the Admiralty, the interests of the Navy are safe in the hands of Mr. Goschen. Doubtless he won this admission by his having, in dealing with his department, undone most, if not all, that had been done by his predecessor, and impliedly professing that he would be guided by the advice of his naval council. At any rate, by a sage admixture of conciliation and firmness, as far as outward observers can ascertain, he is in a position of as much popularity as a First Lord can hope to attain. A few days ago he made a tactical speech on the new naval volunteer system, at the head of which is Mr. T. Brassey, and which is becoming something more than embryo. In the present Government it is so strange a thing to find any department giving anything except oracular replies to deputations, that Mr. Goschen should promptly set apart a gun-boat for the naval volunteers to drill, on the Thames between the City and Westminster, must have been as much a surprise as a gratification. It may fairly be supposed that by the time the present Ministry breaks up Mr. Goschen will have become a master Minister of Marine.

A somewhat terrible catastrophe has occurred in Edinburgh. In all the pride and consciousness of being a Parliamentary influence and even a power, Mr. M'Laren has appeared before his constituents in the modern Athens. The theme of his speech was one it would have thought likely to catch the sympathies of a Scottish audience, of whom it is supposed that in political as in religious matters they are never so happy as when they are very miserable; for he dwelt emphatically, statistically, and arithmetically on the wrongs of Scotland, especially those wrongs which appeal, so to speak, to the pocket. If we have construed his statements aright, since the time when Scotland annexed England and Ireland, the conquering country has been paying a most undue share of the taxation of the United Kingdom. Those who know Mr. M'Laren's style of rhetoric can well understand how he impressed all this on his hearers with mingled dogma and lachrymoseness, how sage he looked, and with how much humility he exhibited the pride that is in him. Sometimes Scotchmen are merciless; for what he said produced an effect contrary to that which, of course, he expected; for, instead of being borne in triumph on a whirlwind of applause, however it may have been he was speaking, when he concluded, and cast himself upon the sympathy and gratitude of his electors, the response was "a vote of no confidence" in him! Oh, what a falling off was there! How did the mighty collapse! The contemplation is too dreadful. In the meantime, cozy, jog-trot Mr. Miller, the other member for Edinburgh, who does not aspire to genius as a politician, but is an assiduous, watchful member, severely practical, and often suggestive, and who never made a speech a quarter of an hour long in the House, obtained the recognition for his services which they deserved.

Some day in July Mr. Henry Richard, who is or was secretary to the Peace Society, and M.P. for Merthyr-Tydfil, obtained a small majority for a motion of his, which went to ask the sanction of the House that efforts should be made by the Government of this country to induce foreign Powers to assist in the establishment of an international tribunal of arbitration, to which all disputes between the States of the world should be submitted. Considering that the proposal implied the going very far into the millennium, the Ministry might very well have acceded to the motion, which would then have fallen into that limbo in which so many abstract resolutions of the House lie peaceably. But Mr. Gladstone made a temporising speech, and took a division, in which Mr. Richard won. Since then Mr. Richard has been on a pilgrimage through Europe, clucking over the little egg he has laid with all the usual fondness of the parent of a very small production. Last week his momentary abiding-place was Paris, and there he was fortunate enough to get together some seventy Frenchmen who are for peace at any price—a wondrous sight, a curious anomaly! The triumph of the British senator was thought worthy of being celebrated by two orators, who divided the subject between them; and then, with all his blushing honours thick upon him, Mr. Richard presented himself to an audience whose admiration of him must have been very abstract indeed. For, having uttered so much French as enabled him to state that he could not speak the language, he proceeded not to enlighten his audience in English. It would have been just as well if he had addressed it in Welsh, because he would have been equally intelligible, and it would have been a fine opportunity of showing, by sound at least, how copious, how independent of vowels, and how rich the tongue of the ancient Britons is. However, it is not doubtful that what he said in the less liquid and balder English language was forcible and suggestive, and couched in resonant phraseology; for, barring a little drone and a little twang, Mr. Richard is an elocutionist of no common order.

Mr. Walpole, as a military critic, would seem to be oddly placed. But he has been presiding over a volunteer festival, and pronouncing his blessing on the army of England; for, be it understood, almost every sentence he speaks sounds like a blessing, or at least like an extract from a homily. But he went out of his usual line this time in order to censure the Government for having got the country into the Ashantee war. He spoke of it as "a miserable mess." Now, everyone will admit that upon "miserable messes" in administration, and particularly in times of popular tumult, no one is by experience a greater authority than the right honourable gentleman himself.

Although he has not obtained actual prominence in the House, Mr. Illingworth is a personage amongst the independent and very free-and-easy Liberals below the gangway. He seems to have made up his mind very decidedly on every question, and speaks, as it were, from between his clenched teeth on all of them, thus giving an idea of his thoroughness and tenacity of opinion. Though he represents Knaresborough, he is Bradford born and bred, and is, perhaps, acceptable in a meeting, on occasion, to his townsmen, who are of his own political faction, and so he was addressing them a day or two ago. In a dogmatic way he lectured the Government on what they must do peremptorily if they do not mean to break up the Liberal party; which means that the Radicals, who, "uncertain, coy, and hard to please," now, will assuredly desert them altogether, and indirectly, if not by intention, bring in a Conservative Ministry.

MUSIC.

The past week's musical doings have offered but little to call for comment. The last three days of the old year were blanks as regards public music. The first three days of the new year comprised two performances. On the evening of New-Year's Day "The Messiah" was to be given at the Royal Albert Hall, under the direction of Mr. W. Carter, with Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Signor Agnesi as principal vocalists. This (Saturday) afternoon the London Ballad Concerts are to be resumed, with the fourth of the eighth series.

On Monday week the Popular Concerts will recommence, and Dr. Hans von Bulow will reappear as pianist. On the following Saturday the Crystal Palace concerts will be resumed. On Jan. 22 the British Orchestral Society will begin its second season; and on the same evening the sixth subscription concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society will take place. On Jan. 23 Dr. Crotch's oratorio, "Palestine," will be revived by the Sacred Harmonic Society, and the third concert of the Wagner Society will take place.

The competition for the Westmorland Scholarship and the Potter Exhibition was recently held at the Royal Academy of Music, in Tenterden-street, Hanover-square, the examiners having been the Principal (Sir Sterndale Bennett), Mr. F. R. Cox, Mr. H. C. Lunn, Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Mr. Walter Macfarren, and Dr. Steggall. The results were as follow:—Westmorland Scholarship, Miss Emma L. Beasley, re-elected. Five pounds each (from the Academy funds) towards the cost of a year's instruction in the institution, awarded to Miss M. A. Williams, Miss Rhoda E. Barkley, and Miss Henrica van Senden. Potter Exhibition, Mr. Walter Fitton, elected.

THEATRES.

A few particulars yet remain to be related concerning the West-End houses at this festive season—at least, at one of them, the Lyceum, under the indefatigable management of Mr. Bateman. On Friday se'night was here presented, for the first time, a slight piece, derived from the French, entitled "A Husband in Clover." This piece is an adaptation from a lively vaudeville called "Un Mari dans du Coton." Mr. John Clayton supports the part of the husband, one Horace, who grows discontented with his wife (Miss Virginia Francis) because she makes life too pleasant. He desires a change in the even tenor of his happiness, and goes so far as to register in his diary his opinion of his wife as compared with other women. To cure him of this folly she determines to personate other characters, and introduces herself in disguise to him with such skill and effect as to disabuse him of his strange fancies. She brings matters to a climax by pretending jealousy, and so works on his feelings that he is anxious for a reconciliation. The dialogue of this play is smart, and the two characters are exceedingly well acted.

Miss Helen Faucit appeared recently at the Haymarket, in the character of Rosalind, in Shakespeare's "As You Like It." Miss Henrietta Hodson performing Celia, for the benefit of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, which stands in need of assistance, in consequence of the increasing claims made upon its resources. Miss Faucit's representation of Shakespeare's witty heroine is simply exquisite and perfect; nor was she at all inferior to herself on this interesting occasion. The whole of the pit was converted into stalls, and the brilliant audience assembled testified their admiration by repeated plaudits.

CHRISTMAS ENTERTAINMENTS.

NEW GALLERY, ARGYLL-STREET.

Mr. F. C. Burnand has commenced at this place a series of readings from his "Happy Thoughts" and other works. For this purpose he has tastefully decorated the gallery, which was numerously attended on Monday. Mr. Burnand has many qualifications for a public reader, a strong voice and much expressive gesticulation. With him we may now revisit the Frasers at Furze Cottage, and enjoy a trip on board the Sylphide yacht. His impersonation of characters, whether singly or in groups, is strikingly accurate and prodigiously suggestive. We could have dispensed with the incident of the sea-sickness, which has been so frequently described that it presents no novelty to counterweigh its unpleasantness. On the other hand, Mr. Burnand is not afraid to represent himself, as an actor in the scenes he delineates, in many ridiculous phases; and thus involves his own personality in the events of the drama with an air of self-sacrifice which conciliates respect while it secures amusement.

MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS.

A brilliant and crowded audience on Boxing Night in the large hall of St. James's testified to the increasing popularity of this coloured troupe of minstrels. We stated some time since, and we yet hold to the opinion, that the period has arrived when the colouring might be dispensed with, and the singers might appear to greater advantage as Saxon minstrels, without any colour at all. The programme on the occasion referred to included several new songs, of which the palm must be given to "Tis but a little faded flower," composed by J. B. Thomas, and sung with charming effect by Little Willie. Another song by the same composer, "The dew is on the flowers," was admirably rendered by Mr. E. Bruce; while a new ballad, "Robin, say you'll not forget me," received full justice at the hands of Mr. Vernon Reed. As usual, the comic element was not lost sight of in the entertainment, the new ditty, "Glycerina," written by Nelson Leo the younger and sung by Mr. Walter Howard, eliciting much laughter. But the crowning triumph was reserved for Mr. G. W. Moore, in a new comic song, entitled "Before the baby wakes," the leading points of which, especially certain allusions to the Claimant and the approaching Royal marriage, were received with the most unmistakable signs of approbation by the audience. A variety of entertainments followed, amongst which "The Intercommunicable Chorus," a burlesque, written by H. S. Leigh, upon the "Chœur des Incroyables," is deserving of especial commendation.

THE ROYAL POLYTECHNIC.

This institution puts forth many seasonable novelties; amongst them a new pièce de résistance, entitled "Raleigh's Queer Dream," written by Dr. Croft, and read by Mr. Oscar Hartwell. The vocal portion of the performance is ably supported by Messrs. Fuller and Marsden and Misses Kate Brooks, Lillie Burkett, and Westbrook. It is accompanied with appropriate and carefully-executed scenery. Here we are shown the manner in which Queen Elizabeth breakfasted and Raleigh pursued his Oxford studies. The latter, dissatisfied with his treatment at Court, goes, by desire of the Queen, on a voyage with Admiral Drake, and the spectator is introduced to the incidents of the Spanish Armada and the fate of Drake; followed by a warning to smokers, in the Cavern by the Spirit of Gold, to which it will be well for them to attend. The jealousy of the Royal Elizabeth is awakened by a maiden named Cicely, to whom Raleigh is attached, and incurs in consequence her threats. Mr. J. L. King, the lecturer, gives a description of the passage "to Brighton and back for a Shilling," and, by means of a number of photographs, explained the Brighton Aquarium. Mr. W. H. Robinson delivers a lecture on the Ashantees, and Mr. Percy Vere assists at an entertainment called The Christmas Party. The lecture by Professor Gardner on "The New Silber Light and Lighting," is very interesting, illustrated as it is by a lamp reflecting the light of what is equal to that of a thousand candles. On the whole, the Polytechnic has lost none of its old attractions and has added many new ones.

AGRICULTURAL HALL.

A novel experiment has been made in connection with this colossal edifice by Mr. John Reeves, who has found in its capacious area the means of representing a Christmas Fair—a fair, such as fairs were in the olden time, when the fine old English gentleman was a power in the State. The fair here established includes a bazaar, a collection of wild beasts, and the shows that once were so common in the festival assemblies of the people,—giants, dwarfs, prodigies of all kinds, huge horses, and performing fishes. An event, too, has added popularity to the exhibition—the lioness on Christmas Day gave birth to two cubs, and on Friday great numbers were attracted to the place. There is also a steam-circus, round which all may ride on a wooden horse. Altogether, the scene is one of great excitement, somewhat trying to the nerves of timid sightseers. The sounds that meet the ear are most discordant, the sights that address the eye are truly bewildering. The vast arrangements for the complete fulfilment of the design are not yet carried out; it is hoped that these will be speedily supplied.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

One of the most valuable works appropriate as gift-books at this—or, indeed, at any other—season is the new edition of the whole of Beethoven's solo sonatas for the pianoforte, just brought out by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. Notwithstanding the many editions of these works already in existence, there is ample room, and there should be a large demand, for this, which has its distinctive merits and specialties. The size is but little below that of the full music form; the engraving and printing are remarkable for beauty and clearness; and the whole of the extensive series of pieces named are brought within the compass of a single volume, which is important enough in appearance to take the best place on the library shelf, while yet not being cumbersome on the pianoforte-desk. In addition to the thirty-two well-known sonatas, the six additional pieces—belonging to Beethoven's youthful period—are included. The task of editing has been admirably executed by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, who has contributed some excellent prefatory remarks on various doubtful passages in former editions, and has, moreover, supplied plentiful indications of fingering throughout the work. The task of correcting the proofs has been performed with an amount of care that is seldom exercised.

Very acceptable gift-books, also, are the volumes of Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co.'s "Octavo Editions of Operas," which now comprise a large selection of the classical and popular works that are most frequently performed by our two great Italian opera establishments. The most recent issue of this series is Verdi's "La Traviata," the musical portion of which has been carefully edited by Mr. Berthold Tours, the original Italian text being associated with an English version prepared by the practised hand of Madame Natalia Macfarren.

Similar in size, form, cheapness, and good qualities of print and paper are the volumes of Messrs. Boosey and Co.'s "Royal Edition of Operas." This collection now comprises between thirty and forty operas, including some of the principal works of Auber, Beethoven, Bellini, Donizetti, Flotow, Gounod, Meyerbeer, Mozart, Rossini, Verdi, Wagner, Weber, &c. These are given with English and Italian texts, and are prefaced by a summary of the plot. Each of the editions of operas referred to has its distinctive characteristics and merits.

Admirably suited for presents to vocalists of appreciative taste are two handsome volumes recently published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co., one containing the whole of the large collection of Mendelssohn's songs, the other being the first portion (forty-one pieces) of those by Robert Schumann, which latter are now beginning to be recognised as placing him on a level in this respect with the greatest song-composers. The volume first named includes several songs that were only published within recent years, one of them ("Der du die Men chen") having originally been destined as one of the numbers in the oratorio of "St. Paul." Both collections are edited, with prefaces, by Madame Macfarren, who has supplied a careful English adaptation of the original German words.

The newly-established firm of Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co. is adding some valuable works to its publishing catalogue. Robert Schumann's "Bequiem für Mignon," for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra, has just been issued, neatly printed, in portable large octavo form, at a price (two shillings) which renders it available for extensive use by choral societies. Similar in form and price are the editions of Ferdinand Hiller's cantatas, "Spring-time," for chorus and orchestra, and "Lur-line," for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra. Each of these works is given with the original German text, and an English translation by Madame Macfarren, the orchestral score being represented by a well-arranged pianoforte accompaniment.

Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co. have also issued some miscellaneous vocal music. "Myrrha," a serenata, by Berthold Tours, and "The Maiden's Rose," by J. L. Hatton, will be found pleasing in effect and not difficult in execution. Some excellent pianoforte music, too, has just been published by the same firm, among which may be particularly distinguished the admirable series of five pieces constituting the "Suite" (in E minor), op. 72, of Joachim Raff. Among the multitude of works by this composer the suite referred to is one of the best. Each division—preludio, toccata, minuetto, romanza, and fuga—is marked by beauty, power, or science; and the whole will be found valuable and interesting in practice. They have always produced a marked effect in public performance by Dr. Hans von Bülow, who has revised this edition; as likewise that of Gottard's "Gavotte," also published by Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co.

Some vocal pieces recently issued by Messrs. Metzler and Co. will be found to contain both interest and variety. "Day is dying" (words from George Eliot's "Spanish Gipsy") is a pleasing song by Miss Virginia Gabriel. A ballad, "Not long ago," bears another well-known name, that of Ciro Pinsuti, who here again proves that he knows how to write for the voice with simplicity yet with effect. Other agreeable songs, issued by the same publishers, are:—"The Brooklet," a setting of Longfellow's lines, by A. O. Smith, who has also put forth a song of a more pensive cast, "Away from thee," words by G. T. Metzler; "Golden Youth," a song in saltarelle style, by J. Cohen; and Offenbach's lively barcarolle, "Star upon Star," from "The Bridge of Sighs." Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew's "Slow Movements for the Organ or Harmonium" are a series of original pieces that will be found useful and interesting by students of those instruments.

In the light, drawing-room style of music, Metzler and Co.'s "Opera Bouffe Series" will be acceptable to many. For one shilling we have here, in each number, the libretto and music, with stage directions, of a complete operetta, easy of representation wherever there are a pianoforte and two or three vocalists. The "Popular Musical Library" is another shilling serial issued by the same publishers. The nine numbers of this work contain a varied collection of songs, secular and sacred, and dance pieces suitable for all times and seasons.

NEW BOOKS.

In a few pages of noticeably well-written description, savouring of freshness and originality and provocative of interest and expectation, the reader is made acquainted with the prominent characters of Hester Morley's Promise, by Hester Stretton (Henry S. King and Co.). The main incident, unfortunately, is not characterised by originality; on the contrary, it has been a little overworked of late years, and lady-writers have incurred at least their full share of responsibility for having rendered it hackneyed. That incident is, of course, adultery; and, as it occurs early in the first volume, it would have been easy and advantageous, so far as maintenance of the reader's attention is concerned, to complete the story in fewer than three volumes. But three is a mystic number; and though the tale is undoubtedly spun out, the spinner performs the operation with a cunning hand and in a sufficiently attractive manner, introducing some scenes indicative of pictorial skill, some of dramatic power, some of womanly insight and experience, some of a quietly satirical spirit. As for the heroine, who is charmingly conceived and delineated, she is angelic enough for adoration, and human enough for love and marriage; and as to the idea which is at the bottom of the romance, and which is developed so as not only to afford a vivid and startling picture of human life, but also to point a moral and teach a lesson, it is probable that opinions will differ: some will be more struck with its bright side and others with its dark; to the former it will appear full of grace, tenderness, and Christian-like doctrine; and to the latter scarcely less loathsome than the conception on which the myth of Œdipus was founded and scarcely less mischievous in tendency than the theory of "affinities." It is a pity to think that a story which has a decided line of beauty may suffer in general estimation from the fact that an ugly incident has been injudiciously handled.

Truth is notoriously stranger than fiction, as is abundantly evident from Lottie Darling, by John Cordy Jeaffreson (Hurst and Blackett), a story which, so far as its chief marvels are concerned, is founded on "true domestic history": fiction has merely expanded truth in order to make it fill the three volumes; and very agreeably for the reader is the expansion accomplished. The first volume is exceedingly bright and pleasant, with just sufficient twaddle to give the dialogue an air of lifelike reality; and from the first page to the last, from Lottie Darling's renunciation of school to her splendid victory over a bevy of fair toxophilites, all is sunshine, lighting up the unwonted, and of course delusive, spectacle of true love running on smoothly. Early in the second volume, just as days of happiness are about to culminate in nuptial bliss, the clouds gather, the storm bursts, and the crash comes in the rather trite form of bankruptcy, forgery, pecuniary ruin, flight of the guilty, apoplectic seizure and death of the suspected but innocent, and so on. The impending marriage, it is scarcely necessary to state, is adjourned sine die; and the second volume ends with an incident preparatory of what there is marvellous in the story. The marvels, which, as they are founded upon truth, are, consequently, utterly incredible, make the third volume uncommonly interesting; and that volume concludes with what may be called a resurrection of the dead, with a restoration of lost character, and with the union of two long and, as there was reason to fear, for ever separated hearts and hands, one of those hearts and one of those hands belonging to the lovely and lovable Lottie Darling. It is probable that some readers will put the hero very low down, if at all, in the scale of high-minded men; will be shocked at the flippant heartlessness of the bargain struck between the hero and the dying Bohemian, and of the tone in which the scenes appertaining thereto are described, and will be anything but satisfied with the manner in which the prophecy of Lottie Darling's mother is fulfilled; but all readers must admit that the story, which is a straightforward narrative, without any plot of the enigmatical and apocalyptic sort, is written with no small power and with great buoyancy. The portions which are connected with the assumption of an impenetrable personal disguise will, no doubt, have a special charm for those who have already committed, or purpose at some future time to commit, offences against the laws of their country. It is possible, however, that an outlay of four thousand francs may be more than they can afford; and our author's transformation-scene cannot be done for less.

A very pretty introductory scene prepossesses one in favour of the story contained in the volume entitled Margaret and Elizabeth, by Katherine Saunders (Henry S. King and Co.). A fishing village always suggests something fresh, and briny, and healthful; and when it is a beautiful morning, and the early sun looks down upon a poor but well-favoured, virtuous, and pious young woman starting her two little trots of rosy children for a run upon the sands whilst she is preparing their simple breakfast, a very pleasant, cheerful, and wholesome picture is presented to the reader's mental vision. But the two children come upon a thing that does not harmonise with the rest of the charming sea-piece; and there is something half pathetic and half ludicrous in the description of how they are found by their mother trying to bury, beneath the sand they scoop up with oyster-shells, a corpse—apparently. For it is not really a corpse; nor throughout the story is anybody really dead who is supposed to be dead. Three individuals undergo a sort of resurrection; an unhappy bride is rescued from the jaws of death; a victim of a husband's vengeance turns out to have been only seriously injured, but not killed; and a husband who has long been mourned as drowned returns home, after a long and unsatisfactory absence, in a robust state of health. The tale is well and powerfully told in parts; though the incidents, being for the most part related at second hand, are thereby weakened in interest.

In Gabriel Denver (Smith, Elder, and Co.), a young author, who is also a painter, has set the most powerful incidents of human passion in a framework of luxuriant description, principally derived from the sinister grandeur of conflagration and famine and the majestic loneliness of southern oceans. The general effect is exceedingly impressive, though sometimes oppressive, as well from the unflagging intensity of the feeling and the elaboration of descriptions on a large scale, carefully finished to the minutest detail. More thought and work have rarely been put into a one-volume novel, while the author's youth must be held to excuse the absence of psychological analysis and his reliance upon incident and description.

Rightly ascribed to the billows seems Miss Helen Zimmern's Told by the Waves (Virtue and Co.), with its silvery music and delicate spray-like fancies respecting the mermaid inhabitants of the deep. The minor tales appended are in the same poetical vein, and evince much ability in the personification of inanimate nature, more particularly the vegetable world. The characters of the Palm and the Aloe are especially well conveyed. The prettiest story in the book, perhaps, is that of the four-leaved shamrock, which endows the little maiden into whose shoe it has accidentally found its way with the power of witnessing the revels of the fairies.

THE FRENCH COMMISSION OF THIRTY.

The weekly letters of our Paris correspondent on the political aspects of France contain frequent references to the pending deliberations of these gentlemen, who are appointed by the National Assembly at Versailles to examine the existing constitutional laws of France, under the modifications introduced by the Empire and by the Republic, with a view to consider what should be retained during the period of Marshal M'Mahon's Presidential government. The following is a list of the thirty:—Messrs. Batbie, Dufaure, Laboulaye, Daru, De Kerdrel, Chesnelong, Talhouet, Vacheron, D'Haussonville, Delsol, Combar, Merveilleux Devigneux, Vingtain, Tarteron, De Sézanne, Tallon, Waddington, Lacombe, Pradier, De Cumont, De Meaux, Lucien Brun, Tailhaud, Paris, De Sugny, D'Andelarre, Lefebvre, Portalis, Lambert de St. Croix, and Keller. They appear, seated around the table, in our illustration. Two of the most influential, Comte Napoléon Daru and M. de Chesnelong, are standing in the middle foreground, conversing with M. Lucien Brun, who rises from his chair and turns to speak with them. On the opposite side of the table the President, M. Batbie, stands in the attitude of a speaker; his little hand-bell lies before him, ready to sound the signal of attention to the order of debate. M. de Kerdrel, one of the vice-presidents, sits at his right hand; the other, M. de Talhouet, sits at his left. The three secretaries, De Sézanne, Tarteron, and Tallon, are next the vice-presidents on that side. Standing behind a corner of the table, and shown to the left-hand of the Engraving, are two distinguished members of the Commission, M. Dufaure, the eminent lawyer, who was lately Minister of Justice, and M. Laboulaye, a good writer upon subjects of moral and social reform. M. D'Haussonville is also an historian of good repute; he sits at the other end of the table. The walls of this room in the Palace of Versailles are adorned with paintings, one large picture representing a scene at the Restoration of Charles X., others showing Bonaparte's victories in the south of Europe and in Egypt, with an equestrian portrait of Louis Philippe in military uniform. All the members of the Commission are inclined to a revival of the monarchy with constitutional guarantees.

THE GOVERNMENT AND RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

Mr. Thomas Dugdale, in his reply to the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company to the Board of Trade circular, states that his board do not complain of her Majesty's Government for calling attention to these important matters, and will continue to avail themselves of every improvement which they believe will promote the increased safety and comfort of the travelling public. Locking-signals are being introduced as rapidly as the few firms who undertake such work can execute orders. Much of the blame of unpunctuality Mr. Dugdale lays upon the erratic fondness of the working man for a holiday, which sometimes swamps a train with hundreds of extra passengers. For any inefficiency which may exist in the staff of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway the working man is also held responsible, as he is now difficult to secure in adequate numbers, even at increased wages and with reduced hours of labour. He expresses a hope that her Majesty's Government will not fail to remember the great boon that railways have conferred upon the public, and take into their serious consideration the claim of the companies to be relieved from the burdens which operate oppressively upon their enterprise.

The great English railway companies having nearly all replied to Mr. Chichester Fortescue's circular, the directors of the Scotch railways are having their say. The chairman of the North British line has recorded the views of his company on the several points raised. It is contended that both plant and permanent way are now in a condition very superior to what they ever have been, and that the directors spare neither pains nor expense in procuring the best material for the manufacture of the axles used in the company's rolling stock. Of the several inventions for the secure fastening of tires to wheels there appear to be three which have met with general approval, and all of these the company have adopted. Other points are then dealt with, such as the improved coupling of vehicles in trains, signal arrangements, the increased use of the block telegraph, siding accommodation, continuous brakes, and the unpunctuality of trains. As to accidents, it is shown that the North British line is 836 miles long, and that there were two collisions officially recorded in 1872. The Board of Trade is also reminded that from a return of the amounts of compensation for personal injuries paid by the company during the five years from 1868 to 1872 inclusive it appears that the average amount paid per annum under this head was £6543. The number of passengers carried during that period was upwards of 46,000,000, exclusive of season-ticket holders, who are daily travellers, and of whom there were 38,000. During the past seven years the average dividend upon the ordinary stock of the company has been 5s. 8½d. per cent per annum, and for some years many of the preference stockholders even were without a dividend. Notwithstanding this, a sum of not less than £445,000 has during that period been expended in the construction of sidings, signals, extensions of stations, block telegraph, and other works designed to promote the convenience of the public and to facilitate the safe and expeditious working of the traffic. The block telegraph, though costly to lay down, work, and maintain, is either in operation or in course of construction over the North British Railway for 253 miles of its length.

The British Museum will be closed to Thursday next, the 8th inst.

Lord Robert Montagu has written to Mr. Butt specifying his reasons for not supporting the Home-Rule movement, and declining to sign the requisition for the recent conference.

ROBERTS.

A CHRISTMAS-TREE AT THE MIDDLESEX HOSPITAL.

H.M. IRON-CLAD RAM RUPERT.

HMS. RUPERT.

This ironclad ram and turret-ship, which is a twin-screw steamer, was launched at Chatham Dockyard in March of last year, when we gave an illustration of the scene as she floated off. She has since been fitted at Portsmouth Dockyard, and has, during the past month, made her trials of speed with fair success, doing twelve knots an hour. The Rupert was designed by the Department of the Controller of the Navy, Admiral Sir Spencer Robinson being then Controller, and Mr. E. J. Reed Chief Constructor. She has the following dimensions:—Length between perpendiculars, 250 ft.; breadth, extreme, 53 ft.; depth of hold, 19 ft. 10 in.; draught of water, forward, 21 ft. 6 in., aft, 23 ft. 6 in.; displacement, tons, 5358. The armour on the side is 11 in. thick in the wake of the water line, backed with 12 in. of teak and 1½ in. of iron as an inner skin. The armour-plating extends to 5 ft. below the load water line, the lower strake of armour being 3 ft. wide and 9 in. thick. The breastwork which protects the lower parts of the turret and funnel, and the hatchways to engines and boilers, is about 96 ft. long, and 39 ft. 6 in. broad, and extends 7 ft. above the lower deck. It is made up of twelve armour-plates, on a backing of teak 12 in. thick and an iron skin 1½ in. thick, with 10-in. angle-iron frames. From the lower deck, where the upper edge of the side armour terminates, the side of the ship is completed to the upper deck by means of thin skin plating, so that on the lower deck there is a space between the breastwork and the sides of the ship, which is made available for berthing part of the crew. Twelve feet above the top of the breastwork is the flying deck, a light structure 116 ft. in length, on which the boats are stowed, and from which the ship can be steered. The turret, which is placed just abaft the foremast, is 22 ft. 4 in. internal diameter, and is made up of two thicknesses of armour and two of teak backing. The aggregate thickness of armour plates is 14 in. in front and 12 in. in the rear. The whole is backed with 1½ in. of iron and 10½ in. angle-iron frames. The lower-deck beams are covered with 3 in. protective deck-plating. The total weight of armour, including the protecting deck-plating, worked into the ship, is over 1600 tons. Her armament consists of two 10-inch 18-ton muzzle-loading rifled guns placed in the turret, and two 64-pounder 64 cwt. guns at the after part of the upper deck. The 64-pounders may be fought either on the broadside or right astern. The total weight of one broadside is 684 lb. The ship is very lightly rigged on two masts, the rig being fore and aft, and the total area of sails is 8600 square feet. The engines, of 4200 estimated indicated horse-power, by Messrs. Napier, of Glasgow, are of the ordinary horizontal type, fitted with surface condensers, and working at 30 lb. pressure.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and five codicils of the Right Hon. Charles Philip Earl of Hardwicke, of Wimpole, Cambridgeshire, and of Sydney Lodge, Hamble, Southampton, who died on Sept. 17, were proved on the 21st ult. by Susan, Dowager Countess of Hardwicke, the relict, the Hon. Adolphus Frederick Octavius Liddell, the Hon. John Manners Yorke (the son), and George Henry Wickes, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator's widow gets a jointure of £2200 per annum, and amongst the other provisions made for her may be mentioned the gift of a policy in the Hand in Hand Office for £5000, a town residence with the furniture absolutely, and the Hamble Cliff estate for life: after her death this estate is devised to the Hon. Eliot Constantine Yorke. Testator's eldest son, the present Earl, takes the settled estates, and there are some annuities and legacies to servants of the family; the residue of his real and personal property he leaves upon trust for his younger children. The several articles (including gold snuff-boxes and a statuette) presented to deceased by her Majesty the Queen, the late Emperor Nicholas of Russia, the late King William of Prussia, and other persons, are specifically bequeathed, and the diamonds taken from the snuff-boxes are made heir-looms.

The will and two codicils of the late James Heald, J.P., D.L., of Parr's Wood, Didsbury, Lancashire, was proved at her Majesty's Principal Court of Registry, on the 15th ult., by William Norris Heald, James Wood, and Thomas Walton Stead, the executors named therein, the personality being sworn under £350,000. The testator leaves the whole of his freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates to his nephew, the said William Norris Heald; also furniture, pictures, and plate, including that presented to him by the Manchester and Liverpool Banking Company and the Manchester Fire Assurance Company; also the valuable Bible presented to him by the electors of Oldham. To his sister, Margaret Heald, he leaves an annuity of £1000 per annum. He bequeaths numerous legacies to relatives and servants, and leaves the following sums, all of which are to be paid free of duty:—To the Wesleyan Missionary Society and to the Wesleyan Theological Institution, £5000 each; to the Wesleyan Education Fund, Wesleyan Chapel Fund, British and Foreign Bible Society, and Manchester Royal Infirmary, £1000 each; to the Stockport Infirmary, £500; and the Stockport Ragged Schools and the Stockport Town Mission, £100 each, &c. One moiety of the residue of his personal estate he bequeaths to his said nephew, William Norris Heald, and the other moiety equally between his nephews James and Peter Frederick Wood, and his great-nephew, Alfred Heald.

The will and codicil of Mrs. Harriet Semper, of No. 14, Grove-road, St. John's-wood, have been lately proved by Thomas William Allies and Anthony Norris, the executors, the personality being sworn under £16,000. The testatrix bequeaths £2000 upon trust to pay the dividends for ever to the Sts. John and Elizabeth Hospital for Females in Great Ormond-street, to be applied for the benefit of two patients to be nominated by her trustees; to the Roman Catholic Female Poor School, Orphanage, and House of Mercy, Blandford-square, £1000; to the Female Orphanage of the Hon. and Rev. Gilbert Chetwynd Talbot, in Alpha-road, St. John's-wood, £200; to the poor schools belonging to the following Roman Catholic churches—viz., at Duke-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields; Upper Ogle-street, Fitzroy-square; Saffron-hill; Stratford, Essex; Commercial-road East; Spanish-place; St. Bridget, Leopard's-court, Gray's-inn-lane; Mary-lebone; St. Aloysius, Somers Town; at Union-street, Barnet; the Cathedral, Southwark; at Broadway, Worcestershire; and the Bavarian Roman Catholic Church, thirteen in all, £100 each;—to the Boys' Roman Catholic Poor School, Richmond-street, St. John's-wood; the St. Mary's Orphanage School at North Hyde, near Southall; the Female Orphan School at the Convent, Norwood; to the Institution at Nazareth House, Hammersmith; to the Little Sisters of the Poor, Porto Bello-road, Notting-hill; the chairman of the Catholic Poor School committee, to promote the charitable objects of the said committee; the Providence-row Night Refuge; the Aged Poor Society, Bloomsbury; the Roman Catholic London Secular Clergy Common Fund, the Secular Clergy New Fund, the Associated Catholic Charities, the Benevolent Society for the Relief of Aged and Infirm Poor, St. Mary's Orphanage at Greenwich, the Poor School belonging to the Institution of Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent of Paul, the Female Poor School belonging to St. Joseph's Convent of Our Lady of Mercy, in Cadogan-place, and the St. Patrick's Schools and Asylum for Female Orphans, Tottenham-court-road, £100 each;—to be applied in decoration of Our Lady's Chapel, Grove-road, £100; and the sum of £50 and the proceeds of the sale of her large old-fashioned purple enamelled watch surrounded with pearls testatrix directs to be distributed among poor Roman Catholic persons in the district of St. John's-wood: all these are to be free of duty. There are numerous other legacies. The remainder of her personal estate is to be invested, and the dividends applied every year for ever in or towards the maintenance, support, and education of students intended for the Roman Catholic priesthood, in such manner as Archbishop Manning or his successors shall appoint.

The will of George Robbins, of No. 21, Montagu-square, was proved on the 16th ult. by Mrs. Maria Catherine Robbins (the relict), the sole executrix, the personality being sworn under £25,000. At the death of his wife testator bequeaths to the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's-inn-road, £1000, and to the Royal South Hants Infirmary, £500, both free of duty. Subject to some other legacies, testator gives the remainder of his property, of whatever description, to his wife absolutely.

In our report of the will of the late George Crawshaw, on the 20th ult., we inadvertently omitted the name of his son, Mr. Walter Crawshaw, from the number of the residuary legatees; he takes an equal share, with his brothers, George, Edmund, Sydney, and Herbert, of the residue of testator's real and personal property.

CURIOUS WILLS.

WILL OF PINEDO, THE PORTUGUESE JEW.

This remarkable Israelite, well known in Amsterdam for his enormous wealth and liberal donations, died about the middle of the last century. His will, testifying to a noble and generous nature, and disposing of the very large fortune he had made, in the most magnanimous and tolerant spirit, is to be found (in Schutt's "Memorabilia Judaica," lib. iv. cap. 18) as follows:—

"I bequeath to the city of Amsterdam the sum of five tons of gold."

"I lend to the said city for ten years, and without interest, the sum of a million and a half of florins."

"I give to the Christian church at Amsterdam and at the Hague the sum of 10,000 florins each, and to the church at the southern part of Amsterdam 20,000 florins."

"I give to each Christian orphanage in the two towns the sum of 10,000 crowns."

"I give to the poor of Amsterdam forty shiploads of peat."

"I give to the orphan who shall first quit the orphanage 1000 florins, and to the one who shall follow, 600 florins."

"I give to the synagogue at Amsterdam two and a half 'tons' of gold."

"I give to the Portuguese orphanage 30,000 crowns."

"I lend to the Government at 3 per cent interest, ten 'tons' of gold on condition that the interest shall be paid to the Jews domiciled at Jerusalem: the capital to belong to the Government in perpetuity."

"I give to the German synagogue 5000 florins."

"I give to my nephew Ovis thirty-one 'tons' of gold, with all my houses and appurtenances."

"I give to my widow ten 'tons' of gold."

"I give to my other relations in equal portions 10,000 crowns."

"I give to each of my neighbours who shall assist at my funeral 100 ducats."

"I give to every unmarried person of either sex who shall be present at my burial 100 florins, and to every Christian priest at Amsterdam and at the Hague 100 crowns, and to every sacristan 50 crowns."

AN ORIENTAL WILL.

Interesting to record is the last will and testament of the celebrated Saladin, born in 1136 and died in 1193, after filling the two continents of Europe and Asia with his fame.

Sultan of Egypt, he conquered Syria, Arabia, Persia, Mesopotamia, and took possession of Jerusalem in 1187. His conquests suffice to enable us to judge of the extent of his power and wealth; at his death, however, he showed that no one was more intimately convinced of the utter hollowness of the riches and greatness of the world.

He ordered, by his will, first, that considerable sums should be distributed to Mussulmans, Jews, and Christians, in order that the priests of the three religions might implore the mercy of God for him; next he commanded that the shirt or tunic he should be wearing at the time of his death should be carried on the end of a spear throughout the whole camp, and at the head of his army, and that the soldier who bore it should pause at intervals and say aloud, "Behold all that remains of the Emperor Saladin! Of all the States he had conquered; of all the provinces he had subdued; of the boundless treasures he had amassed; of the countless wealth he possessed; he retained, in dying, nothing but this shroud!"

Nature proclaims ambition most absurd in man
By pointing to his origin and end!
Milk and a swathe at first, his whole demand;
His whole domain, at last, a turf or stone,
To whom, between, a world had seemed too small.

* The "ton of gold" is valued at 100,000 florins (£10,000).

By the Bank Act of 1871 Thursday (New-Year's Day) was kept as a Bank holiday in Scotland.

Major Tullock's visit to Twickenham respecting the sewage difficulty has terminated in the local board adopting a scheme prepared by its own surveyor, and estimated to cost £25,000.

The new park presented to the town of Eastbourne by the Duke of Devonshire is fast approaching completion. The cricket-ground, which is six acres in extent, is being prepared for next season's matches.

The village properties of Duntocher and Faifley, with gas-works, feu duties, and public works, extending over an area of 42 acres, with an annual rental of about £1500, which were offered for sale at Glasgow at an upset price of £34,000, have been bought by Mr. Robert Black, of Glenarubuck, Bowling.

A gold medal and a diploma of the first order of merit, handed by the King of the Belgians to William Wood, master of a Hastings fishing-boat, for saving life at sea, was handed to him last week, by Mrs. Brassey, in the Pier Pavilion, in the presence of a numerous assembly.

The council of the Statistical Society has given effect to the views of the president, Dr. Guy, F.R.S., regarding John Howard, and his claim to be considered at least as much a statistic as a philanthropist, by establishing a Howard medal. This medal is to be given every year to the author of the best essay on some subject in social statistics, giving a preference to those in which Howard himself was most interested.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LADY KING.

The Right Hon. Hester, Lady King, died on the 17th ult., the very day on which she completed her eighty-ninth year, having been born Dec. 17, 1784. Her Ladyship was the eldest daughter of Hugh, first Earl Fortescue, by his wife, Hester, daughter of the Right Hon. George Grenville, and sister to George, first Marquis of Buckingham, and was thus sister to Hugh, second Earl Fortescue, K.G., father of the present Earl. She was married nearly seventy years ago—viz., on May 6, 1804—to Peter, seventh Lord King, by whom she had, with three daughters, two sons—viz., William, who succeeded as eighth Baron King in 1833, and is now Earl of Lovelace (being so created June 30, 1838), and the Hon. Peter John Locke King, M.P. for East Surrey. Lady King was left a widow June 4, 1833. Two years afterwards her eldest son, then Lord King, married the Hon. Augusta Ada Byron, only child of Lord Byron, the poet.

SIR WILLIAM R. CODRINGTON, BART.

Sir William Raimond Codrington, fourth Baronet, of Dodington, in the county of Gloucester, died on the 17th ult., at his residence, the Château de la Boullaye, Montfort, Brittany. He was born Jan. 25, 1806, the only son of Sir William Codrington, third Baronet, who was disinherited by his father in favour of his cousin-german, Christopher Codrington, Esq. The Baronet just deceased succeeded to the unendowed title in September, 1816; and married, May 20, 1828, Mary Ann, daughter of J. Lefer de Bonaban, previously to the French Revolution Lord of Bonaban, near St. Malo, by whom he leaves, besides three daughters (the eldest married to Count Alexandre de la Mousaye), two sons, of whom the elder is now Sir William Codrington, fifth Baronet, born March 12, 1829, and married to Mary, daughter of Robert Roskell, Esq., of Park House, Fulham. The Codringtons, originally of Codrington, Gloucestershire, held for many years the first position in the island of Barbadoes. Sir William Codrington of Dodington, created a Baronet 1721, was nephew of Christopher Codrington, Captain-General of the Leeward Isles.

SIR JAMES COLQUHOUN, BART.

Sir James Colquhoun, of Colquhoun and Luss, in the county of Dumbarton, Bart., Lord Lieutenant of that shire, and its M.P. from 1837 to 1841, was accidentally drowned in Loch Lomond, on the 18th ult. He was born in 1804, the eldest son of Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., M.P., by Janet, his wife, daughter of the Right Hon. Sir John Sinclair, Bart.

The great and ancient house he represented has held from a remote period a large proportion of the territory of Dumbartonshire by charter from the Crown, as well as the hereditary office of Coroner of the county; and its history, written by Mr. Fraser, under the title of "The Chiefs of Colquhoun," was printed for private circulation, not long since, by the Baronet whose lamentable death we record. Sir James succeeded to the title at the decease of his father, Feb. 3, 1836. He married, June 14, 1843, Jane, second daughter of Sir Robert Abercromby, Bart., of Birkenbog, and by her (who died May 3, 1844) he leaves an only child, now Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Colquhoun and Luss, born March 30, 1844. In politics the deceased Baronet was a staunch Liberal. A baronetcy of Nova Scotia was conferred, in 1825, on Sir John Colquhoun of Luss, a devoted Loyalist; but long after, in 1786, some disputes having arisen as to the limitations of the patent, a baronetcy of Great Britain was granted to Sir James Colquhoun, great-grandfather of the late Baronet.

THE LORD CHIEF BARON PIGOT.

The Right Honourable David Richard Pigot, Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, and a Commissioner of National Education, died at his residence, Merrion-square, Dublin, on the 22nd ult. He was born in 1797, at Kilworth, in the county of Cork, the son of a physician of that place. Called to the Bar in 1826, he obtained a silk gown in 1835; was made Solicitor-General in 1839; and was promoted to be Attorney-General, and created a Privy Councillor, in 1840. From 1839 to 1846 he sat in the House of Commons as M.P. for Clonmel, and in the latter year succeeded Mr. Maziere Brady as Lord Chief Baron. A most learned and able lawyer, an accomplished scholar and gentleman, and a friend beloved in the circle in which he moved, Chief Baron Pigot will be long and deeply deplored. Conscientious to a fault, his judgments were marked by painstaking care, profound knowledge of the law, and keen sagacity. He was left a widower a short time since. One of his sons, David Richard Pigot, M.A., is an Irish barrister; and one of his daughters is married to Dr. Lyons, of Dublin.

SIR R. A. GLASS.

Sir Richard Atwood Glass, Chairman of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, died on the 22nd ult., at Moorlands, Bitterne, Southampton. He was born at Bradford, Wilts, in 1820, the son of Mr. Francis Glass, of that town, by his wife, Mary Canning, of Marlborough, and received his education at King's College, London. Largely engaged in wire-rope making, he supplied half the first Atlantic cable, and the whole of that employed in the cable of 1866, and was knighted for his services in connection with that great international undertaking. From 1868 to 1869 he sat in Parliament for Bewdley. Sir Richard married, in 1854, Anne, daughter of Thomas Tanner, Esq.

SIR JOSEPH COWEN.

Sir Joseph Cowen, M.P. for and Alderman of Newcastle-on-Tyne, died at Stella Hall, his residence, near Blaydon, on the 19th ult. He was born in 1800, the eldest son of Mr. John Cowen, of Winlaton, Durham, and raised himself by a career of integrity and enterprise to position and fortune. At the time of his death he was a considerable coalowner, and head of one of the largest fire-brick and gas-retort works in the kingdom. He was, besides, Chairman of the River Tyne Improvement Commission, and for his gratuitous services in that office had received the honour of knighthood in 1872. He represented Newcastle from the year 1865, in the Radical interest.

THE WAR ON THE GOLD COAST.

Our Special Artist with the Expedition to the Gold Coast has arrived at Cape Coast Castle, and has sent us several Illustrations, which will appear in succeeding Numbers of this Paper.

Office, 198, Strand, W.C.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 10, 1874.

Since the issue of our last Number the coup-d'état at Madrid has furnished the public with the main topic of talk. Senor Castelar's Dictatorship has been brought to a sudden close. The Cortes have been dissolved. Marshal Serrano is now at the head of affairs, as President of the Executive Power of the Spanish Republic. A new Ministry has been appointed, under his authority; and another page of Spanish history has been turned over.

How this sudden incident has been brought about remains a secret for the present. The public steps which led to it are, it is true, open to the sight of all men. The intrigues of which they are but the outward expression, and which must have been some time past in active operation, it will be for the future to disclose. The immediate occasion of the military explosion which has once more shaken political society in Spain to its centre was the unpatriotic impracticability of the Cortes. The members reassembled on Friday week, after a four months' adjournment, to which they had been persuaded by Castelar's eloquence to give their assent. They listened to the message of the virtual Dictator, in which he described with glowing force the difficulties with which he had had to grapple, the measure of success which had attended his efforts, the steps which still remain to be taken, and the hopes he cherished in regard to the future Republic. A motion was thereupon submitted expressing approval of Castelar's past work, and confidence in his administration. The motion was negatived by a considerable majority, twice expressed in varied form. Senor Castelar forthwith resigned his post. Meanwhile, however, the proceedings in the Cortes got wind, and a report of them was carried to General Pavia, Military Commandant of Madrid. Without losing a moment, that officer marched a strong force of the garrison under his authority to the steps of the building occupied by the Cortes. He took with him some pieces of artillery, the mouths of which he turned towards the Hall. Then, sending in to the President of the Cortes a message by his aide-de-camp, he bade him dissolve the Assembly, or it would be dissolved by force. Of course, there was no little consternation. Some, indeed, talked of resistance; but two shots were fired in the air, and the order of the day, instantly acted upon with entire unanimity, was saute qui peut. The Hall was cleared, its gates were closed, and General Pavia, calling around him the principal leaders of parties, left it to them to form a Government capable of carrying on the political affairs of the Republic. Against this high-handed act Senor Castelar has since vehemently protested. He describes it as "the brutal act of violence committed against the Constitutional Cortes by the Captain-General of Madrid," and he declares that "while he cannot associate with demagogues, he cannot, on the other hand, identify himself with a condition of affairs which has been created by the force of bayonets."

We are glad that Senor Castelar has thus publicly cleared himself of all connivance at the plot which has upset his own authority. It cannot but be admitted, however, that the intractable temper of a majority of the Cortes, although it cannot justify this forcible intervention of the Captain-General, presented an almost irresistible provocation thereto, even to patriotic minds. We are the less surprised, therefore, that the coup-d'état has been accepted with a show of readiness by the provinces. There have been slight disturbances, it is true, in a few of the great cities, but they have been very easily suppressed. The truth is, the conduct of the Cortes reduced matters to the single alternative of utter ruin to the country or illegal suppression of the existing Constituent Assembly. There seems reason to believe—at any rate, it was generally believed—that the majority had made up its mind to undo all that Castelar, with infinite labour and with some success, had already done towards the restoration of order throughout the Peninsula; that it had a secret understanding with the Intransigentes of Carthage, whose rebellion it intended to condone; that it was deeply tainted with the divided principles represented by that party; that it was even pursuing its ends in concealed concert with the Carlists; and that it was prepared to throw the country into utter confusion, with a view to the ultimate accomplishment of its ends. There may be—there probably was—no little exaggeration in these surmises; but they seemed to be corroborated by the proceedings of the Cortes. Immediately on the revival of their power General Pavia took upon himself the responsibility of interpreting the national will. There can be no doubt that he has acted extra vires, and has introduced the element of military coercion into a system based upon civil law and authority. His conduct will be judged rather by the event than by the rules of technical propriety; and, even should history absolve him from crime, it will probably have to recognise countless inconveniences which have resulted from his precipitation.

The entire transaction, from beginning to end, has been hard upon Senor Castelar. To a certain extent, undoubtedly, the host of difficulties with which he has had to contend were the offspring of his own earlier exertions. He helped to make the rule of King Amadeus impossible. He exulted over the abdication of that Constitutional monarch. He attached supreme importance to a Republican form of Government. He was more conversant with political speculations than with human nature. He was too impatient of results. There is no reason in the world for doubting the purity of his motives. That he is a genuine patriot will be admitted even by his foes. But he seems to have trusted too much to the surpassing power of his oratory—too little to the gradual development of sound principles. When, therefore, supreme office was confided to him, it became his inevitable lot to find himself baffled by that impatience which, unconsciously perhaps to himself, he had done but too much to excite. It remains to his enduring credit that he did not shrink from trying a fall with his own theoretic conclusions. For several months he had been heroically intent upon restoring public order without violating the forms of political liberty, when he found himself overborne by the less patriotic factions with which he had been once associated. Some progress he had made towards the realisation of his designs. Some considerable hold he had got upon the sympathy and respect of his countrymen. But he had neither succeeded as yet in quelling the insurrection at Carthage nor in putting an end to the Carlist risings in the north. He might have done both if he had been loyally seconded even by his own political party. He may even yet figure in history among the great men of Spain. But for the present he is superseded. Other men have "entered into his labours." We only hope that their motives may prove to be as honest as his, and that they will carry to success the work in which he has failed.

The Hon. Eliot Thomas Yorke, brother of the late Earl of Hardwicke, has resigned the chairmanship of the Cambridge-shire Quarter Sessions, which he filled for thirty-four years.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Salford has begun a "crusade" against intemperance, and the inaugural service was held in the cathedral on Sunday. The Bishop appeals to the whole body of Catholics, clergy as well as laity, to join in a "holy crusade" against the vice of intemperance.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, continues at Osborne House. On New-Year's Day her Majesty presented gifts to all the servants of the household. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold and attended by the Marchioness of Ely and Lady Waterpark, at six o'clock entered the steward's room, where there was a Christmas-tree, and distributed the presents to the servants assembled there; after which her Majesty proceeded to the servants' hall, where there was also a Christmas-tree, and where the gifts were in like manner handed to each servant. The Prince of Leiningen arrived at Osborne. The Queen's dinner party consisted of Prince Leopold and Princess Beatrice, Prince Leiningen, the Marchioness of Ely, Lady Waterpark, Major-General Sir Thomas and the Hon. Lady Biddulph, Major-General and the Hon. Mrs. H. Ponsonby, and Colonel the Hon. Dudley de Ros. On the following day the Duc de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia and Earl Granville arrived at Osborne and had an audience of her Majesty. His Excellency presented his credentials as Ambassador from the French Republic. Lady Elizabeth Adeane also arrived at Osborne, and was presented to the Queen on her appointment as Bedchamber Woman to her Majesty. The French Ambassador, Earl Granville, Lady Elizabeth Adeane, and the Hon. Lady Biddulph dined with her Majesty. On Saturday last Prince Arthur arrived at Osborne. The Duc de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia, Earl Granville, and Colonel the Hon. Dudley de Ros left Osborne. On Sunday the Queen, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service, performed at Osborne by the Rev. Robinson Duckworth. On Monday Prince Louis of Battenberg, R.N. (first cousin to Prince Louis of Hesse), visited her Majesty and remained to luncheon. Sir Howard Elphinstone arrived at Osborne and dined with the Queen. On Wednesday the Prince of Wales and Princess and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein and the Archbishop of Canterbury arrived at Osborne. On Thursday the confirmation of Princess Beatrice took place. The rite was performed by the Archbishop of Canterbury in the presence of the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the other members of the Royal family. Her Majesty, with the Royal family, has taken her usual daily out-of-door exercise. The Queen, upon receiving intelligence of the death of Lieut. the Hon. Alfred Charteris, telegraphed to Lord and Lady Elcho, expressing in affecting terms her deep sympathy with them under their great loss. Lady Elizabeth Adeane has left, and Lady Caroline Barrington has arrived, at Osborne. Lady Churchill and the Hon. Harriet Phipps have also arrived. Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. H. Byng has succeeded Colonel Gardiner in waiting on the Queen. Lord Monson will succeed Lord Poltimore, who has resigned the Treasurership of her Majesty's household.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Prince Arthur, and other guests, were present at the "meet" of the West Norfolk Hounds on Harpley Dams on New-Year's Day. Their Royal Highnesses drove from Sandringham House in a wagonette and four to the rendezvous, the "field" numbering some 300 equestrians, including many ladies, and also a large company in carriages. On Saturday last Prince and Princess Christian took leave of the Prince and Princess and returned to Cumberland Lodge, Windsor Park. Prince Arthur left Sandringham for Osborne, Isle of Wight. On Monday the Prince and Princess, accompanied by Prince Albert Victor, Prince George, Princess Louise, Princess Victoria, and Princess Maud of Wales, arrived at Marlborough House from Sandringham. On Tuesday the Prince was installed as Master of the Prince of Wales Lodge of Freemasons. Prince Louis of Battenberg, R.N., arrived at Marlborough House from Portsmouth on a visit to their Royal Highnesses. In the evening the Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Duke of Cambridge, went to the Holborn Theatre. On Wednesday the Prince went to Osborne on a visit to the Queen, previous to his departure for St. Petersburg. Prince and Princess Christian travelled with his Royal Highness to Osborne. Their Royal Highnesses, upon arriving at Portsmouth, drove in Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy's carriage to the dockyard, where they were met by Prince Arthur and Prince Leopold, the two Princes having previously visited the Serapis, Indian troop-ship, on board which the 13th Hussars were embarking. The Royal party embarked on board her Majesty's yacht Alberta and crossed to Osborne. Prince Louis of Battenberg left Marlborough House for the Continent. The Prince unveiled the statue of the Prince Consort on the Holborn Viaduct yesterday (Friday), and was afterwards present at the déjeuner given at the Guildhall. The Lord Mayor and Corporation were in attendance in state.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke of Edinburgh arrived at St. Petersburg on Sunday. His Royal Highness was received by the Czar and the Grand Dukes, who wore naval uniforms, and by the British Ambassador. A guard of honour was drawn up at the station, the band playing the English National Anthem. The Duke was received with great enthusiasm by the people. The Duke has been appointed a Colonel of the Prussian army, attached to the 95th Infantry Regiment of Coburg-Gotha.

THE BENGAL GRAIN-SELLER.

The newspapers present for our reading a sorrowful controversy among writers of Indian experience upon the sufficiency of the measures for relieving the terrible distress presently expected from the failure of the rice and grain crops in Bengal. We are anxious to contribute our part to direct public attention to the subject, with a view to such efforts for a partial mitigation of this vast amount of human misery as may be found within the reach of voluntary beneficence; while we hope that the British Government of India will be wisely advised to use its fullest powers with the utmost activity and in the most judicious manner. The first of a series of Illustrations, from the pencil of an Artist who resided and travelled during two years in India, appears in our front-page Engraving. It represents the common Baniyah, or grain-seller, weighing out a small quantity of corn for his poor customers in the street or market. Rice is the chief article of food only in Lower Bengal, and in some other districts along the coast, or where the fields can be overflowed, in ordinary seasons, with such an abundance of water from great rivers as is needful to produce this crop. The inhabitants of the Upper Provinces, and of Central India, subsist upon other kinds of grain, such as wheat, barley, maize, and peas, or the cheaper grain called bajira, which is much used by the labouring classes. They seldom taste any kind of flesh-meat, though it is an error to suppose that animal food is entirely prohibited by the Hindoo religion. Sugar, curdled milk, and boiled butter or ghee, may be used by those who can afford such luxuries to flavour their rice or porridge. As a rule, they are water-drinkers, but are fond of smoking tobacco and chewing the betel-leaf. Such are the simple habits of the people, leaving them no lower scale of provisions to fall back upon, in case of a scarcity of their usual articles of diet.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

The voyage to the Gold Coast of West Africa in the mail steam-packet Volta has been accomplished by our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, who writes to us from Cape Coast Castle, and sends a number of sketches of that place, and of the preparations for Sir Garnet Wolseley's campaign. We shall give some of them next week; in the mean time, we present a view of Free Town, Sierra Leone, carefully drawn by our Artist, from on board the steamer while detained the usual time at that port. A description of Sierra Leone was recently given in this Journal; it is a rather new settlement, founded by the British Government some half-century ago, for the reception of negroes taken out of the captured slave-trading vessels along the West African coast. The place itself was known to the Portuguese navigators four centuries ago, and was named by them from the imagined resemblance of the neighbouring mountain to the shape of a lion. It is a hilly peninsula, about twenty miles long and twelve broad, at the mouth of the river Roquette: the town is built on the river-shore, and on the slopes of the hill. The steam-ship Volta is shown, in our Engraving, as she lay off the town in the river. To the right, where the high ground falls gently down, by Wilberforce and Signal Hill, is the entrance to the open sea. An English-looking church, with a square tower, in the upper part of the town, is the cathedral of Sierra Leone, which has its Bishop and other clergy. The Wesleyan chapel, or one of the two English Methodist places of worship, is near the cathedral on the right hand. A large and many-windowed pile of building, like a factory, close to the water's edge, is that for the Commissariat Stores; behind it are the Custom House, and the Wilberforce Testimonial Hall. Barrack Hill, with its extensive range of buildings for the habitation of the military, has an open and airy aspect, but they are not so healthy as they ought to be. The picturesque conical summits of the hills above—Sugar Loaf Mountain, Leicester Hill, and others—must at once strike the eye of a stranger at Sierra Leone. Their sides are richly wooded, or cultivated and adorned with hamlets and villas. One building which is seen there, amidst the surrounding mass of foliage, is called Heddle's Tower. The East Battery is to the extreme left of our view, at the mouth of a creek which runs behind part of the town. It has been repeatedly mentioned that Sierra Leone is now the seat of general government for all the British possessions in West Africa, including the Gambia, the Gold Coast, and Lagos. The town, nevertheless, has a bad reputation in every way, and the negro population here are most disagreeable folk to deal with. Our Artist took the opportunity to sketch a party of the overdressed black ladies and idle gentlemen of African race who came on board the steamer during its stay at Sierra Leone. He also made a sketch of the appearance and attitudes of a gang of "Sierra Leone boys," engaged to work in unloading the cargo or shipping stores, when they had a dispute about an addition to the stipulated wages, and took to using their tongues.

There is little fresh news of the progress of the war, or the preparations for it. A despatch of the 18th ult., from Cape Coast Castle, states that a bridge had been constructed over the river Prah. The troops on board the Tamar and Himalaya were to land on the 8th inst. Their health was good, and that of Sir Garnet Wolseley had much improved. The death of a promising young officer, the Hon. Alfred Charteris, is noticed in our obituary record.

The Royal Arsenal at Woolwich and the Government military factories at Portsmouth and elsewhere are still busied with the preparation of stores. The screw steam-ship Nebraska, now about to receive her cargo at Portsmouth, is the fifteenth hired transport employed in this service for the Ashantee war.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE PANTOMIMES.

DRURY LANE.

The skill of Mr. E. L. Blanchard in the composition of pantomimes has been so fully recognised, and his facility of execution so much enhanced by practice for the whole of a quarter of a century, that the first place is due to him in his capacity of author, as well as to the theatre with which he has been so long identified. We are glad, moreover, to be able to recognise the merits of Mr. F. Evans, who sustains the part of Jack-in-the-Box, and whose exit from the chest is represented in our Illustration. His spring into the air from the trap bespeaks the skilful acrobat, and his demeanour afterwards abounds in sportive suggestion. Humorous gesture and movement are multiplied and increased, until "children of a larger growth" roar as vociferously as the tinier infants to whom laughter is as natural as it is sudden. Men and women become as excited as girls and boys. The attitudes of Mr. Brittain Wright and Miss Harriet Coveney, as Cockalorum the Great, King of Cockaigne, and Prince Felix, are suggestive of the wonder provoked by the startling apparition with which they are so unexpectedly greeted. We know not that we have anything to add to our notice of the performance, except to bear testimony to the general elegance of the arrangements, and the success which has attended the production. Mr. Chatterton has most sedulously provided for his public a decidedly good Christmas entertainment.

COVENT GARDEN.

Mr. Charles Rice, the successful manager, of Bradford, has striven hard to convince the world that he has not miscalculated his power in undertaking the conduct of Covent-Garden Theatre. Depending on his pantomime, he has thought that no one could do the work better than himself, and has determined, at any rate, that it shall be well done. Red Riding Hood and her sister Little Bo-Peep find in him their laureate, who has furnished them with verses and lyrics that truly adorn the fairy-tale, and shed around the performance a poetic lustre of the very pleasantest kind. Mr. Rice's pantomime has a tragic scene, the story of which we have already told, which forms the subject of our Illustration. The pictorial surrounding is of itself very charming. The Lily Dell in the Glow-worm Glen is worthy to be the home of the loveliest elves, but is really the haunt of a voracious dragon. It is the destiny of Marmion, the brother of Red Riding Hood (Miss Lizzie Marshall), to wound the Wolf that pursues her to the place, but, offending fairy law by drawing blood in the enchanted dell, to perish himself of his heroic act. The transformation scene transports all into a better world, where beauty and virtue are eternal co-mates. There is a curious tendency in these days to give solemn morals to the slightest fictions, and make of the drama a kind of sermon.

It was mentioned by us three weeks ago that the head of Mr. Walter's prize heifer, Lady Flora, killed on her removal from the Smithfield Club Cattle Show, was preserved and mounted for an ornamental trophy. We should have named Mr. Edwin Ward, naturalist, of Wigmore-street, who treated in this manner the head of the Chillingham white bull, killed by the Prince of Wales. It was by mistake that we attributed this work of art to Mr. James R. Ward, of Piccadilly, whose treatment of the old lion from the Zoological Society's Gardens was so much admired.

BY THE WAY.

The name of Wolseley does not now come to the front for the first time as the name of a British officer, distinguished for his brilliant deeds against savage enemies. Irish history records the fame of a Colonel Wolseley. In 1689 he was sent to rescue the Enniskilleners from the terrible danger that then menaced them. The Popish party in Dublin had resolved that an attack should be made upon them from several quarters at once, and the Enniskilleners sent off to pray for succour from Kirke. He could spare no soldiers, says Lord Macaulay; but he sent arms, ammunition, and some experienced officers, of whom the chief were Colonel Wolseley and Lieutenant-Colonel Bury. The whole population came down to the shore to greet them. "It was with difficulty that they could make their way to the castle through the crowds that hung on them, blessing God that dear old England had not quite forgotten the Englishmen who were upholding her cause against great odds in the heart of Ireland." Wolseley, says the historian, seems to have been in every respect well qualified for his post. He was a staunch Protestant, and had proved his zeal for liberty and true religion by causing the Mayor of Scarborough, who had made a speech in favour of King James, to be brought into the marketplace and well tossed in a blanket. Though regularly bred to war, he had a remarkable aptitude in drilling irregular troops. Wolseley lost no time in advancing upon a portion of the Irishry, and he speedily came up with Hamilton's army, which nearly twice outnumbered his own. "Shall we advance or retreat?" he asked of his small force, chiefly composed of "gentlemen and yeomen fighting, not for pay, but for their lands, their wives, their children, and their God." "Advance!" was thundered in response. Wolseley gave the word, "No Popery!" and the battle of Newton Butler followed, the Irish were utterly routed, and for a long time no quarter was given by the avengers. Fifteen hundred of the vanquished fell, and five hundred more were driven into Loch Erne and drowned. All the drums and all the colours of the P.ists were taken. Wolseley also distinguished himself at the Boyne. Sir Garnet has made his own omens, in a long course of noble services; but it is pleasant to read that under a Wolseley England has already inflicted terrible castigation upon savage and superstitious foes.

That her Majesty the Queen of England and the Empress of India will gladly do anything in her power to gratify the reasonable wishes of her Oriental subjects, none of them can entertain a doubt. But whether ours and their Sovereign will be advised to grant their last request, and proclaim that she is to be known in future as Shahan-Shah-i-Hind, Zili-Sabhani, which we are informed is the title which her Majesty ought to bear in Asia, is a question for the Duke of Argyll, and we hope that he will consider it well. Perhaps, as a Highland chieftain, he will not think the name so appalling as it seems to the Saxon, whose tendency is to abbreviate all titles, and who affectionately calls his very father a guv.

"I have no more to say. I die for her I love." Surely, no final utterance can be more simple and touching. A knight of old days rescuing his lady at the cost of his life, or the troubador who Fell beneath the foeman's glaive, could not have expressed himself more beautifully. Rolla, we think, when he has delivered Cora's child, falls with some such words. But there are circumstances. The last time the sentiment was used was on Monday last, at Durham, when it fell from the lips of one Charles Dawson. It would not seem to a reader of the line that the man who spoke it had murdered the woman of whom he spoke, and that he was in the hands of the executioner. The perversion of the meaning of words has seldom been more curiously illustrated. Among heroes, to die for a person is to die to save her; among the lower orders it means to be hanged for killing her. Mr. Disraeli's theory of two nations is certainly supported by the fact that we have two languages.

The Tichborne case is going on so pleasantly—at least up to the time at which we write—that it is quite delightful to read the advocate's speech and the gentle interpellations of the Court and the jury. The sensation is like that described in Melville's most remarkable novel, the "Whale," where the hero mentions the exquisite repose that flowed into his soul while his hands were engaged in breaking up the odoriferous lumps of fresh spermaceti. We hope that there is no contempt of Court in saying that the proceedings have an interest entirely apart from the "miserable business" itself. Instruction and amusement mingle in the reports. On Monday, for instance, we had a pleasant historical reminiscence of Napoleon I., with a keen annotation by the Chief Justice, who favours no "comparisons with long tails," as Perrault says. Then came an excellent repartee from a jurymen, who, hearing the defendant compared to a champagne-bottle, said it must be a magnum. Dr. Kenealy happily introduced Fielding's masterly picture of Tom Jones, who, solely out of grief for the loss of his benefactor, indulged in drink; and we had also the famous passage from Moore's Byron, wherein the poet is described as having spared on the day of his mother's funeral. The learned doctor mentioned that everybody had one weak point, and a jurymen demanded which was Dr. Kenealy's. "If I knew I would not tell you," laughed the advocate. Then we had a quotation from Lady Blessington's beautiful poem on the old man who remembered the voice of the young wife he had lost for so many years; a passage from Lord Brougham, who denounced flippant witnesses as those who meant to tell falsehood; a hint that there could be such a person as a female Pope; and, finally, a celebrated line from "Hamlet." All this interfusion of literature and wit helped to make a rather dull day's work a very interesting one. Has Dr. Kenealy, who has read almost everything, become acquainted with a poem in "Thro' the Looking Glass," the continuation of "Alice in Wonderland"? There is a verse therein which he might use in his peroration, and it is the piteous representation made by the little oysters to the carpenter and the walrus, when the two latter cease to be playful.

Leicester-square will probably be improved and beautified ere long, but when is anybody going either to beautify the Colosseum or to improve it off the face of Regent's Park. The huge pile seems a monument of ill-directed energy and enterprise. We speak without book, but we suppose that at no time in its history was it remunerative to the extent of a decent dividend. For years it has been a solitude. It has never had any romance for those who are still young, but, to adopt Macaulay's manner, "men, now past middle age and crowned with such glory as comes of grey hairs, are reminded of the time when on the supposed bench of the captive of St. Helena, and by the side of the cataract imitated from the Alpine torrent, they, watched by the melancholy eagle, pleaded not hopelessly at the ear of beauty." Such gentlemen have, however, outlived sentiment, and would like to know why something is not done with so valuable a site. The success of the Victoria-street flats seems to invite a similar experiment in the purer air and pleasanter scene of the park, and there is a railway station close to the place.

THE YARKUND MIS-ION.

We have engraved another of Captain E. F. Chapman's sketches of the journey of Mr. Forsyth's diplomatic mission to Yarkund and Cashgar. The road was through Ladak, or Middle Tibet, which is the upper valley of the Indus, north-east of Cashmere, and where the English official party were entertained, at the Buddhist Monastery of Hemis, with a comical masquerade, depicted in one of Captain Chapman's sketches. From this country they proceeded northward, by the Chang-Lung Pass, above the city of Leh, into the valley of the Nubra and the Shayok, whence they marched up the course of the Shayok river to the foot of the Karakorum mountain range. It was in the second week of October that they made their way through this wild highland country, and the cold in their tents at the nightly encampment was severe; but they enjoyed robust health. Our illustration shows the party, after crossing the Kardung, when descending the glacier by which they entered the Shayok valley, at an elevation of 10,000 ft. For this descent into the valley they had to change their ponies for yaks, or Tibet oxen, the safest beasts for riding down a glacier—stolid creatures that positively decline to be hurried. The riders, mounted on these shaggy, grunting animals, and muffled up in all the warm clothes that could be found, were helped forward by their attendants on foot. The beasts were pulled and encouraged up the steep zigzag by ragged Tartars, whose constant cry of "Oitch—kok—kok—kok;" proved that their practised lungs were not affected by the thinness of the air. As for the European travellers, their breathing was considerably affected by this circumstance, from the altitude of the position. There was great fear that the baggage would be drenched and spoiled, but the yaks faced the water bravely, and the Tartars (forty or fifty in number) did not hesitate to plunge in up to their waists, though it was nearly at freezing temperature. So they managed to carry everything safely over. The arrival of Mr. Forsyth's party in Yarkund has lately been announced.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Jan. 8.

The National Assembly resumes its sittings to-day after the brief holiday which it has allowed itself to take, and enters on the discussion of the proposed new municipal law for completely abolishing local self-government, which will certainly give rise to an animated, and possibly to a stormy, debate. Five Conservative Deputies have announced their intention of speaking in favour of the measure, which will be opposed by MM. Louis Blanc, Christophle, Pressensé, and Waddington, in the name of the Republican party. The Constitutional Committee finds itself in an embarrassing dilemma with regard to the proposed changes in the electoral law; no less than twenty-four different projects have been submitted to its consideration, but it will adopt none until the Government has made known its opinion. Several Cabinet Councils have been held with the view of deciding the point, but the Ministers are unable to agree among themselves, and it is probable that some time will elapse before the question receives a solution.

Not long ago a report was current to the effect that Count d'Arnim had remonstrated with the French Government on the violent language made use of by certain Bishops against Germany in their pastoral charges. M. de Fourtou, Minister of Education and Religion, has, it seems, addressed a circular to the prelates in question, in which he reminds them of the difficult circumstances in which the country is placed, and of the necessity which exists for maintaining friendly relations with foreign Powers. He reminds them that "it is by showing themselves to be animated by a spirit of moderation that they will the most efficaciously augment their own legitimate influence and contribute to that work of appeasement and general pacification which should be the object of their and the Government's joint efforts."

Not content with doing their utmost to gag the Paris and provincial press, the Government is now busy seizing Liberal foreign newspapers at the frontier. The Vienna Neue Freie Presse, two Belgian, and five Swiss journals are seized regularly every day. There seems to have been some ground for refusing admission into France of two of the Swiss papers, which are directed by Communist refugees; but the confiscation of the other journals, the tone of which is invariably moderate, is certainly a most arbitrary proceeding.

The Ministerial organs comment, with manifest delight upon the recent coup-d'état at Madrid, and institute comparisons with regard to it between France and Spain. Several of the Royalist journals are now urging the Government to throw aside the semblance of legality with which they have hitherto invested their many arbitrary measures, and to hasten to dissolve the Assembly and place the Comte de Chambord on the throne. An extremely restrictive electoral law would, in their opinion, ensure the re-election of the present majority, and prevent that of most of the Republican deputies.

The Parquet of Rambouillet is now actively engaged in investigating a series of horrible murders, of which the neighbourhood of Angerville has been the scene during the past year. It seems that in January last a garde-chasse and his wife were found assassinated in their cottage at Angerville, with their heads beaten in and almost separated from their bodies. A rigorous, but fruitless, search was made to discover the perpetrator of the crime, and the excitement caused by the event was dying out when, one evening in October, the servant of the curé of the neighbouring village of Vaugrigneuse, on answering the door of the presbytery, found herself assaulted by an individual who beat her about the head, but at once took to flight on her crying for help. Four days afterwards an old man named Bunet was found dead between the two mattresses of his bed, having been struck over the head with a hatchet. A fowling-piece, a small sum of money, and several titres de rente had been stolen by the murderer, whom the police were unable to discover. At the end of the month following an individual named Duval, residing at the hamlet of Forges-lès-Bains was assassinated in the same manner as Bunet, the murderer carrying off all the valuables in the house. The last crime was committed on the night preceding Christmas Eve, when two elderly unmarried ladies residing at St. Maurice were murdered in a similarly barbarous style, their money and jewellery being stolen. The whole district, as may be supposed, is panic-struck; houses are barricaded at night-time, and no one dares to venture out after six o'clock. The Paris detective police have charged themselves with the affair, but as yet have failed to discover the criminal.

The Second Council of War is trying three commissioned and three non-commissioned officers of the Francs-Tireurs de la Marne, who, regardless of the armistice of Jan. 28, 1871, continued hostilities against the Prussians subsequent to that date, and who, having arrested a carter named Fritz, formed themselves into a court-martial, condemned him without proof as a Prussian spy, and had him summarily shot.

The ex-King Francis II. of Naples has arrived here, and will take up his residence in the suburb of St. Mandé.

On Monday the Admiralty Court gave its verdict in the inquiry it has instituted into the loss of the steamer Ville du Havre. The Court declares that the conduct of the captain and crew of that vessel was irreproachable, and that the whole blame of the collision rests with the Lochearn, which, it says, was worked contrary to every rule of the International Maritime Code.

SPAIN.

As had been anticipated, a Ministerial crisis has at length occurred in Spain, accompanied by the resignation of Senor Castelar, the dissolution of the Cortes by General Pavia, and the assumption of the presidency by Marshal Serrano. The Cortes were reopened on Friday week, when Senor Castelar read a message from the Government. The debate which followed lasted from two o'clock on Friday afternoon until four o'clock on Saturday morning. Senor Castelar was defeated by a majority of 120 in two consecutive divisions, and the Cabinet resigned; whereupon General Pavia, the Captain-General of Madrid, sent a letter to Senor Salmeron calling upon him to dissolve the Cortes. After a vain attempt to induce Senor Castelar to resume office, a company of Guards entered the House and ejected all the deputies. General Pavia declared the Cortes dissolved, on the plea that thus only could the country be saved. The General then summoned the most eminent men of all parties, except the Carlists and the Intransigentes, with a view to the formation of a Cabinet.

A new Ministry has been formed, under the presidency of Marshal Serrano, as chief of the Executive power of the Republic. It is composed as follows:—Senor Sagasta, Minister of Foreign Affairs; Senor Zavala, Minister of War; Senor Figuerola, Minister of Justice; Senor Becerra, Minister of Agriculture; Senor Echegaray, Minister of Finance; Senor Garcia Ruiz, Minister of the Interior; Senor Topete, Minister of Marine.

The new Minister of the Interior has addressed a circular to the governors of the provinces, in which he describes the dissolution of the Cortes by General Pavia as the worthy commencement of the high and difficult mission undertaken by the Government. That mission is principally to re-establish order, and to show that order is compatible with a Republic and liberty.

Senor Castelar has addressed a letter to his countrymen, in which he protests, "with all the energy of his soul" against "the brutal act of violence committed against the Constituent Cortes by the Captain-General of Madrid."

There were disturbances at Valladolid and Saragossa, but order was speedily re-established. Tranquillity prevails in Madrid.

The siege of Carthage continues, and in the north an encounter with the Carlists is believed to be imminent.

The Spanish representatives in Paris, Brussels, and Lisbon have sent in their resignations in consequence of the change of Government.

PORTUGAL.

Yesterday week the King opened the Cortes in person, the Royal family being present in a tribune splendidly decorated for the occasion. His Majesty's speech ended with a congratulation of the Chambers on the tranquil and prosperous condition of the country.

HOLLAND.

According to advices received from Acheen, the Dutch batteries had been established within range of the Kraton, and were to commence bombarding that position on the 3rd inst. unless the Acheenese surrendered. Cholera and other diseases are reported to prevail in the Dutch camp, causing great mortality, chiefly among the native troops.

DENMARK.

A Ministerial movement at Copenhagen has given great offence to the Radicals. A Cabinet Council, at which the King presided, was held on Monday, when it was decided, in spite of the vote of want of confidence, to retain the entire Ministry.

GERMANY.

On New-Year's Day the German Emperor was able to receive congratulatory visits from the Crown Prince, the Duke of Edinburgh, and other members of the Royal family. After their departure his Majesty showed himself at the window of the palace, and was warmly cheered by the crowd which had assembled outside. For the first time since his indisposition, the Emperor-King drove out on Wednesday.

Dr. Foster, Bishop of Breslau, one of the most resolute opponents of the Falck laws, has had his salary stopped from New-Year's Day. His offence consists in refusing to comply with the new provisions for ecclesiastical appointments.

AMERICA.

The official correspondence respecting the seizure of the Virginian has been laid before the United States Congress, together with a message on the subject from President Grant. He maintains that the capture of the vessel and the execution of the crew were violations of international law and treaty obligations. Spain, by surrendering the Virginian, admitted these principles; and the President considers the settlement of the question a just one, and calculated to promote good relations between the two countries.

The trial of ex-Mayor Hall, of New York, for alleged complicity in the municipal frauds, terminated, on the 24th ult., in a verdict of acquittal.

INDIA.

The Viceroy of India continues his weekly telegrams respecting the scarcity in India. Under date of Calcutta, Jan. 2, he describes the condition of the various districts, and states that the arrangements for storage and distribution are advancing. Much of the anxiety on account of Oude had been removed by the rainfall.

A Calcutta telegram of Wednesday's date reports a considerable increase in the number of people applying for relief employment. The large exportation of grain from districts where the crop had not failed is now producing a rise in prices.

A St. Petersburg telegram states that famine is raging in the Government of Samara, lying between the Ural and the Volga.

A Melbourne telegram states that the Australian summer is unusually hot and dry—an evil omen for the wheat crops.

It is announced that Russia has consented to take part in the Universal Postal Congress.

The cable between Shanghai and Amoy is repaired, and communication with Hong-Kong is restored.

Mount Vesuvius is again showing premonitory symptoms of an eruption. Smoke issues in dense quantities, and subterranean sounds are heard.

Accounts of the Challenger show that the officers are fêted at every port in which the good ship anchors. Having been the lions of Capetown for a period of six weeks, they have left for the Antarctic regions.

The Extra Supplement.

"THERE'S NO PLACE LIKE HOME."

The picture by Sir Edwin Landseer which we engrave for our Special Supplement (by permission of Messrs. Henry Graves and Co., Pall-mall) may be accepted as an appropriate Fine-Art illustration on the occasion of the Landseer Exhibition at Burlington House, although the original forms part of the Sheepshanks Collection at the South Kensington Museum. The picture is a type of those characteristics in Sir Edwin's works which have won for him the distinction of being regarded as "the Shakespeare of the world of dogs." A Scotch terrier has just returned to the barrel which has been adapted to form his kennel, and he raises a whine of satisfaction as he recognises the old familiar home. A snail crawling over the stone at the entrance to the kennel, and carrying "home" with it on its back in its shell, further suggests lifelong attachment to the dwelling-place of early associations. Some dogs do, in point of fact, both bark and whine, as well as prick up their ears, and wag their tails—that great vehicle of their emotions—on recognising formerly familiar places as well as persons; and Sir Edwin has seized on the whine to suggest an analogy between it and the beautiful old song, "Home, Sweet Home," that a human being might sing under corresponding circumstances. When we remember how some dogs whine on hearing music the comparison may seem less far-fetched. A dog, when it whines, too, turns up its head and its eyes, and one can fancy all sorts of sentimental meanings in the bright, peculiarly sagacious eyes of a Scotch terrier when upturned. It was doubtless to this power of indicating resemblances to man in the lower animals—real in some instances, though purely imaginary, it may be, in most cases—that our pictorial Æsop owed his wide popularity. It is probably not difficult to transfer expressive attitudes, gestures, and expressions from human beings to animals where they could hardly be found except accidentally. But no painter had ever attempted this to nearly the same extent, or with a tithe of Sir Edwin's success, before; hence the great human interest in his works, and their strong appeal to that love of animals which is a national characteristic; and hence, by a natural consequence, his originality and unrivalled popularity as a painter of animal life. The picture was exhibited at the Old British Institution in 1842.

Mr. William White, the recipient of the Royal Academy gold medal of 1873 for sculpture, received his instructions in art from Mr. F. J. Williamson, of Esher.

During the past year 1026 informations were laid by the Liverpool School Board against parents or guardians for neglecting to send children under their care to school, and in four fifths of the cases fines ranging from 3s. 6d. to 5s. were imposed.

The relation of trade unionism to the law of the land was discussed at a large trade demonstration held at Dundee on Saturday. Twenty-seven speeches were made from three platforms, and a resolution was passed protesting against the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the criminal clauses of the Master and Servant Act, and the application of the law of conspiracy to questions of labour.

A recent telegram from Australia informs us that the English cricketers have in some measure atoned for the unexpected defeat they received from the Eighteen of Melbourne. In a match against Twenty-two of Ballarat the Eleven made 470, of which number Mr. W. G. Grace scored 126. Their opponents made 274 in their first innings, and the match ended in a draw, there being no time to finish it in the three days.

A thunderstorm of great severity was experienced on Friday night and Saturday morning last week in the north and north-west of Scotland. The accounts state that the sky was lighted up for several hours by incessant flashes of lightning. Communication between the mainland of Shetland and the west and north-islands has been cut off, and postal and telegraphic communication with Mull interrupted on account of the storm.

Owing to the high prices of provisions and coal, Miss Marsh is constrained to make another earnest appeal on behalf of the Blackrook Convalescent Hospital, Brighton, and the Orphan Home, late of Beckenham, but now of Nonington. Contributions will be gratefully received either by her sister, Mrs. Chalmers, or herself, at Nonington Vicarage, Wingham, Kent; or by Mr. J. W. Hornbuckle, London Hospital.

The Exchequer accounts published in the Gazette supply some particulars which were not included in the quarterly and annual revenue returns issued last week. It appears that while during the first nine months of the financial year the national receipts amounted to £52,788,593, the expenditure in the same period was £56,440,802. The balance in the Bank of England on the 31st ult. was nearly three millions and a half.

Mr. Arthur Arnold having made a representation to the Premier that the Nonconformists of Huntingdon are aggrieved at the exclusion of all members of their body from the county magistracy, Mr. Gladstone has stated, in reply, that the case seems to be one giving much ground for complaint as to the exercise of the powers of the lord lieutenant; but he is unable to say whether it will be in the power of the Lord Chancellor to suggest any method of relief.

After a long and careful inquiry into the circumstances of the disastrous collision in the Atlantic, Mr. Maude yesterday week announced the unanimous decision of the Court, which was that no blame attached to the officers of the Lochearn. (It will be seen that the French Admiralty Court has arrived at an entirely opposite conclusion.) Captain Robertson, master of the sailing ship, stated publicly that none of the stories which had got about concerning the French captain had emanated from him, and that the last thing he should have thought of would have been to take away the character of so brave a man.

The Hon. Eliot Constantine Yorke has succeeded his brother, Viscount Royston, now Earl of Hardwicke, as Conservative M.P. for Cambridgeshire. The official declaration of the poll at Stroud shows that the Conservative candidate, Mr. Dorington, gained a majority of 391 over the Liberal, Sir Henry Havelock, the respective numbers being 2817 and 2426. Mr. Bright's election expenses on the occasion of his unopposed return as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster are officially given at £29. The expenses of Mr. John Jaffray, the Liberal candidate at the recent contest for the eastern division of Staffordshire, are returned at £3549 10s. 3d. The Liberals of Exeter have resolved to petition against the return of Mr. A. Mills, and the Sheriff has received notice of the filing of the petition, which alleges bribery and treating.

Mr. Gilmore Evans, a barrister, of Serjeants' Inn, Chancery-lane, shot himself with a revolver yesterday week. He had just received a Government appointment of £800 a year (the magistracy to the Royal Commission), and it is suggested that his brain had given way under the pressure of a severe examination which he had just undergone.

Mr. R. W. Crawford, M.P., in presiding at the half-yearly meeting of the East Indian Railway Company, yesterday week, mentioned incidentally that it was thought in England that the people of Bengal depended entirely upon rice as their food; but this was not so. A large proportion of the population of Bengal were eaters of wheat, and the wheat crops this season were both good and ample.

The subject of providing "cabmen's rests" for the purpose of supplying a place of shelter to the drivers upon the stands having been brought before Colonel Henderson, he has replied that the statutory powers possessed by him of appointing stands for hackney carriages do not extend to the proposed erections. While, however, he cannot either authorise or sanction them, he is advised that no duty is thrown upon him of proceeding against those who erect such places.

The arrangements at present made by the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress for festivities at the Mansion House include the following:—A conversation on behalf of the Home for Little Boys, to take place on the 13th inst.; the household banquet on the 12th inst.; the banquet to the Court of Aldermen on the 20th inst.; a juvenile ball on the 22nd inst.; and a banquet to a section of the Common Council on the 27th inst. A New-Year's dinner was given, yesterday week, at the Boys' Refuge, Great Queen-street, to seven hundred and fifty protégés of that flourishing institution. Some came from the training-ship Chichester, others from the farm school, but most of them from the London refuges. After a substantial meal, the boys were marched to the Freemasons' Hall, where a public prize distribution took place, under the presidency of Alderman Sir R. Carden, acting as substitute for the Earl of Shaftesbury.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers at the end of the first week in January, 1874, was 105,795, of whom 36,226 were in work-houses and 69,569 were in receipt of outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 4056, 16,852, and 44,681 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 601 of whom 435 were men, 133 women, and 33 children under sixteen.

A discussion of some length took place, on Tuesday's meeting of the Commissioners of Sewers, upon the propriety of removing the asphalt pavements in the City. Several memorials had been presented to the Commissioners urging them to do so, on the ground that the slippery nature of the material caused a large number of serious accidents to horses, and a consequent stoppage of the traffic. A motion was adopted referring the matter to the streets committee, and authorising them to try experiments with a view of ascertaining whether some plan could not be devised for rendering the asphalt less dangerous.

At a meeting of the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society, held at Hibernia Chambers, London Bridge—Captain the Hon. Francis Maude, R.N., in the chair—the silver medal and a pecuniary reward were given to George Randall, chief mate, and four of the crew of the steam-ship Sardinian, for their gallant exertions in manning the jolly-boat and, after two attempts, saving W. Littlefield and W. Tucker, two of the crew of the British Banner, of London, which had been run down in a strong wind and heavy sea off Winterton, on Oct. 23 last, by the steam-ship Hibernia, when the captain and five men were drowned. The secretary, Captain Symons, R.N., reported that 4635 widows, orphans, and aged parents had been relieved, and five silver medals and £56 5s. had been voted for assisting at the saving of twenty-one lives during the past year. The sum of £1000, being a fourth donation of a like sum, had been paid to the society's bankers by "H. D. Y."

There were 2592 births and 1842 deaths registered in London last week, which were respectively 538 and 146 above the average. This excess both of births and deaths, the Registrar-General observes, is doubtless to a considerable extent due to the delay in registration caused by the Christmas holidays in the previous week. The annual death-rate from all causes, which in the two previous weeks had been equal to 38 and 24 per 1000, was last week 29. Excepting two cold days at the beginning of the week, the temperature was considerably above the average. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis were 721, and exceeded by 138 the corrected weekly average; 351 resulted from bronchitis, 175 from phthisis, 132 from pneumonia, and 25 from asthma. It is more than probable that but for the Christmas holidays a considerable proportion of these deaths would have been registered in the previous week. The fatal cases of measles were 108, exceeding the average by 64. The deaths referred to fever were 31 last week: 22 were certified as enteric or typhoid, 3 as typhus, and 6 as simple continued fever. There were 4 deaths from smallpox, 18 from scarlet fever, 2 from diphtheria, 69 from whooping-cough, 12 from diarrhoea, and 5 from fractures and contusions resulting from negligence or accident, caused by horses or vehicles in the streets. The widow of a baker died, on the 28th ult., in Britannia-street, Hoxton New Town, who is stated to have been born in Edinburgh, on Nov. 5, 1773, and would, therefore, be aged rather more than one hundred years.

Aitken and Tilburn, of Glasgow.

The Canadian Government has decided immediately to dissolve Parliament, and to issue writs for a general election. A telegram has been received at Wentworth House, the residence of Earl Fitzwilliam, announcing the total destruction of Lord Milton's residence in Canada. Everything valuable is reported to have been destroyed, and a domestic servant, a young woman from Wentworth, has perished in the flames.

By the arrival of a mail from the Cape of Good Hope we have news up to Dec. 4. The tribe of Zulus, which had risen against the Government of Natal through a dispute about the registration of arms, had fled inland, whither an expedition of natives and volunteers was about to follow them. Large numbers of women and children belonging to the rebel tribe have been captured and apprenticed out a distance from their former homes.

The restoration of Salisbury Cathedral in several parts is being prosecuted, a legacy of nearly £5000, under the will of the late Mr. Holmes, a London merchant, having been received during the last year. Attention has been bestowed on the eastern transepts and the aisles of the choir, and the Lady Chapel and the Audley Chapel, several fresh works having been recently ordered.

Earl Fitzwilliam has received from the Archbishop of York an answer to the resolutions sent to him from the recent meeting at York on the subject of "private confession." His Grace says that anyone who holds the opinion that Christ has instituted in His Church a special means for the remission of sin after baptism, and that the special means consists in the application of the power of absolution to individual souls after private confession, must needs confess that the Prayer-book is very badly framed for such a system.

The Bishop of London, in the course of his sermon at St. Paul's Cathedral, on Sunday night, made a protest against a form of religion much in vogue among the educated classes at the present day. It is, said his Lordship, a kind of sentimental religion, which loves to dream over devotional books, over what may be termed the poetry of Christianity; which makes much of the beauties of architecture and music, and longs for a gorgeous ritual such as primitive Christianity never wanted, and such as is not required now. This religion, said the Bishop, knows nothing of the stern realities of life, for mere religious sentiment by no means necessarily involves self-denial. It is not even connected with the doing of God's will, while it may exist with grosser sin. It often leads to irreligion and vanity; it seldom leads to Christ.

The life-boats of the National Life-Boat Institution saved 469 persons from drowning last year. Altogether, the institution has contributed, from its formation, to the saving of 22,151 shipwrecked persons, for which services it has granted 936 gold and silver medals and £41,374.

FREETOWN, SIERRA LEONE.—FROM A

A NEGRO STRIKE AT SIERRA LEONE

TO THE GOLD COAST OF AFRICA.

A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

NEGRO VISITORS ON BOARD THE VOLTA.

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

Probably, to mankind in general, the mystery of the Druids of Oxford is as unknown as the mystery of the prehistoric Druids of Britain. Whatever may be the secret mission or purpose of the Oxford fraternity, there is one act of theirs which the public in a manner is invited to witness—namely, an annual feast to the members of that ancient city. For some years the Druids have had the advantage of exhibiting before the world a full-grown Secretary of State in an hour, ostensibly of ease, but probably in fact rather troubled, because obliged to perform that rhetorical feat—necessary to all responsible Ministers—of speaking a great deal and saying as little as possible. With him, hitherto, has been a very rising statesman, who, in the comparatively short period that he has been a member of the House of Commons, has made a decided mark. This gentleman, having expanded or subsided, according to opinion, from a very free and independent Radical into a Solicitor-General, the Druids had the satisfaction of having the Government doubly represented on a recent occasion. Since that memorable night when, in propounding his great scheme of Army reform, he, for the first time in his Parliamentary career, enchaind the attention and almost charmed the ear of the House, Mr. Cardwell has exhibited new powers as a rhetorician. In his speeches now there is always, apart from their serious matter, variety, even to a dash of humour, which, issuing from him in the same dry, drony tones in which he utters statistics and prediction, are therefore the more irresistibly taking. At Oxford, on New-Year's Day, he was in excellent vein. Without abandoning the reticence incumbent on a Cabinet Minister, he almost told something of Ministerial doings and Ministerial intentions. Nothing could have been better than the coquettish way in which, while admitting that a Government could not expect to be appreciated, let them act ever so wisely, he insinuated a strong case for that to which he belonged. A sketch of what taxation was before the inauguration of that policy of free trade of which the present Ministry are ardent professors was at once comprehensive and amusing. Perhaps a little too much stress was laid on one point when he said that if an Englishman wanted to wash himself his soap was taxed, because, unless the extension of the franchise has brought about a social and personal revolution, two thirds of the population of this country are still content to be called "the great unwashed," and therefore free soap would probably not address itself powerfully to their sympathies. But in the long list of articles which have been relieved from fiscal burdens by those conductors of public affairs of whom Mr. Gladstone was originally one, this item had a right to its place, and so it figured laudably in the catalogue. But Mr. Cardwell was more interesting, as he was very free of speech, on a topic which may be exciting the attention of the general public, but which has certainly been a prominent topic in out-of-Parliament speeches, and will be made much capital of by in-Parliamentary censors—namely, the Ashantee war. By the frankness with which he spoke, and by the information he afforded, Mr. Cardwell has possibly anticipated many a florid denunciation of the Government in regard to this matter, which has been elaborately prepared for the Session. Judiciously, he abstained from alluding to the origin and fountain of those vexatious, those inglorious, hostilities, with regard to which he might have made a strong point, and he confined himself to the administrative action of the Government, and his own department in particular. From his clear statement, it would appear that the War Office and its satellites are in excellent trim. The expedition to the Gold Coast has evidently been planned with judgment, and its details carried out with a celerity and a due adaptation to the peculiar circumstances of the case which are highly creditable to all concerned; and it cannot but be observed that Mr. Cardwell did not vaunt himself and his department for what has been done, is doing, and will be done, but spoke of it as a matter of ordinary routine. When he came to touch on a rather prickly subject, so far as the Dons of the University are concerned—namely, the establishment of a military central dépôt at Oxford—he was happy in his illustration of the non-reforming tendencies of its governing body in former times: the traditions and something more of which still lurk in some part of that august body which flourishes to-day. Few were, perhaps, aware, until Mr. Cardwell told us, that the ruling powers of the University resisted the introduction of Greek into its schools at the Reformation, and could only be induced to consent to the innovation by the intervention of that stringent, rough-and-ready reformer, Harry VIII., whose hand was in just then for dealing with bodies of cloistered drones.

Palpably Sir William Vernon Harcourt was in the best possible spirits. However he may have attributed his elation to the factitious influence of the festivity of which he was partaking, it is more than probable that, cynical as he is, he was conscious that he appeared before his Druidical friends with several cubits added to his political and legal stature. For awhile he nearly revelled in drollery; and there is no question that his humour is always apt, and not the less effective for the infusion of bitter that it invariably contains, while his utterance of jests or jocular epigrams is intensified by the grim expression that he preserves in the lower part of his face, only his eyes lighting up in unison with his smart sayings. On this occasion, when he got into facts and statistics he did not cease to be humorous. Perhaps for the first time the subject of taxation was greeted by continuous laughter; the more spontaneous and hearty withal because the talk was of relief from imposts, with a subtle insinuation that there was more to come in that way. When he was talking of that phase of taxation which is known as rates he gave full vent to his peculiar faculty of illustrating argument by facetiousness. A theory that he started was a bold one—namely, that the vast expansion of the burden of rates was owing to the crochets of philosophers and sociologists, who "rave, recite, and madden through the land." It may be that he had an acute recollection of the circumstance that the place he has hitherto occupied in the House brought him day by day in close contact with several of these philosophical politicians, and he was perhaps chuckling over the thought that by his transplantation to the Treasury Bench he will have escaped from much of that contact. He may not have remembered that one of the most rampant of that class has also gone to the Treasury Bench, and so will not be removed from him by distance; but, if he did not forget that, he may perhaps have comforted himself by the reflection that in that empyrean of public life there exists a system of insensate muzzling of speech, which effectually extinguishes troublesome individuality, even in the person of a philosophical member. A solid part of the Solicitor-General's speech was that wherein he fulfilled a promise given to his constituents, the other day, that he would expound his ideas on the land question; but even this he touched with a free hand and in the airy lightsome spirit which pervaded a speech which, possibly being the last he will deliver for some time with the power of liberating his mind, must have had a special value to his audience, apart from its many undoubted intrinsic merits.

In the matter of extra-Parliamentary utterances, Mr. Isaac Butt is a sort of member for all Ireland. Doubtless he himself may think that, as the foremost speaking representative of the Home-Rule movement, he has a good claim to the above distinction, and possibly sometimes, in the enthusiasm of his temperament, he may deem himself now what O'Connell was once to the Irish people. He has on many occasions come with his Home-Rule nostrum to places in England; and now he has made an incursion into Scotland. In Glasgow there is a large Irish element, which, we fancy, is one with which the native inhabitants of that city are not particularly fascinated; and it may be so in Greenock; but it is hardly to be imagined that such an element exists to speak of in Edinburgh. The modern Athens may require a few non-national bricklayers; but it may be thought that she has not many, or not any, attractions for the class of immigrating Irish. However, Mr. Butt has done what he could in the way of the sound-and-fury eloquence which belongs to him to rouse the mind of those of his countrymen who are tarrying in the land of an unkindred Celtic people. The uniform reports that the meetings he has called have been very thinly attended show that, if he has got together typical Irish audiences large enough to swear by, he has not succeeded in inoculating the Scotch with his Home-Rule lymph. He has not on this subject the advantageous starting-point in Scotland which he possesses in Ireland; for the latter is a conquered country, whereas, as we said in this column very recently, Scotland annexed England and Ireland, and that makes all the difference in national feeling.

MUSIC.

Again, this week, there is but little to record of musical doings in London. Pantomime and other Christmas amusements still retain their predominant attractions for resident and visiting audiences. Before the end of the month, however, music will have resumed that activity and importance which now have but brief cessation at any time during the year.

The only occurrences between our last writing and this have been the performance of "The Messiah," under Mr. W. Carter's direction, at the Royal Albert Hall, on the evening of New-Year's Day; and the resumption of the London Ballad Concerts at St. James's Hall, last Saturday afternoon, as intimated in our previous Number. On the latter occasion the solo vocalists were Misses Edith Wynne, Sophie Ferrari, Enriquez, and Antoinette Sterling; Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Pyatt, and Mr. George Perren, the latter of whom replaced Mr. Sims Reeves, absent from illness. The London Vocal Union contributed some glees and part-songs, and Mr. Sydney Smith played two brilliant pianoforte pieces of his own composition. Another of the Ballad Concerts will be given this afternoon.

Haydn's "Creation" was announced to be given by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society on Thursday, when Signor Giulio Perkin was to make his first appearance in London.

Next Monday will bring back Dr. von Bulow, after his brief absence on the Continent, the reappearance of the great pianist being announced in the programme of the Popular Concert of that evening.

Another resumption of serial concerts will be at the Crystal Palace on Saturday afternoon next.

The dates of the principal serial concerts of the forthcoming season have already been given by us, with the exception of the New Philharmonic, which institution has recently announced its performances to commence immediately after Easter, under the direction of Dr. Wyld and Herr Ganz.

The King of Bavaria has conferred on Richard Wagner, the composer, the Order of Maximilian for Science and Art.

THEATRES.

HAYMARKET.

Last Saturday Mr. Gilbert introduced to the boards of "the Little Theatre" a new five-act comedy, entitled "Charity." The piece belongs to that morbid class of productions which we have had only too frequent occasion to condemn. The more prominent on our list are the "Formosa" of Mr. Boucicault, and "The New Magdalen" of Mr. Wilkie Collins. In the first of these plays, a member of the frail sisterhood was destined to marry a gentleman of title; but this denouement having attracted the attention of the Chamberlain, it was omitted in the later performances of the piece. In the second of these plays the warning was disregarded, and the story actually ends with the union of the repentant frail one to a clergyman. Mr. Gilbert soars a higher flight, and places his reformed delinquent under the protection of a colonial Bishop. It is not our intention to state the fable of this drama, because in one part of it the structure of the story so breaks down that we cannot understand it, and makes also of the last act an unsatisfactory mélange of incidents which serve only to bewilder the audience. The heroine, as performed by Miss Robertson, is an interesting as well as a benevolent lady, whose conduct and religious principles are unimpeachable, but whose notions of marriage are not those of the un-charitable world. Opposed to her are the two Smaileys, father and son (Mr. Howe and Mr. Kendal), whose principles of action are altogether mundane, but severely moral, in the conventional sense of morality, and who carry out in their conduct those principles with a logical exactness which allows no place for impulse and ignores all the feelings of the heart. These in particular are cautiously to be guarded against, in the preliminaries of marriage; and in that proposed between the daughter of Mrs. Vanbrugh and Smailey, junior, the young lover is especially careful not to be misled by his emotions. Old Smailey, however, is not so guiltless a personage as might be expected, for in his hot youth he had dealings with the tramp, Ruth Tredget (Mrs. Alfred Mellon), which oblige him to consult her wishes, and at last lead to his downfall. As to Ruth Tredget herself, she is one of the objects of Mrs. Vanbrugh's bounty, which has redeemed her from degradation and placed her in a respectable position. All these parts were admirably acted. One of the minor agencies of the piece is one Fitz-Partington (Mr. Buckstone), who, as a private-inquiry detective, has undertaken two jobs—one, that of ascertaining Mrs. Vanbrugh's antecedents, and the other that of tracing a forgery to the elder Smailey. The comedy implied in such a character was skillfully brought out by the veteran actor, who manifested more than ordinary liking for the part. Mr. Chippendale, as Dr. Athelney, the colonial Bishop-elect, identified himself with the pious and compassionate churchman, who serves as chorus for the action. Much of the dialogue is telling and brilliant; but nothing can atone for the misconstruction of the story or the perplexities involved in the legal matters that form its basis. It is impossible, therefore, for an audience to feel any real interest in the general development. The theme of the drama is, as we have already suggested, one of those objectionable subjects which are seldom treated, even in the pulpit, and are altogether unfitted for the boards. We trust that managers will be taught by the failure of this experiment to abstain from attempting a false excitement by tampering with topics not suitable for public discussion.

VAUDEVILLE.

A new burlesque was produced at this theatre on Saturday. It is entitled "Ruy Blas Righted; or, the Love, the Luggar, and the Lackey." When we mention that it is written by Mr. Reece it will be concluded that it was not without the elements of success, and, indeed, these were abundantly prominent in the composition. The satire of the dialogue extends far beyond the limits of the argument, and includes some political cartoons which provoked rather unseemly laughter. This affection for personality which has crept in amongst our burlesque-writers is much to be regretted, and qualifies injuriously much of the otherwise good work deserving of considerable praise. Messrs James and Thorne elicit some excellent fun out of the materials supplied by the writer. Altogether, the entertainment had a capital reception.

GAIETY.

One of Mr. Dickens's stories, "The Battle of Life," has been produced on the stage of this theatre with success. The adaptation has been skillfully made by his son, who has improved on the attempts hitherto accepted. The story has, indeed, been frequently dramatised. It lends itself readily to the stage, being divided into three parts. The adapter has kept close to the author's text, and we have therefore now a genuine representation. The characters are well supported; Miss Carlisle being graceful as Marion, Mr. Charles Neville an acceptable Alfred, and Mr. Harcourt an impressive Michael Warden. Mr. Toole as Ben Britain, and Miss Farren as Clemency Newcome, support their humorous episode with heartiness, animation, and, where needed, with pathetic power.

CHARING CROSS.

On Monday a new drama, by Mr. John Daly Resemerer, was produced, entitled "Forget and Forgive." It is a piece after an old-fashioned type, written partly in easy blank verse, and containing a pathetic story. This play, in its progress, succeeded in pleasing and interesting; and there are points in its dialogue which give opportunity for very excellent acting. The characters, for the most part, are powerfully supported. Mr. Creswick and his son sustained the principal rôles—the former that of Tyrrel, a London merchant, and the latter that of Edmund Gray, a young artist. Edmund has just lost his mother, who has died uttering maledictions on his unknown father, by whom she has been greatly wronged. He is poor, and for a loan desires to deposit a picture with the merchant as a security, to which Tyrrel consents. After his departure, Tyrrel discovers that it is the portrait of his deserted wife, and that in all probability the borrower is his own son. This scene was acted by Mr. Creswick with great tact and feeling, and fully secured the success of the first act. The second shows us the young artist taking the likeness of Lady Mabel, the daughter of Lord Self; and we soon perceive that they are mutually smitten. He is ignorant of her identity, but none the less cherishes a passion which he trusts Providence may one day gratify. The part of Mabel is carefully sustained by Miss Louise Carlyle, and is calculated to take a strong hold on the sympathies of the audience. Nor less powerful in another way is the character of Lord Self, which is admirably interpreted by Mr. Lin Rayne. His Lordship is a professed gambler, and encounters Luredin, Tyrrel's nephew (Mr. W. Holman), at play, and wins from him all his money. The young man is driven to desperation, and forges on his uncle, with the connivance of Enoch Hornbeam, the confidential clerk of the firm (Mr. A. Wood); a part which is most ably supported, and makes a decided impression on the audience. The wily villain induces Luredin to wed his daughter, Anne, foster-sister to Mabel (Miss Emily Seymour). Anne, though sorely tempted by her father to wrong-doing, is an estimable person, and in the end influences the catastrophe, converting it to a happy one from what threatened to be a tragic termination. Lord Self has contracted to marry his daughter to the rich merchant, in return for monetary advances. Meanwhile, Tyrrel has induced Gray to accept his patronage, and thus the young lover and the affianced lady are brought together. Lord Self sees the necessity for their separation, and willingly joins in a scheme with Hornbeam to fix Luredin's forgeries on Tyrrel's protégé. But Anne Hornbeam comes to the rescue. Edmund, having left the house from motives of honour, is represented as having fled from the consequences of his ungrateful guilt; but Anne induces her husband to bring back the fugitive, and to acknowledge his own criminality. Tyrrel, having been made aware of the love subsisting between Mabel and Edmund, willingly seizes the opportunity of making atonement, and resigns his claims to the lady in favour of his son. The story is clearly told, and the characters are well depicted and ably acted. The action, moreover, is illustrated by appropriate scenery. Altogether, the playwright and the players deserve unqualified commendation, and the production of a drama of such sterling merit does credit to the management. It is, indeed, a dramatic poem of which Lillo might have been proud.

MR. F. C. BURNAND'S READINGS.

The practice of an author reading his works before a sympathising audience is one sanctioned by the custom of antiquity and by the example of some modern authors of great merit. Ordinary writers need not make the attempt, for they would assuredly fail. Mr. Burnand has won his laurels, and may therefore address the public with confidence. He has done so, and given to it his "Happy Thoughts," not only visibly with the pen, but in audible speech. It is pleasant to hear the sound of an author's voice who has pleased already with his silent books. Mr. Burnand has selected from his works two narratives. The first part of his reading is occupied with the whimsical description of his journey from Chopford to Furze, and his mistakes both at Furze Lodge and Furze Cottage. This part contains the portrait of a clever girl in the country, which everyone will recognise as true to the life. His evening at Plyte Fraser's, and the curious song which he is compelled to sing there, under circumstances adverse to success, are very amusing. The second part gives his miseries on board the yacht Sylphide, and contains also another girlish portrait—not, however, of a clever, but of a cunningly-simple young lady, who imposes on him very disagreeable tasks. In both parts Mr. Burnand is the hero of his own story—the Clown of his own pantomime—and is not afraid to exhibit his blunders and failures before an audience which laughs at as well as with him. Mr. Burnand can afford this, for he is an excellent mimic as well as a good reader, and historically acts out the characters of his own creation. His powers of impersonation are really great, his voice is clear and distinct, his humour genial and hearty. He provokes frequent laughter, and is sometimes exceedingly droll. It is evident he is well qualified to succeed in his especial aim—that of amusing a Christmas audience. For this purpose he has opened an entirely new gallery—being a spacious hall adjoining Hengler's, in Argyll-street—which we recommend our readers to visit without delay.

Lord Aberdare was, on Thursday week, present at the opening of new board schools in the neighbourhood of Cardiff, and, in the course of some remarks, expressed his approval of the plan pursued by the British and Foreign School Society as a basis for school operations.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

VIBRATION OF REEDS, STRINGS, AND PLATES.

Professor Tyndall began his third lecture on the Motions and Sensation of Sound, on Thursday week, Jan. 1, by stating that the action of reeds or vibrating tongues in the harmonica, concertina, and similar instruments, resembles that of the syren; and that by associating a suitable pipe with reeds the quality of the human voice might be imparted to their tones. In fact, the vocal organ in man is a reed instrument, the vibrating reed being elastic bands, termed vocal chords, placed at the top of the trachea, and capable of various degrees of tension, while the mouth, by changing its shape, resounds to the fundamental tone or to any of the over tones of the vocal chords. The Professor next considered the vibrations of strings; showing, in the first place, that the amount of motion communicated to the air by the vibrating string is too small to be perceived as sound, even at a small distance, and hence when strings are employed as sources of musical sounds they must be associated with surfaces which take up their vibrations and transfer them to the air; thus the tone of a harp, or of a piano, depends mainly upon the sound-board of the instrument. Among the effective illustrations of the conduction of sound was a perpendicular deal rod which rested on a musical box in the room beneath the lecture theatre. The tones produced by this instrument, previously inaudible, were distinctly heard when a guitar or wooden tray was laid on the top of the rod. Music may thus be laid on at pleasure. The object of the musician is to have a sufficient number of notes of different pitch. One way is to have strings of different lengths, as in the harp and pianoforte; while the violin-player virtually changes the length of his string by shifting the pressure of his finger. The pitch of the note of a string is also altered by its thickness, for which purpose wire is sometimes twisted round the string, as in the bass notes of a violoncello, and also by changing the degree of tension: thus a string vibrates with double rapidity when the stretching weight is increased four times. By way of illustration, the Professor exhibited the vibrations of a piece of indiarubber tubing, pointing out that when a series of pulses were sent in succession along the tube the direct and reflected pulses met, and by their coalescence divided the tube into a series of vibrating parts termed ventral segments, the points of rest between them being termed nodes. Then, making use of a monochord (a piano-wire stretched over a sound-box), he stated that, when the string is damped or stopped by a feather at one half or one third of its length and struck at its intermediate point, the string divides like the indiarubber tube; and this he proved by placing paper riders on the ventral segments and the nodes. When the string was made to vibrate, the riders on the ventral segments were thrown off, while those on the nodes still remained. The notes corresponding to the divisions of the string into aliquot parts are termed its harmonics (third, fifth, eighth, &c.) The lecture concluded with illustrations of the vibrations of plates, investigated chiefly by Chladni, who discovered that when sand is scattered over a vibrating surface it is driven from the vibrating portions and collects along the nodal lines. Many beautiful examples of this were exhibited; the subdivision of the sand on the plate becoming more minute as the note was made to rise in pitch. After exhibiting the figures produced on a circular plate, the Professor stated that when this plate is bent up it becomes a bell; and then, causing a large bell to be sounded, he said that when a bell sounds its deepest note it is divided into four vibrating parts, separated from each other by nodal lines, which run upwards from the sound-bow and cross each other at the crown.

SOUNDING AND SENSITIVE FLAMES.

Professor Tyndall, in beginning his fourth lecture on Saturday last, alluded to the vibration of the strings of the Æolian harp produced by the action of wind, and to the fine sound given off by telegraph wires due to the same cause, the post acting the part of the sounding-board. He then adverted to the vibrations of bells, and made these evident on the surface of water in an inverted bell. When these vibrations were made very energetic in a glass bell-spray was tossed into the air and made visible when illuminated by electric light. By using alcohol spheroidal drops of spray were made to roll over the surface in a starlike figure. The Professor showed how musical sounds may be augmented by a flame, made to act the part of a sounding-board; and then, in a series of experiments with flames inclosed in tubes, he showed how flames produce musical tones, the pitch sinking as the tube is lengthened. A powerful fundamental note was given off by a wide glass tube with an argand burner, and the sound, emitted by a long tin tube, was violently explosive. Among many other interesting experiments was the exhibition of a flame upon the screen, by means of a concave mirror, first with the flame quiet, and then when singing. When the sound began, the continuous band of light was broken up into a series of flame images. This phenomenon was explained and illustrated by reference to the persistence of impressions on the retina. The Professor then showed how flames in a tube may be started into song by sounding a note corresponding to their pitch; and the flame in a tube thirteen inches long was silent until started by his voice. He next exhibited the influence of musical sounds on a parabolic jet of water, by means of the electric light. When a sound was produced the scattered drops gathered themselves together and formed a continuous arch, and the shadow was projected on a screen. This was followed by other exhibitions of the sensitiveness of flame to musical sounds. With a bat's-wing gas-burner, when the flame was at the point of flaring, the action of a whistle and other sounds was very evident, with the sound at a considerable distance. That such a flame is a very delicate acoustic reagent the Professor showed in his concluding experiments. After exhibiting the reflection and refraction of light in the usual manner, he produced the same phenomena with sound, for which purpose he employed, instead of a lens, a collodion balloon filled with carbonic acid gas; the reflection and refraction being indicated by their evident action on the gas-flame from a steatite burner. This method of demonstration Professor Tyndall said had never been seen before, even by philosophers; and to effect it he had to cut off, as far as possible, all sources of disturbance to the atmosphere, even closing all the ventilators of the lecture-room.

VIBRATIONS OF RODS.—RESONANCE.

Professor Tyndall began his fifth lecture, on Tuesday last, with illustrations of the difference between transverse and longitudinal vibrations, exemplified by vibrating rods and wires, the pitch of the tone varying with their length. Among the examples was the instrument termed the iron fiddle, and a kind of harp composed of a series of wooden rods of different lengths, shrill sounds being produced by friction with resined fingers. In regard to these sounds, it was stated that at the point of highest vibration there is no change of density; but at the nodes, the place of no motion, the substance alternately contracts and expands. This fact was beautifully shown in a glass rod by means of polarised light (Biot's experiment). The light, which was excluded when the glass was at rest, passed through when it was put into a state of strain by sonorous vibrations. The mechanical effect of longitudinal vibrations was made evident by their driving off a suspended ivory ball touching one end of a rod of wood; and by their intensity these vibrations shivered a glass rod into annular rings. The different rates of conduction of sound possessed by various substances, due to their different densities, having been noticed and illustrated (such as the fact that sound travels faster in deal than in mahogany), thus affording a means for estimating the velocity of sound, the Professor commented on and illustrated the analogy which exists between the vibrations of the substance of rods and those of air and other gases in pipes. Thus, a pipe stopped at one end vibrates in precisely the same manner as a solid rod fixed at one end. If the velocity of sound be the same in both, a rod and pipe of the same length will produce notes of the same pitch. When this is not the case the same pitch may be obtained by sufficiently lengthening the substance through which the sound travels more rapidly. The same analogy is found in regard to pipes open at both ends and rods free at both ends. The Professor next adverted to the resonance of tubes. He demonstrated that columns of air of a definite length resound to tuning-forks of definite rates of vibration by means of jars of various depths placed under tuning-forks. He stated that the length of a column of air which most perfectly resounds to a fork is one fourth of the length of the sonorous wave produced by the fork; the resonance being due to the synchronism which exists between the vibrating period of the fork and that of the column of air. By blowing across the mouth of a tube closed at one end a flutter of the air is produced; and the Pandean pipes were referred to as an example of pulses of this flutter being raised by the resonance of tubes to a musical sound. To this fact is also to be ascribed the sound of organ pipes. In these the air is agitated by causing it to issue from a narrow slit and to strike upon a cutting edge. The pulse of the flutter is raised to a musical sound by the resonance of the pipe.

The following courses of lectures will begin next week:—On Tuesday, Professor Rutherford on Respiration (five lectures); Thursday, Professor Duncan on Palæontology, with especial reference to Extinct Animals and the Physical Geography of their Time (six lectures); on Saturday, Professor Croom Robertson on Kant (four lectures). The weekly evening meetings will begin on Friday next—Professor Tyndall on the Acoustic Transparency and Opacity of the Atmosphere.

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

Yesterday week Dr. Kenealy commented on the military evidence adduced for the prosecution, contending that the officers who had given evidence against the defendant had from the first been prejudiced against him. The learned counsel had an amusing controversy with the Lord Chief Justice and the jury, arising out of the contention on his part that, inasmuch as it had not been proved that there were lights in the room when Roger was bled at Canterbury, the operation might have been performed in the dark. The Lord Chief Justice having remarked that no man of common-sense would have attempted the operation without light, Dr. Kenealy said that "common-sense did not always prevail." The Lord Chief Justice's pointed rejoinder, "No, I see that," the learned counsel said he would take no notice of, but would "leave to history." The Tichborne photographs and daguerreotypes were all inspected with regard to Dr. Kenealy's assertion that they showed a pendent ear. But on this point, as a jurymen observed, there were twelve to one against the Doctor, and he vowed never to mention the photographs again.

On Monday Dr. Kenealy confined himself to an analysis of the family evidence. In the course of the day the lock of Roger's hair which had been produced by Lady Radcliffe was handed to the jury. The lock of hair from Melipilla, of which so much was heard in the earlier stages of the trial, was also submitted to the jury's inspection. In support of his assertion that the two young Bonapartes—Napoleon and Joseph—had forgotten their native tongue, Dr. Kenealy cited an extract from the Boys' Journal. He could not supply the Lord Chief Justice with the name of the writer; but his Lordship gave him references to better known authorities, who represented Napoleon at St. Helena to have conversed in Italian with his doctor and attendants.

Next day Dr. Kenealy reviewed the evidence of several witnesses for the prosecution, and proceeded to analyse the evidence as to the personal peculiarities of the defendant and Roger Tichborne, contending that the former could not be Arthur Orton. In the course of his speech he made an incidental observation that he was anxious to bring his remarks to a close as speedily as he could consistently with his duty to his client. The Lord Chief Justice here told him that he was not consuming time unnecessarily, and that what he was saying was only fair and proper.

Dr. Kenealy continued, on Wednesday, his analysis of the evidence respecting Roger Tichborne's manners and habits, and, comparing them with those of the defendant, contended that this part of the case was entirely in his client's favour. The learned counsel then returned to the tattoo marks, alleging as his reason that some of the jury seemed still to entertain a doubt on the subject, and said that the inventors of these marks were Mr. Bowker, Mr. Seymour, and Lord Bellew. When he began to expatiate on the incredibility of Roger's mother never having heard of "that swelling and sloughing sore" which would result from a tattoo, a matter-of-fact jurymen told him he had not found tattooing a painful operation. From this Dr. Kenealy passed on to a vindication of Bogle.

The analysis of the Tichborne witnesses occupied the whole of Thursday. Dr. Kenealy said that no fewer than thirty-five "independent" witnesses, who knew Roger at Tichborne before he finally left England, were called for the defence, and distinctly identified the defendant as the same person. The Crown had only called one independent witness, old John Etheridge, who said the defendant was not Roger. With reference to the alleged resemblance of the defendant to Sir Henry Tichborne, Sir James Tichborne, Sir Edward Doughty, and Lady Tichborne, he said, as there was overwhelming evidence on that subject and as the Crown had put forward no rebutting testimony, which it was perfectly competent for them to have done, it must be taken that such resemblance was completely and conclusively proved. The learned counsel said that he attached great weight to the testimony of Miss Braine, who, having resided with the defendant and his family for nine months, said he was the same young man whom she knew as Roger Tichborne.

Mr. Baron Martin will presently retire from the Court of Exchequer, of which he has been one of the Barons since 1850; and Sir William Bodkin, who has long been suffering in health, has forwarded his resignation to the Home Office. We hear from Edinburgh that Lord Cowan has resigned his judgeship in the Court of Session.

In the Sheriff Court of Chancery, at Edinburgh, on Tuesday, the case of "Foulton v. the Earl of Eglinton" was called. The petitioner seeks to have it declared that he is heir of provision under the law of entail to the title held by the Earl of Eglinton and the Eglinton estates, which include the lands of Eglinton, Dreghorn, and Eaglesham. The Sheriff ordered answers to be lodged to the petition.

Sentence of eighteen months' imprisonment, with hard labour, was passed, on Monday, at the Middlesex Sessions, on William George Vale, who, as the salesman of Messrs. Draper, in Covent Garden Market, robbed them systematically. A confederate, named Isaacs, has absconded. Mary Williams, alias Smith, who at the last sessions pleaded guilty to stealing linen from the house of Sir Thomas Chambers, where she was in service, had excellent certificates of character produced from previous employers. She was discharged, on her own recognisances, to come up for judgment when called upon. On Tuesday Maxwell Harlock pleaded guilty to two indictments, charging him with having obtained money by false pretences. The prisoner, who was said to be the son of a county magistrate, had been previously convicted, and was now sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, with a like period of police supervision. A female shoplifter, named Timberlake, who has many previous convictions recorded against her at the Middlesex Sessions, was on Wednesday, by way of change, sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, with a further seven years' police supervision.

The Commander-in-Chief has appeared at Marlborough-street as complainant against Charles Studdart Maunsell, a retired half-pay captain, for assault. The assailant, who described himself as the most ill-used man in the world, has been pestering the Horse Guards with letters about his grievances. Not being satisfied with the response made to them, he met the Duke of Cambridge in Pall-mall, and, rushing at him, hit his Royal Highness repeatedly on the chest. The magistrate remanded him.

On Thursday afternoon the convict Jean Luie, a witness for the Claimant in the Tichborne trial, was placed before Sir Thomas Henry, at Bow-street, to answer the charge of perjury and other charges, preferred against him by the Crown. Some evidence having been given, the prisoner was remanded.

Patrick Wood, a bill-broker, carrying on business in the City under the style of Wood Brothers, was, on Tuesday, committed at the Mansion House on a charge of forging a promissory note for £100.

Having essayed, for a wager, to eat a pound of raw sprats and drink a bottle of rum, George Harris, of Rotherhithe, was found helpless and unconscious on the pavement, and so alarmingly ill that the divisional surgeon had to be sent for. Almost the first experience of recovered consciousness on the part of Mr. Harris was being fined ten shillings by Mr. Maude.

Francis William Bryan, summoned at Southwark, for travelling on the Brighton line in a first-class carriage, with a third-class ticket, has been fined ten shillings and costs. At Clerkenwell, several persons have been summoned by the Great Northern Railway Company for attempts to defraud, and heavily fined.

Alfred Walker, boot and shoe manufacturer and leather merchant, of Leicester and Birmingham, has been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, with hard labour, for fraudulently disposing of a quantity of elastic webbing, purchased otherwise than in regular course of trade, within four months of the liquidation of his affairs.

The Stafford clergyman's cook, who pretended to have had a desperate encounter with a burglar and to have defended her master's property at the peril of her life, has been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for the petty larceny committed under the ingenious guise of female heroism.

Sentence of penal servitude for five years has been passed on the two sailors, Keats and Burrage, who murderously attacked a warder in the bath-room of Lewes Naval Prison. The praiseworthy conduct of a prisoner, named Rayner, who took the part of the officer, Whyburn, is to be brought under the notice of the Home Secretary.

Four men were hanged on Monday for capital offences. Charles Dawson and William Thompson were executed at Durham for the murder of their paramours, and Edward Gough for stabbing a man during a fight. Thomas Corrigan was executed at Liverpool for murdering his mother while he was intoxicated. Thomas Ward Nicholls, who was sentenced to death at the Aylesbury Assizes on the 23rd ult. for the wilful murder of his wife at Olney, has been reprieved.

THE LATE REV. J. H. HINTON.

The Rev. John Howard Hinton, a Baptist minister of some eminence among the Nonconformist congregations, died at Clifton, Bristol, two or three weeks ago. He was eighty-two years of age, having been born at Oxford, in 1791. He was son of a Baptist minister, and was educated at the Baptist College of Bristol, but took his degree of M.A. at the University of Edinburgh. His first charge in the ministry was at Haverfordwest, whence he removed to Reading, and afterwards became pastor of the church and congregation in Devonshire-square, Bishopsgate-street. Five or six years ago he left London, and retired to a private life at Clifton. Mr. Hinton was not only a good and useful minister of religion, but was the author of some literary works of merit, besides his theological writings. He was the editor, amongst other publications, of a history and description of the United States of America, and of a book on the elements of natural history. The funeral of Mr. Hinton, in the cemetery at Arno's Vale, near Clifton, was attended by most of the Baptist and Independent ministers of Bristol.

TEMPLE STREET, NAGASAKI.

Our Special Artist lately in China and Japan has contributed the sketch of a street scene in the town of Nagasaki, one of the chief Japanese imperial cities. The temples here are visited by many devout worshippers; and their priests, as well as their gods, are comfortably lodged, while they are still better fed and paid. These sacred buildings are surrounded with groves and shrubberies, which are very pleasant; tea-gardens are neatly laid out with gravelled paths, adorned with fountains and grættos, and planted with orange-trees, camellias, and other flowering shrubs or herbs, as well as the cypress and yew. The town itself is irregularly built on the slopes of the beautiful hills overlooking a landlocked harbour, with many hamlets, villas, and tea-gardens in its agreeable neighbourhood. Some of the streets are very steep, and the ascent here and there is by the aid of steps. There is an air of general bustle in the shops and bazaars, where silks, bronzes, porcelain, and lacquer-ware, besides fruits, wine, and tobacco, are quickly sold. Nagasaki, in short, is rather a lively place for the other side of Asia.

THE LATE SIR JOSEPH COWEN, M.P.

THE LATE REV. J. M. HINTON, OF BRISTOL.

THE LATE SIR JOSEPH COWEN, M.P.

The death of Sir Joseph Cowen, on the 19th ult., at his residence, Stella Hall, Blaydon-on-Tyne, was recorded in our Paper. He was born at Greenside, near Winlaton, in February, 1800, so that he was nearly seventy-four years of age. As a boy, he was brought up to his father's trade, that of a working chain-maker in the factory of Sir Ambrose Crowley and Co., at Winlaton and Swalwell, on the Tyne. But in 1814 the business of Messrs. Crowley was removed from Winlaton, and the father of Sir Joseph Cowen was enabled to set up a workshop or small factory on his own account. After working with his father till 1823 or 1824, Joseph Cowen went to join his brother-in-law, Mr. Anthony Forster, in the business of firebrick making, at Blaydon Burn. He was first manager of these works, afterwards partner, and finally sole proprietor. He introduced great improvements, and at the time of his death Sir Joseph was at the head of one of the largest firebrick and gas retort works in the kingdom, besides being concerned in coal-mining and other extensive industrial enterprises. Sir Joseph Cowen was an active Liberal politician, and was elected M.P. for Newcastle in 1865; he was re-elected in 1868. He also performed great public services as chairman of the River Tyne Improvement Commissioners, who have completed a series of the most extensive river works in the kingdom. Without any assistance from the Government, except in the way of loans, Mr. Ure, their engineer, made the Tyne a harbour of refuge, the only one between the Humber and Leith Roads. Hundreds of vessels seek its shelter every winter in gales of wind, which otherwise would be cast ashore and their crews drowned. The Government, in acknowledgment of Sir Joseph Cowen's twenty years' gratuitous services to the trade of the country as chairman of the River Tyne Commissioners, conferred the honour of knighthood upon him in November, 1871. The portrait is copied from a photograph by Messrs. W. and D. Downey, of Newcastle-on-Tyne.

THE PRINCE CONSORT STATUE.

The monument in Holborn Circus, at the west end of the Holborn Viaduct, just now unveiled to public view, is an equestrian statue of the late Prince Consort. This bronze group, which is the work of Mr. Bacon, sculptor, and cost £2000, was a gift to the Corporation and city of London from a private benefactor. It represents the beloved and lamented Prince Albert seated on horseback and hat in hand, as in the act of returning a salute. The bronze was cast by Messrs. Young and Co., of Pimlico. The pedestal, which was provided by the Corporation, consists of a rustic base of grey granite, from Westmorland, surmounted by a moulded and polished block of red granite, from the Ross-shire quarries. At each end is a bronze statuette—the one representing "Peace," and the other "History." Bas-reliefs are inserted in the sides of the pedestal. In one of them Prince Albert is shown laying a foundation-stone; in the other Britannia appears distributing gifts to successful competitors in the peaceful arts. The sculpture has been executed by Mr. Bacon, and the masonry by Messrs. Hill, Keddell, and Waldram.

A MEETING ON THE SEA.

The fine steam-ship Sarmatian, hired by Government for the transport of troops to the Gold Coast, took out the 42nd Highlanders, whose departure for the Ashantee war has been noticed by us. On the morning of the 7th ult., when about a hundred miles off the Portuguese shore, a little below Lisbon, this vessel passed the Channel squadron, then making for the port of Lisbon. We are much obliged to Sub-Lieutenant Gustavus H. Yonge, of H.M.S. Triumph, for his sketch of the interesting scene. The ships of the squadron were in two columns of divisions, ranged in line ahead, the first division being on the starboard side. When the Sarmatian got sight of them she altered her course, so as to pass on their larboard, within two or three hundred yards of the second division. Our Engraving, from Mr. Yonge's sketch, represents the ships of war, enumerated from left to right, in their actual order, as follows, the Agincourt leading the column:—H.M.S. Agincourt, H.M.S. Northumberland, H.M.S. Resistance, H.M.S. Sultan, H.M.S. Hercules, and H.M.S. Triumph. The Sarmatian, with a "12" painted in large figures in two places on her quarters fore and aft, is advancing in an opposite direction, and is just abreast of the Hercules; Every ship had its band of music ready, and, as the Sarmatian passed, they struck up "Bonny Dundee," or "The British Grenadier," or some other appropriate tune. The soldiers of the "Black Watch" Highland regiment, when they heard these familiar strains, burst into loud cheers, which were heartily returned by the sailors of the fleet. Ten days before (on Nov. 27), when the squadron was lying off Madeira, it had a pleasant meeting with the transports Himalaya and Tamar, conveying a battalion each of the Rifle Brigade and the 23rd Welch Fusiliers to the Ashantee war. Lieutenant Yonge writes to us of this circumstance in a very gratifying spirit. He tells us how Admiral Hornby directed the crews of the ships to cheer the soldiers, and the ship's bands to play, when the transports left the anchorage, after a stay there of sixteen hours, during which the naval and military officers exchanged compliments and friendly visits.

STATUE OF THE LATE PRINCE CONSORT IN HOLBORN-CIRCUS.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-

GUINIA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Footboards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found diverse of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

DR. MORELL MACKENZIE, Physician to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat.

"As you have called my attention to the fact that so many years in prescribing Cod-Liver Oil I have specially indicated that sold at your establishment, I cannot refuse to state my reasons for having done so. These are as follow:—

"I find that I have found your Light-Brown Oil much more uniform in character and elasticity than any other Cod-Liver Oil. Truly, that I have found it more easily digested than any other Cod-Liver Oil."

DR. WHITMORE, Medical Officer of Health, St. Marylebone.

"I have asked for an explanation of the marked success which for so many years has attended the administration of Dr. DE JONGH'S Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil, I should say that it is owing to its extraordinary medicinal, dietetic, and regiminal properties, which are found to exist in no other medicine that I am acquainted with, in such uniform combination."

CHRISTMAS PARTY AT THE ROYAL NORMAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC FOR THE BLIND.

THE COLLEGE OF MUSIC FOR THE BLIND.

The Illustrated London News of Sept. 30, 1871, contained a sketch of the blind basket-makers at work in one of the London institutions for the benefit of persons afflicted with loss of sight. We at the same time noticed a book, then recently published, by Dr. T. R. Armitage, one of the council of the British and Foreign Blind Association, and himself blind, recommending that they should be taught more profitable work than the making of baskets or mats. In Paris, during the past forty years, and in the United States of America, for many years past, a large number of those endowed with musical talent have been specially trained for the professions of pianoforte tuner and performer and teacher of piano or organ playing. For the first-named employment, more especially, it is proved by experience that the blind have really a natural aptitude superior to that of most persons who can see. They are enabled to read instrumental or vocal music with perfect facility by the use of raised or pricked-out characters for its notation, to be felt with the hand and so to be learnt by rote. The bass part of a pianoforte score, for instance, can be read and learnt by using the right hand to feel and the left hand to play; the treble part by feeling with the left and playing with the right; after which, both parts having been learnt, they can be played together. It is probable that the deprivation of sight, by leaving a greater amount of nerve-force or brain-force at the disposal of the sense of hearing, may render the ear more finely susceptible of differences in musical tone; and the memory will likewise be stronger to retain and quicker to learn both the melody and the harmonic arrangement of a musical composition.

We are very glad now to be able to return to the subject, in connection with one of this week's Engravings, which shows the Christmas party of pupils of the Royal Normal College for the Blind and Academy of Music at Upper Norwood. It is our earnest hope that public support may be liberally and promptly given to this most interesting and deserving national institution, which was opened in March, 1872. As its benefits are designed for the whole of the United Kingdom, not for London alone, local efforts have been made at Liverpool, Manchester, and Leeds, Glasgow and Edinburgh, to obtain the funds needed for its secure establishment and maintenance upon a suitable scale. We would invite the friendly aid of our contemporaries on the provincial press, along with the metropolitan daily and weekly journals, to advocate this good cause. Thirty thousand is the estimated number of the blind in Great Britain and Ireland. There is no reason why they should not be taught to earn their own livelihood. It must be confessed that the simple manual labours of weaving and plaiting—work rather fit for prisoners in a House of Correction—which are offered to the inmates of some well-endowed Asylums for the Blind, can never answer this purpose. Five or six shillings a week may be earned, in this way, by the pupils who are discharged from the Asylum; but for the remaining cost of their living they must either be a permanent burden on the charity of friends, or must be relieved at the expense of the poor rate. There are a few other occupations, for which blind persons are not entirely disqualified, and in which some may possibly get employment, as a favour, at very low wages, from eight to ten or twelve shillings a week. But their general condition, if not destitute, is extremely depressed; and even those who are maintained by the assistance of their own family must often desire in vain the means of gaining an independence. We believe that, in a great many cases, not only in the lower but in the middle ranks of society, life-long distress might be saved by providing for the special instruction of the blind in some remunerative employment connected with the art of music. It is most creditable to the leading members of the great London piano-manufacturing trade that they have, in accordance with our suggestion two years ago, frankly attached themselves to this movement. The new institution has been much favoured also with the patronage of the highest English nobility, led by the Dukes of Bedford, Devonshire, Northumberland, and Sutherland, and by the Marquis of Westminster, its president, with the Earls of Shaftesbury and Lichfield as trustees. The Hon. William Ashley is chairman of the executive committee, Sir Rutherford Alcock is treasurer (at 14, Great Queen-street, Westminster), Sir W. Stenhouse is chairman of the musical committee, and Mr. G. Harcourt Chambers is the honorary secretary, at 28, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square.

The Royal Normal College of Music for the Blind (if we may omit the words "and Academy" from its official title) is established in several houses adjoining each other at the Mount and Paxton-terrace, Westow-street, close to the Crystal Palace, in the suburban village of Upper Norwood. About forty or forty-five is the number of pupils, boys and girls, for whom accommodation can as yet be provided; and it is with sincere regret that the director and committee are obliged to refuse admission to many who would readily be sent, if there were more room for them, upon the moderate terms for board and instruction. This arrangement is usually made through local committees of the Royal Normal College adopting the care of individual scholars, or else through the directors of a local Blind Asylum or similar charity. It is the design of the Royal Normal College, when £25,000 shall have been raised, to purchase a site of six acres and a half, and to erect buildings for the reception of 150 pupils, with school and class rooms, practising and tuning rooms, an organ, and forty pianos. An appeal to the public for this object was made last May, in a letter signed by the Marquis of Westminster (donor of £1200) and by Lord Shaftesbury, which appeared in the daily papers; and the Lord Mayor, about Midsummer, called a meeting at the Mansion House, with the same purpose in view. We trust that the attempt will be renewed in the season now approaching, with better success. This would be amply secured if the Duke of Edinburgh, who is not only a musician, but a pianoforte-tuner, could bring his newly-married Duchess next May or June to visit the College at Norwood, and to witness the performance of the blind pupils.

In the meantime the College is open to friends coming for its inspection, and they are sure to be pleased with all that they see and hear. The accomplished and experienced Principal, Mr. F. J. Campbell, is a blind man, who has long been esteemed in England and America for his abilities as a musician, as a teacher, and as an administrative manager. He was, during about fourteen years, the musical director, and, during half that period, the resident superintendent, of the Perkins Institute for the Blind at Boston, Massachusetts, one of the best institutions of this kind. It is mentioned by Dr. Armitage, in his book on "The Education and Employment of the Blind," with high commendation. In the United States, we are told, there are blind teachers of music earning £400 or £500 a year; and some are appointed organists with good salaries. In Paris, it is remarked, they get employment in pianoforte-tuning more easily than in teaching; the tuners make from £80 to £150 a year, and one makes £250. Some branches of repairing are also practised by the blind. We observe the names of Messrs. Broadwood, Messrs. Collard, and other eminent manufacturing firms, among the benefactors of the Norwood Institution. With regard to the general and technical instruction there given during a course of three years, its quality is certified by a letter from Mr. J. Rice Byrne, Government Inspector of Schools, and by the testimonials of persons conversant with musical education. A sound knowledge of grammar, arithmetic, physiology, and other natural science, with geography and history, is made the foundation of general culture, while moral and religious teaching, with due respect for particular opinions, is carefully attended to. The theory and practice of music, including composition and analysis, singing and playing, and the mechanical work of tuning and repairing instruments, are taught in proportion to the capacities of individual pupils. They have the privilege of attending not only the concerts but the rehearsals of the Crystal Palace orchestra, which is esteemed the best in England, and one of the best in Europe. Great care is taken to preserve their health and bodily vigour by regular gymnastics and by open-air games in a very large playground. The visitors who, on Friday week, saw these young people around their Christmas-tree, and heard their concert of music, were not a little gratified with the Royal Normal College of Music for the Blind at Norwood. We cannot doubt that its merits will soon be recognised by an ample list of subscribers and donors to the fund required for its extension and safe establishment. The treasurer and honorary secretary, whose names and addresses are stated above, will gladly receive whatever may be given for this good object.

FINE ARTS.

SIR EDWIN LANDSEER'S WORKS AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

In reserving the present exhibition exclusively for the works of Sir Edwin Landseer the Royal Academy has evinced a becoming sense of the lustre reflected upon it by its deceased member, although a collection of the works of any one painter, however popular and attractive, cannot be so variously instructive as one of those gatherings of select examples of great masters of different schools which have hitherto formed the winter displays at Burlington House. We doubt, even, whether this collection, not far from complete as it is, of Sir Edwin's life-work will really benefit his reputation, though it may still further extend his vast popularity. It cannot reveal much more of his humorous and pathetic invention and powers of design than we know already through the medium of engravings from his works, while many of the works themselves will be disappointing to those who have hitherto known them solely by the engravings. It is also only in the works of his earlier and best time, and in some few exceptional productions of later date, that the painter's executive qualities can be regarded as really noble, sound, and complete, rather than excessively dextrous, taking, and specious—or as susceptible of comparison with the technical mastery of Rubens, Snyders, Potter, Weenix, Hondecoeter, Fyt, Wouvermans, and other old painters of animal nature. Very rarely indeed is colour an artistic element of value in Sir Edwin Landseer's pictures; and we must look for other attributes to find the secrets of their popularity. Then there are whole classes of Landseer's works, particularly those with human figures, painted under courtly and fashionable influence, which are not only quite unworthy of him, but have a positive artificiality of taste, a conventional elegance of shallow flattery which must be regarded as reprehensible by honest criticism. While painting under this influence, even Sir Edwin's animals, and not merely his domestic pets, but his wild beasts, acquire a sleek, tame aspect, as though carefully prepared by the taxidermist for drawing-room presentation. There are, besides, many works executed, in the latter part of Landseer's career, but frequently left unfinished, which are so incredibly weak in drawing, so incomplete in modelling, and so opaque in colour, that it must be regretted they should ever be made public.

This collection is, as we have intimated, nearly complete. Except about twenty works, among which are "The Drive," the large "Chevy Chase," &c., the only works of importance not included here are those in the South Kensington Museum. We can imagine that the authorities at Brompton would have been little disposed to part with their Landseers for several months, even if the removal of them to Piccadilly be not prevented by conditions attached to the Sheepshanks gift and Vernon bequest. The first room on entering is devoted to sketches, studies, and drawings in pencil, pen-and-ink, chalk, coloured crayons, water colours, and fresco. The five following rooms are appropriated to oil-paintings, and a seventh room is occupied by works in black and white, including etchings and engravers' proofs from some of Landseer's works, but including only those touched on by the artist himself, and a few proofs after originals not in the exhibition. Mr. Graves, who has published most of the engravings from Landseer, offered, we believe, for exhibition at Burlington House a very complete set of the best proofs and impressions of the plates after Landseer; but the offer was declined by the Academy, and Mr. Graves has had to content himself by exhibiting his collection of engravings in a small room called the "Burlington Gallery," nearly opposite to the Academy in Piccadilly. We quite appreciate the scrupulousness of the Academy in resolving to limit their Landseer exhibition to work actually from the artist's own hand; and possibly the addition of several hundred plates by various engravers might have produced a sense of wearisome repetition, even if in some instances the engraving should have proved more acceptable than the original picture itself. At the same time, one must feel the absence of such engravings as Mr. S. Cousins's superb mezzotint from "Titania and Bottom," and many of the congenial translations by the painter's own brother, Mr. Thomas Landseer. Probably, therefore, it will be generally considered that the Academy would have acted more wisely in admitting a complete series of engravings, especially as four of the rooms available are unoccupied.

A far less questionable cause for complaint is, however, the total want in the hanging of all classification beyond that of separating the drawings and engravings from the oil paintings, and the placing the largest of the latter in the Great Room, and the making the frames match everywhere as nearly as may be. The whole of the 532 works are hung in utter disregard of the date at which they were produced. The consequences are that the impression produced is most confusing, and the lessons which so comprehensive a representation of an artist's life-work is so well calculated to yield, if arranged to illustrate his development, culmination, and decline, are either lost or only to be learnt by difficult and laborious comparison. We do not ask for a perfect chronological arrangement; but we feel sure that a sufficiently agreeable collocation on the walls could have been attained by disposing the oil paintings in groups according to dates, embracing five or ten years, and so with the drawings and engravings. Nor is the catalogue, though freer than usual from clerical or typographical errors, a considerable improvement on its predecessor. It is more like a bare auctioneer's list than a catalogue raisonné, such as the Royal Academy should produce on occasions such as this. The dimensions of the oil paintings are given, and frequently the dates at which they were painted; but in the case of exhibited works particulars as to when and where they were exhibited ought to have been added.

The first room contains, as we have said, nothing but drawings and sketches in a variety of material. This is one of the most interesting and instructive portions of the entire collection, especially to artists. It shows the diversity of Sir Edwin's preparatory work for pictures painted at every period of his career. Many of the occasional sketches, some of which were struck off in pen-and-ink, at the end of a letter, have an autobiographical as well as artistic interest. Several of them reveal the privileged intimacy at Court of the drawing-master to and esteemed painter of the Queen and Prince, and here and there peep out little touches of that genial humour and complimentary politeness which rendered Landseer a general favourite in those courtly and high-born circles in which he seems to have always aspired to mingle. One of the earliest of these sketches is that (132) of a dog and cat, dated 1812, and inscribed "Done at Maldon by the little boy Edwin when ten years old, now Sir E. Landseer, the old boy, 1866." Sketches by the "little boy Edwin" at a still earlier age are preserved at the South Kensington Museum. A series of small Continental sketches, dated 1840, executed in water colours, with a liberal use of the reed pen, together with some sketches of earlier date, are very remarkable for their union of freedom and precision, and for a lifelike spirit, which we miss, at least in the figures, in later works. We would especially commend to notice the "Pulpit in Belgium" (37), "Gossips at the Fountain, Aix-la-Chapelle" (35), "Sketch at Mechlin" (31), and "Market-Place, Geneva" (41). The expressiveness and descriptiveness of these drawings and their definition of detail are naturally yielded by "the point" when in competent hands. But in a crayon drawing of the same date (1840) of a "Plough at Waterloo" (37), in which the "stump" has been freely used, we already see some of that satiny glossiness which was a too frequent characteristic of Sir Edwin's animal textures in later years. Subsequently, corresponding with the change of practice in his oil-painting, we find Landseer partially discarding the use of the point, and executing his sketches and studies for pictures with charcoal and coloured crayons, in apparently too great reliance on the breadths of tone and hue so readily afforded by those soft materials; the consequence being a progressive tendency to flatness and emptiness. Still, as suggestive charcoal sketches, one could hardly wish for anything better than "The Eagle's Nest" (79) and "Scene in the Forest" (83); and it would be difficult to imagine anything more masterly, in their slight, sketchy way, than the large drawings in coloured crayons of a flying stag nearly overtaken by a deerhound (47) and the "Stags Browning" (113). In the same facile material is the finished study for the picture exhibited a few years back of "The Queen on a Pony, at Osborne" (48). Her Majesty is in her widow's weeds; John Brown, who holds the pony's head, is also in the deepest mourning; the pony is black, so is the dog, and the very sky weeps. "Man, Horses, and Dogs: a Study" (124) is an example of Sir Edwin in fresco; and it is in excellent preservation. Not so the semicircular fresco, in the second room, of a "Scene from Comus" (172), one of the decorations of the pavilion of Buckingham Palace, executed by way of experiment, at the request of the Prince Consort, when the decoration of the Westminster Palace was on foot. This, like its fellow-frescoes in the same pavilion that were exposed to the open air, has become a complete wreck. Fortunately, Landseer's composition is preserved in the oil-painting of the Ball collection at South Kensington.

With the exception of this fresco, all the works in the five succeeding rooms are in oil. In the second room we at once come upon some of Sir Edwin's best known recent efforts. We shall, however, pay some attention to the order in which the works were produced in our survey of each room. First, then, we may notice a landscape (148), by Sir Augustus Calcott, called "Harvest in the Highlands," in which Landseer, then only twenty-eight, has skillfully introduced some carefully-painted horses, &c. Three small pictures of a "Fox" (160), "Stag just Shot" (161), and "Woodcock" (162), are also of early date, as appears by their comparatively juicy colouring, their close adherence to and vigorous realisation of Nature. "Lion and Dash" (159), a majestic mastiff and a barking spaniel, is a sounder, though less taking, version of the theme afterwards entitled "Dignity and Impudence." "The Princess Royal and Eos" (169), the latter a black hound, with its nose poked fondly beneath the little foot of the baby Princess as she lies in her cot, is one of the best of Sir Edwin's Royal portrait pictures. The forms are well rounded and the colouring unusually agreeable. It is difficult to believe that the picture near this, though painted only the year following (1842), called "Windsor Castle in Modern Times" (173), and containing portraits of the Queen in evening costume and the Prince as a sportsman, near an open oriel, overlooking a trim lawn, can be by the same hand, so laboriously smooth, so tawdrily bright, and intensely artificial is the whole, saving the group of game in the foreground, which, it need hardly be said, is excellently painted. We will only add regarding this very disappointing work that in the well-known engraving the astonishing disproportions in the figures of her Majesty and the Prince are greatly modified. As if to show how infinitely more at home Landseer was as a painter of animals, there hangs close by a perfect little gem, painted the same year, representing "Brazilian Monkeys" (175) perched on a pine-apple, and intently watching a wasp that has settled on the leafy tuft of the fruit. The large picture of the "Otter Hunt" (191), with the speared otter held aloft above the whole pack of ravening hounds, is a spirited work, well known through the engraving.

In "The Challenge" (199), painted in 1844, we come at once upon the ripest fruit of Sir Edwin's acquaintance with the Highlands and their wild denizens. The artist has painted nothing more original and impressive than this strange, spectral winter-night scene, with its snow-covered ground and fallen pine-stem, and star-sprinkled, deep blue sky, with its noble stag snorting defiance, and that other stag swimming the loch to accept the proud challenge. The picture was exhibited under the motto, "Coming Events Cast their Shadows Before Them"—a rather ambiguous title, seeing that the shadow of the antlers of the nearer stag, cast by an unseen moon on to the snow, is the only shadow that can have any reference to the threatened conflict. "The Free Kirk" (193), a reverent old shepherd, with his aged partner, and their collies, sharing the kirk pew, with a young couple behind them, is another Highland subject, rather forced in sentiment. A "Dandie Dinmont" cautiously watching a hedgehog (167) is one of several canine favourites of the Queen and Prince painted by Landseer at various times, which include two German dogs of a curiously bandy-legged breed, called Waldmann (170) and Dackel (178). "The Twins" (184), a large picture of a couple of lambs, with a ram, and sheep-dogs lying on a plaid above them; "Saved" (151), a Newfoundland dog, with a child he has just brought to shore lying unconsciously before him; "The Piper and a Pair of Nutcrackers" (158), a jocular title applied to a small picture of a bullfinch and a couple of squirrels; "Prosperity" (155) and "Adversity" (158), showing a horse sleek and proud, held by a groom on a lawn, and the same horse, descended to be a fireman's hack, standing neglected on a winter night outside a tavern—bring us through growing mannerisms and superficiality to "The Swannery Invaded by Sea Eagles" (156), exhibited in 1869, and one of the most important of Sir Edwin's later finished works. Some naturalists maintain that this picture is altogether wrong in fact—that eagles do not attack in this way, do not fight with their beaks, but with their talons, that in such a contest the birds' plumage would not remain flat and sleek, and that many feathers would be torn out, and so forth; but we will not reopen the controversy. Certain it is the feathers of the outspread eagles' pinions and other passages of this vigorous, vivid, and daring performance contain some amazingly dextrous manipulation in the artist's broad, indicative, later style. Still, this mastery of hand surprises by its facile suggestiveness rather than satisfies by completely descriptive realisation, as in his earlier pictures and the works of the old masters. The picture, moreover, has the thin, clay-cold colouring of most of the later works. "The Sick Monkey" (190), exhibited in 1870 under the title, "Doctor's Visit to Poor Relations, Zoological Gardens," is one of the very best, though one of the last, of the painter's works. Whether such intensity of expression is ever seen or possible in the visages of our "poor relations" we will not pretend to say, but nothing assuredly can be more pathetic than the grief of the nursing mother and the pain-worn lassitude of the nursing. The colouring, also, is altogether exceptionally fine—the harmony of the olive russet and citron browns is perfect, and not less artistic is the contrast of the black hair of the healthy young monkey with the oranges he is devouring or has greedily appropriated. Here we must pause for the present.

Mr. W. P. Frith, R.A., has been elected a member of the Royal Academy of Sweden. A similar honour, unsolicited, has been before conferred on the popular English painter by the Academies of Belgium and Austria.

Two interesting sales took place last week at Paris, and prices ran high. The collection of M. Carpeaux, the well-known sculptor, realised 90,000fr.; the model of the celebrated marble group at the front of the new Opera alone fetched 6000fr. The other sale was that of the sculptor Carrier-Belleuse, whose group, "La Confidence," was purchased by M. Debrousse for 6000fr.; the total proceeds of the sale amounting to 69,000fr.

Mr. William Telbin, the eminent scene-painter, died on Christmas Day. He had been an invalid for some time, and had never recovered the depressing effect of his son's death, which occurred through an accident while on a sketching excursion in the Alps, some years ago. Mr. Telbin was in his sixty-first year.

The Right Hon. Hector John Graham Toler, third Earl of Norbury, Viscount Glandine, and Baron Norbury and Norwood, in the Peerage of Ireland, died, on the 26th ult., at Valence, Westerham, Kent. His Lordship was born Sept. 17, 1810, the second son of Hector John Graham, second Earl of Norbury (murdered at Durrow Abbey, Jan. 3, 1839), by Elizabeth, his wife, only child of Wm. Brabazon, Esq., of Brabazon Park, in the county of Mayo, and was grandson of the famous John Toler, first Lord Norbury, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland. The nobleman whose death we record married, Sept. 7, 1848, Stewart-Lindesay, daughter of Major-General Sir H. Bethune, Bart., and leaves four daughters and one only son, William Brabazon Lindesay, Viscount Glandine, born July 2, 1862, who succeeds as fourth Earl of Norbury.

COUNTESS STANHOPE.

The Right Hon. Emily Harriet, Countess Stanhope, died at Chevening, near Sevenoaks, on the 31st ult. Her Ladyship, the second daughter of General Sir Edward Kerrierson, Bart., G.C.H., K.C.B., by Mary, his wife, eldest daughter of Alexander Ellice, Esq., of Pittencrief, Fifeshire, was born Sept. 10, 1815, and married, July 10, 1834, Philip Henry, Viscount Mahon, the eminent writer and historian, who succeeded his father as Earl Stanhope March 2, 1855. The issue of the marriage consists of four sons and one daughter, Mary Catherine, Countess Beauchamp.

MR. WORMALD, F.R.C.S.

Thomas Wormald, Esq., of Epping House, near Hertford, senior consulting surgeon to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, died suddenly, on the 28th ult., at his brother's residence, Gomersal, Yorkshire, in his seventy-second year. A pupil of Abernethy, he was admitted a member of the College of Surgeons in 1824, and gained eventually a leading position in his profession. In the Royal College of Surgeons he filled all the highest offices; in 1849 was elected a member of council; in 1857, Hunterian orator; and, in 1865, president. Mr. Wormald leaves a widow, three sons, and three daughters.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL M'CLINTOCK.

Lieutenant-Colonel George Augustus Jocelyn M'Clintock, who died on the 24th ult., in the fifty-third year of his age, at his residence, Fellows Hall, in the county of Armagh, was the youngest son of the late John M'Clintock, Esq., of Drumcar, M.P., by his second marriage, with Lady Elizabeth Le Poer French, daughter of William, Earl of Clancarty, and sister of the last Archbishop of Tuam. Colonel M'Clintock was half-brother of Lord Rathdonnell, and of the late Captain W. B. M'Clintock Bunbury, for many years M.P. for the county of Carlow. He served in the 37th and 52nd Light Infantry, and, when a Captain in the latter regiment, was appointed Lieutenant-Colonel of the Sligo Rifles. Colonel M'Clintock held the commission of the peace for the counties of Armagh and Tyrone, and was a director of the Ulster Railway Company. He married, in 1850, the youngest daughter of the late and sister of the present Sir James Stronge, Bart., of Tynan Abbey, M.P. for the county of Armagh.

THE HON. ALFRED WALTER CHARTERIS.

The Hon. Alfred Walter Charteris, Lieutenant Coldstream Guards and Aide-de-Camp to General Sir Garnet Wolseley, died of fever, on Nov. 24, on board the Simoom. This gallant young officer had volunteered for active service in the Ashantee war, and has early fallen a victim to his military spirit. He was the second but eldest surviving son of Lord Elcho, M.P., by Anna Frederica, his wife, daughter of Thomas William, first Earl of Lichfield, and grandson of Francis, present Earl of Wemyss and March. He was born June 2, 1847, and entered the Army in the 71st Foot in 1869.

ROBERT H.—The annual subscription for the French Chess magazine, so ably conducted by Mr. Preti, is twenty-one francs if the subscriber lives in England. The best way of paying this is by a Post Office order payable to M. Jean Preti, 72, 74, Rue Saint Sauveur, Paris.

D.D.—We shall have much pleasure in making your wishes known if you will send your name and address.

N. C. ARMARINE QUINCY.—We have already explained that, if Black, in Problem No. 1552, play his King to Q's 5th on the first move, White cannot give mate according to the condition.

W. S. S. of Hamilton.—Those last sent shall have careful examination, and the former ones shall be returned if they are found to be too easy.

W. C. Cheltenham.—Acceptable at all times.

D. DAILY, Douai.—We have already published the solution of Problem No. 1553, beginning, 1. R from Kt sq takes Bishop, and cannot send solutions by post.

ELIZABETH FRANCES HARRIS and HUGH F. KERRIDGE, of Canterbury, New Zealand.—Your solution of the Knight's Tour No. XVI. is perfectly correct.

H. H. H., St. Petersburg.—Quite right.

J. H. of Hong-Kong.—It is, unfortunately, though Chinese, no Chinese puzzle. The solution is apparent at the first glance.

D. E. H. Crewe.—By no means difficult, but neat and original. It has been marked for insertion.

H. R.—It was remarked by the examiners before that the Bishop can be moved to Q R square, K R 8th, K Kt 7th, and K B 6th with equal effect. This is an imperfection you have not sought to remedy, though it is fatal to the problem.

E. BARACLOUGH, W. D. J. G. FINE, S. M. E. R. B.—Declined, with thanks.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and codicil, dated respectively Oct. 18, 1869, and July 17, 1873, of the Right Hon. Ernest Augustus, Earl of Lisburne, who died at his seat, Crosswood, Cardiganshire, on Nov. 8, were proved on the 31st ult. by Edward Mallet Vaughan, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. After giving some legacies to his wife and a legacy to his daughter, Lady Elizabeth Mallet Jones, the testator devises certain farms to his second son, the Hon. Edward Courtenay Vaughan, and the remainder of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates to his eldest son, Lord Vaughan, for life, with remainder to his eldest son; the residue of his personalty he gives to his said second son.

The will of Lord Richard Cavendish, late of No. 16, Savile-row, and of Coopers, Chiselmur, who died on Nov. 19, was proved on the 23rd ult. by the Duke of Devonshire and Lord George Henry Cavendish, the brothers, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator bequeaths all his books, pictures, engravings, and works of art to the Duke of Devonshire, and legacies to his niece, Lady Louisa Egerton, his nephew Lord Edward Cavendish, and to his servants, and the residue of his property to Lord George Henry Cavendish and Lady Fanny Howard.

The will of the late André Jean Joseph Périer, of Paris, banker, and a director of the Bank of France, has just been proved in London. The whole fortune of the deceased, as appears by the will, amounts to about 8,750,000fr. After his death the testator directs a sum of 6000fr. to be employed in charitable and benevolent acts. In giving an additional sum of 150,000fr. to his daughter Madame le Lasseur, he states he has two reasons for so doing—viz., that she has four children, three being daughters, to whom it will be requisite to give dowries, so as to help them in getting married, which is a heavy obligation; and because she has become, with other ladies, the administratrix of several establishments of poor young girls, and that he is desirous of supplying her with the means of carrying out the numerous charitable acts and gifts of every kind. The surplus of his estate is to be divided in equal shares between his six children—Madame Mathilde de Montebello, Madame Camille Périer, Madame Octavie le Lasseur, Madame Gabrielle Dollé, Edmond Périer, and Arthur Périer.

The will, dated Feb. 15, 1869, of William Cosier, formerly of Southwark, but late of Wilmington Hall, near Dartford, who died on Nov. 5, was proved on the 16th ult. by Robert Arnold Cosier and Henry Cosier, the nephews, and William Smith Brown, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator leaves to his wife a pecuniary legacy of £2500 and an annuity of £1500 per annum; legacies to his executors and others; and a sum of £20,000 for his daughter, Margaret Ethel. The remainder of his property he gives to his son, William Philpot Cosier.

The will, dated Nov. 5, 1862, of Binny Scott, formerly of Colombo, Ceylon, and late of Cheltenham, who died on Nov. 15, was proved on the 27th ult., by Colonel John David Scott, the brother, the personal estate in the United Kingdom being sworn under £70,000. Testator bequeaths one third of his property to his wife, and the remainder between his children.

The will, with two codicils, dated respectively Aug. 9, 1866, Feb. 24, 1870, and May 26, 1873, of Daniel Sturdy, of Priory-road, Wandsworth, who died on Dec. 9, was proved on the 30th ult. by Daniel Sturdy and William Sturdy, the sons, the acting executors, the personalty being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths £100 to the 1st Surrey Rifle Volunteers, and £50 each to the Lambeth Pension Society and the Clapham Pension Society; and there are various legacies to his daughters. The residue of his real and personal estate he leaves to his said two sons.

The will, dated March 24, 1868, of Daniel Higham, formerly of Mansion House-street, City, and late of Hyde Vale, Blackheath, who died on Dec. 1, was proved, on the 18th ult., by Hannah Matilda Higham, the relict, John Adams Higham, the son, and William Paxon, the executors—the personalty being sworn under £40,000. The provisions of the will are in favour of testatrix's wife and children.

Lord de Ros died, on Tuesday, at his residence, Court Strangford, in the county of Down, aged seventy-seven.

The freedom of Edinburgh will be presented to Baroness Burdett-Coutts, in the Music-hall, on Thursday, the 15th inst.

The Marquis of Londonderry has been elected chairman of Merionethshire Quarter Sessions, in succession to the late Mr. Meredith Richards.

The Duke of Roxburghe has intimated to the farmers on his estates that they will be entitled to exercise a joint right with himself to kill hares and rabbits on the lands in their occupancy.

According to the Printers' Register there are now published in Great Britain and Ireland 131 daily newspapers, distributed as follows:—London, 24; Provinces, 72; Scotland, 13; Ireland, 18; Wales, 2; Channel Islands, 2.

At the five principal shipbuilding yards in the Mersey the aggregate work of the past year was seven iron sailing-ships and twenty-nine steamers—the former representing a tonnage of over 12,000, and the latter of over 35,000 tons.

Mr. Daniel Bower Mitchell, a Dundee merchant, was killed, last Saturday, by falling over a precipice while attempting to ascend Benmore from Crianlarich while the mountain was clad with snow.

Aria College, Portsea—an institution for the training of young men for the Hebrew ministry, and for the establishment of which a sum of £25,000 was bequeathed by the late Mr. Lewis Aria—was consecrated, on Tuesday afternoon, by the Chief Rabbi, Dr. Adler. In the evening there was a banquet, at which the Chief Rabbi presided.

At a meeting held in Leeds, on Monday night, to inaugurate the commencement of the Cambridge University lectures to ladies in Yorkshire, the president of the Local Government Board was the principal speaker, and spoke strongly in favour of extending to women all possible facilities for obtaining the higher education.—Mr. Stansfeld addressed a meeting in the Victoria Hall, on Tuesday night, on the subject of the extension of University education. The right hon. gentleman warmly eulogised the scheme which has been propounded by the University of Cambridge to bring the highest learning, by means of lectures, classes, and conversations, conducted by eminent University men, "close to the homes and within the modest means of the great masses of the people." He remarked that the scheme was one which must take hold of the imagination of the masses in order to succeed. It was a scheme which sought to uproot the principle of aristocracy from the education of the country. Mr. E. Baines, M.P., who presided over the meeting, also delivered an address.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT-COLONEL PEMBERTON.

An incident of the late war between France and Germany, much deplored as a private sorrow by many English friends, was the death of this gentleman, who accompanied one of the German armies as special correspondent of the Times. A monument has been erected to his memory in the parish church of Newton, near Cambridge. The sculptor is Mr. M. Noble. The design, shown in our illustration, represents an angel bringing a message of heavenly consolation to the bereaved family. The following is the inscription:—"Sacred to the memory of Christopher Peach Pemberton, late Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel Scots Fusilier Guards, eldest son of Christopher Robert Pemberton, Esq., of this parish. He was killed at the battle of Sedan, on Sept. 1, 1870, in the thirty-second year of his age, being present with the 12th Corps of the Prussian army, for the purpose of observing and recording the events of the war between France and Germany. He fell, towards the close of the battle, whilst advancing with the staff of the Crown Prince of Saxony. With more than ordinary talent was blended a chivalrous personal courage, combined with a warm and affectionate heart, revealed by the beautiful sentiments of Christian piety and benevolence pervading his published letters on this sanguinary war. Beloved and lamented by all who knew him; deeply deplored by his afflicted family. 'He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die.' 25th and 26th verses of the 11th chapter of St. John." A portrait and memoir of Lieutenant-Colonel Pemberton appeared in this Journal some time ago.

WANDSWORTH NEW BRIDGE.

This bridge, which has been built by a company in the last two years, was lately opened by Colonel Hogg, chairman of the Metropolitan Board of Works. As it gives more direct access to Fulham from the railways on the Surrey side, about Clapham Junction, it will make Fulham a more convenient place of residence, while it joins Wandsworth to the suburbs of Fulham and Chelsea, West Brompton and South Kensington. The extreme length of the bridge, from its commencement on the Surrey side of the river, between the old Wandsworth Pier and Messrs. Watney's distillery, to the Middlesex shore, is about 1500 ft., including the approaches, which are by embankments and over brick arches. The approaches on the Surrey side are connected with York-road, Battersea, by an easy gradient; whilst on the Fulham side the approaches communicate with the King's-road, near Broomhouse-lane. The bridge stretches across the river by five spans, supported by four river piers formed of wrought-iron cylinders, and shore abutment piers on each side of the river, of massive red brickwork and masonry. The shore spans are each 113 ft. 6 in. in length, while the three spans in the stream are 133 ft. each in length. The cylinder piers in the river are 7 ft. 6 in. in diameter, each pier consisting of two cylinders connected transversely under the platform of the bridge. The cylinders are sunk to a depth of 14 ft. into the clay, and rest upon a thick bed of concrete placed under them, the cylinders themselves being also filled in with that material. The centre of the bridge has a clear headway of 20 ft. above high-water level, whilst the height at the shore abutments is 14 ft. The main girders on each side of the bridge, which are of the lattice pattern, are 12 ft. in height, and continuous throughout by being connected at the ends, the main girders being again connected by cross girders, placed 4 ft. apart, throughout the entire length of the bridge, and riveted to the upper side of the bottom flanges of the main girders. The roadway over the bridge is formed by timbers laid diagonally upon the surface of the cross girders, a longitudinal decking being laid over these, upon which is macadamised paving. The entire width of the bridge between the main side girders is 30 ft., 18 ft. of which forms the carriage-way, with footways on each side 6 ft. in width. No attempt has been made to produce architectural effect, the structure being substantial rather than ornamental; but a pedestal over each pier carries a cluster of three lamps, and there is a foliated capital at the head of each column under the main girders.

The new bridge is about a mile eastward of the Putney and Fulham bridge. It has been erected from the designs of Mr. J. H. Tolme; Messrs. De Bergue and Co. were the contractors, the works being superintended by their engineer, Mr. Mallalieu. Mr. Bull, of Southampton, was the contractor for the approaches, and Mr. Nichols acted as resident engineer during the works.

MARSHAL BAZAINE'S PRISON.

The sentence of death passed by the court-martial at Versailles upon the unfortunate commander of Napoleon III.'s army at Metz was commuted to that of imprisonment for life in the Isle of St. Marguerite, near Cannes, on the Mediterranean coast of France. We have to thank a correspondent, Colonel E. T. Coke, for three photographs of the scenery of this place, which were taken by himself. The island is described by him as two miles long by half a mile broad, and distant only three quarters of a mile from the Croisette Point at Cannes, which looks towards the fort. This building has accommodation for about 1000 men. It was erected in 1637, and is celebrated as the place of confinement for many years of the "Man with the Iron Mask." His cell is the great attraction for the visitors who come to the island from Cannes during the winter season. It is a miserable, cellar-like place, vaulted like a casemate. Its whitewashed walls are covered with thousands of English and American autographs. There is a single window, with a triple row of iron grates, a couple of feet apart. The cell is 21 ft. by 18 ft. There are several other similar chambers in the same corridor. Adjoining it is a building of three floors, with strongly iron-barred windows, in which the insurgent Arabs from Algiers were confined within eighteen months past. A certain number of them were allowed to come over to Cannes daily for marketing, and wandered dolefully about the streets. The Paris correspondents discussing Marshal Bazaine's case have spoken of his enjoying a villa and garden on the Isle of St. Marguerite; but there is very little of that in the place. A high blank wall stands immediately in front of the house, at about 30 ft. distance. No windows face the mainland. Some of the houses at Cannes may be seen over the low parapet wall which crowns the summit of the precipice on which the fort stands. The garrison laundry occupies the ground in rear of the house. The only inhabitants of the island except the garrison of the fort are a few woodmen.

impressions. He seems to think that France is conspiring against its own peace, and that it behoves him, as head of the Parliamentary Government, to prevent France from carrying her will into effect. He is, we may say, a doctrinaire to the verge of fanaticism, and seems to consider—no doubt, honestly—that the system of administration which commends itself to his judgment should be applied without modification, whatever may be the condition or the feelings of the population of France.

It is certainly singular that the head of the present Government has only of late discovered the necessity of extending the reach of a centralised Executive. There was a time not long since when M. de Broglie, in concert with his party, strongly objected to the proposal of M. Thiers to place under the authority of the Government the nomination of mayors in the more populous cities of France. He ought not to have been surprised that a policy of decentralisation could not be so lightly abandoned by all the members of his own party as it has been by himself. He ought to have foreseen that the ultra-Legitimists would take advantage of his proposals, and of the blind impetuosity with which they were urged, to attempt to give effect to their own views, and, at the same time, to avenge upon the present Government the failure of their scheme to reinstall the ancient Monarchy of France in the person of the Comte de Chambord. The Duc has made a gross mistake in tactics, and has suffered from it; and, albeit he may yet carry his bill, the influence of the circumstances under which he will carry it will go far towards neutralising its political and party value, even according to the standard by which he would estimate it.

There has been some excitement of the public mind stirred by this event, but over no very great area of population, and not very profound in its character. No approach towards revolutionary agitation has been made. The French people are beginning to learn that nothing is to be permanently gained by the adjournment of political contests from the Parliamentary arena into the streets. All parties—save, indeed, the extremist section of Republicans—have accepted the lessons drilled into their minds and hearts by the late war. They desire nothing better at present than social order and quietude. They would fain derive strength from industry and frugality, such as will enable them to stand up under the load of taxation which they have to bear. They are gradually becoming familiar with the extremely superficial character of mere Parliamentary crises. They no longer see in the fall of a Ministry a justification of revolution. In the late events they have preserved their patience; and there is some ground for hope that in what is yet to come they will still preserve it. True, they have never been accustomed to prize political liberty in comparison with national glory; and in this respect, perhaps, the character of the people has undergone no lasting change. But one cannot but observe with pleasure that constitutional and parliamentary practices are being substituted as a remedy for wrong, in the place of popular tumults and insurrections; and that where, not many years since, physical force would have been appealed to as an ultimate resort against political oppression, legal methods of resistance are now preferred, and a Ministerial crisis is resolved by constitutional means. We have good hope that our neighbours across the Strait will habituate themselves to the conduct of their political affairs by an exclusive use of those means of protection or aggression which are put within their power by the institutions and laws of their country.

The Dean will perform the Protestant rite at the Royal and Imperial marriage.

On the night of the marriage St. Petersburg will be illuminated by J. Defries and Sons, of Houndsditch.

THE LATE MR. WINTERBOTHAM, M.P.

THE LATE MR. J. A. GALIGNANI, OF PARIS.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT CHARTERIS.

The death of Lieutenant Alfred Walter Charteris, the second son and eldest that survived of Lord Elcho's five sons, has been mentioned with sincere regret, as the premature and sudden end of a promising young officer's career, like that of Lieutenant Eardley Wilmot, among the first sacrifices that our best English and Scottish families are called upon to offer to the risks of a West African war. Lieutenant Charteris had not, with the other young officer above named, an opportunity of meeting the enemy and receiving his mortal wound in action. He died of fever, on board H.M.S. Simoom, from the pestilential climate of that coast, on Nov. 23, having been attacked by illness very early in the campaign, for which he had volunteered with chivalrous gallantry and devotion to a soldier's duty. He had obtained the appointment of aide-de-camp to Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley. The Hon. Alfred Walter Charteris was twenty-six years of age, having been born on June 2, 1847. He was educated at Harrow, and first entered the Army in the 71st Regiment, but, in August, 1869, exchanged into the Coldstream Guards. His elder brother, the Hon. Francis Charteris, died in July, 1870. His father, Lord Elcho, M.P. for Haddingtonshire, is the clever, earnest, and justly popular leader of the volunteer rifle movement, and the zealous promoter of military reform. He is eldest son and heir to the Earl of Wemyss and March, and was born in 1818; Lady Elcho is a daughter of the late Earl of Lichfield. A brother of Lord Elcho is Colonel the Hon. Richard Charteris, of the Scots Fusilier Guards; another, the Hon. Walter Charteris, of the 92nd Highlanders, was killed in the battle of Balaclava; and one is a Captain in the Navy. Their ancestry is traced back to Macduff, the thane of Fife who overthrew Macbeth.

The portrait of Lieutenant Charteris is from a photograph approved by his friends.

THE LATE

MR. WINTERBOTHAM, M.P.

The late Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, who died, after a few hours' illness, on Dec. 6, at Rome, is much lamented by a large circle of friends, and will be missed by his political associates. Mr. Henry Selfe Page Winterbotham, who was the second son of Mr. Lindsey Winterbotham, a banker, of Stroud, was born in 1837. He was educated at Amersham School, Bucks, and afterwards went to University College, London, where he graduated with honours, B.A. in 1856 and LL.B. in 1859; was Hume Scholar in Jurisprudence in 1858, Hume Scholar in Political Economy in 1859, and in the same year University Law Scholar. He was subsequently elected a Fellow of his college. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in November, 1860, and practised at the Chancery Bar and as a conveyancer till he was appointed Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department in March, 1871. He had represented Stroud in the House of Commons since August, 1867, having been re-elected in 1868 by a majority of 700 over Mr. Dorington, who is now returned. Mr. Winterbotham was an independent Liberal, and, as an hereditary Dissenter, took a prominent part in the debates on the University Tests Bill and other measures of religious equality. In March, 1871, he was offered by Mr. Gladstone the office of Under-Secretary, which he accepted, giving up his practice at the Bar and throwing himself entirely into political life. He was, indeed, offered, soon afterwards, the lucrative appointment of legal member of the Indian Council of Government at Calcutta, left vacant by Mr. Fitz-james Stephen; but this he declined. His Parliamentary conduct was such as to gain the esteem of opposing parties for his consistency and dignity of behaviour, as well as for the abilities he displayed both as a speaker and in the industrious performance of official work.

The portrait of Mr. Winterbotham is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company.

THE LATE MR. GALIGNANI.

English tourists and residents all over the Continent of Europe are familiarly acquainted with Galignani's Messenger, that most convenient and readable daily compilation of home and foreign news, which has been punctually issued, during many years past, from its office at the favourite reading-rooms of our countrymen, in the Rue de Rivoli, at Paris. The elder of the two brothers Galignani, who founded and have conducted this useful journal, died a few days after Christmas. John Anthony and William Galignani were born in London, though of Italian parentage—the former in October, 1796; the latter in 1798. Their father established an English publishing-house in Paris during the short Peace of Amiens, in 1800, and in 1808 brought out a monthly magazine or review, entitled the Repertory of English Literature, Arts, and Sciences. After the fall of Napoleon, in 1814, Mr. Galignani started the Messenger, which has since his death, in 1821, been carried on by his two sons. It has undoubtedly done much good in maintaining friendship between the English and French nations, and in helping them to know each other; it has avoided mixing, on its own account, in political controversies, but has contributed to the spread of correct information; and we believe its unpretentious influence has served the cause of peace better than all the Peace Congresses that ever were held. Both the Messrs. Galignani were decorated by the French Government with the Legion of Honour.

They also received from the British Government, in 1866, a special token of approbation, the gift of a splendid silver épergne, presented through Lord Cowley, her Majesty's Ambassador, to acknowledge their benevolent efforts for the relief of distressed British subjects in Paris. It was the late Mr. Galignani who founded near Paris the charitable establishment known as the "Galignani Hospital," intended specially for indigent English sick persons; and he, conjointly with his brother, defrayed the whole expense of building, in the vicinity of their country residence, the present large hospital at Corbeil, in a very healthy situation, and with extensive grounds attached. The deceased gentleman, after the late war, retired into private life.

The portrait of Mr. Galignani is from a photograph by Mr. Bingham, of the Rue de la Rochefoucauld, Paris.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT ALFRED CHARTERIS.

The portrait in oil of Mr. Edward Baines, M.P., which has recently been painted by Mr. R. Walker, was, on Monday, presented at the Leeds Town-hall to the Mayor (Alderman Maraden), as the representative of the corporation. There was a large attendance of aldermen, councillors, &c., who had subscribed for the portrait. Mr. Baines, who was received with cheers, acknowledged, in felicitous terms, the honour done to him by the presentation, and remarked that his father was elected three times for Leeds, so was his brother, and so had he himself been. He gave a succinct and comprehensive sketch of the various reforms effected during the nineteenth century, which he described as "the era of the struggles and triumphs of Liberalism." He instanced free trade, the extension of the franchise, and the provisions for the protection of its exercise, the abolition of religious tests, the removal of the taxes upon knowledge, increase in the means of education, the improvement of the land laws, the abolition of slavery in the West Indies, and the amelioration of the condition of factory and other operatives.

"EARLY LESSONS," BY V. W. BROMLEY.
IN THE WINTER EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

THE WAR ON THE GOLD COAST.

Our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, whose arrival at Cape Coast Castle was announced last week, contributes to this Number of our Journal a panoramic view of that seaport town and fortress, sketched by him from the deck of the mail steam-boat Volta.

"Cape Coast" is an unmeaning name, derived from a corruption of the Portuguese "Cabo Corso," which signified, in old times, the ordinary point of termination for a "course" or cruise along the West African coast. This place has belonged to the English more than 200 years, and is the head quarters of the Gold Coast settlements, but is subject to a Governor-General at Sierra Leone. There is no harbour, but an open roadstead, and the landing-place, which is very bad, as everywhere on this coast, is in a small bay under the north-eastern bastion of the castle, protected by a reef jutting out from a ledge of rocks. From May to August, the ocean rolling in with its full violence, there is a terrific surf; but in December, January, and February, the Harmattan wind blowing off shore, the sea is less feared here. It requires, however, much skill at any time to manage the canoes for landing. A few steps up the steep rock, which is called Tabara, rising eighteen feet above the sea, bring the landed traveller into the gateway of the castle. It is a vast irregular pile, covering several acres, and in some parts four stories high. Within it is a large triangular space, used for drill, adorned with two mortars and five old Danish brass guns. On the west side is a range of substantial and rather stately buildings, which contain the Council Chamber and the Government offices, with a gallery paved in squares of black and white marble; on another side are barracks, and bastions mounted with guns. The Castle further includes a Court-House for trials, and quarters for the garrison. Passing out of the Spur Battery Gate, across the esplanade, into the town, the stranger finds himself in a broad street, lined with ragged umbrellatrees, a kind of ficus. He notices the Episcopalian church and the Wesleyan meeting-house; but the town is a mixture of white-washed houses and red-brown clay huts, with dingy roofs of dull grey thatch. The high ground and hills, above the town, present several detached forts, or military buildings. The first, which lies north-west of the town, is Phipps' Tower, or Fort Victoria, a martello tower, so placed that in the hands of an enemy it would command both castle and town. The second or central post is Smith's Tower, now Fort William, built by Mr. President Maclean, another martello tower, circular below and square above, mounting twelve guns; it has a lighthouse, 192 ft. above sea-level. The principal castle is upon the rock which rises immediately out of the sea, and the town clusters around it, or close behind it. On the left, or north of the castle, is Fort Macarthy, on the crest of a detached hill. Below, a mile north-west of the town, is a salt lagoon, partly discharging itself into the sea. North-east is Connor Hill, which ought to be the sanitarium of Cape Coast Castle. There are several large and handsome old houses in the town, built by the rich merchants of former days.

The native townsfolk of the lower class, who are Fantees, are dressed in a cotton loin-cloth and sheet wrapped about them; they are chocolate-coloured, and not ill-shaped. The women have necklaces, earrings, bracelets, and anklets of metal, and their hair is drawn up to a stiff ridge, with a pad or a high comb to support it; behind them is worn a "cankey," or cushion, upon which the baby is sometimes carried. These women do all the hard work, and the gangs of female baggage-porters hired to carry provisions to the front for the use of our troops are shown in several of the present illustrations. They are paid a shilling a day for the work, and sixpence a day for their subsistence while so employed. The scene at the castle about eight o'clock in the morning, when as many as 400 receive their loads and their sixpenny allowance to start for the day's journey, is one of great bustle; and the women crowd upon each other so that it is difficult to keep them in order. They pass in succession through an arched gateway of the castle quadrangle, each woman bearing upon her head a 50-lb. tin case of Australian preserved meat, or rice, or biscuits, which she will convey a distance of twenty miles in the course of the day. Some of them go no farther than this first stage of the road, but return next day to Cape Coast Castle, and are then prepared for another job; others perform four stages, day after day, thereby transporting the stores a length of eighty miles.

The Fantee men, who have proved cowardly and worthless as soldiers, are also employed as store-carriers in the farther stages of the road, but they will run away into the bush at every opportunity, and hundreds of them are flogged in punishment of this offence. The women, though troublesome, are not so bad as the men. A few of the girls are not ugly, but those of middle age cannot be praised for their good looks. They are very clean in their persons and clothing, yet a disagreeable smell arises from the negro skin when heated by toil under the sun of that climate. A large number of these people are slaves, owned by persons who are not British subjects, and outside the very narrow jurisdiction of the British Government. A young woman is bought and sold for £5 at Cape Coast Castle, in spite of the laws and opinions of the English people.

When more bearers are wanted, a few of the head women are sent round the town to summon them to the castle, by ringing a bell and making proclamation in a loud voice. In our Artist's sketch of this and another street scene, the reader sees how the Cape Coast Castle women do their laundry-work, washing and hanging up things to dry, in the most public manner; and how their children, all but naked, roll about or gambol in the street, with sheep and goats, dogs and fowls, straying freely over the ground. The squalid lanes and alleys inhabited by these people were explored by our Artist; but he was obliged to hold a scented handkerchief to his nose, and could not make a sketch. He tells us of the ruinous state of their flat-roofed mud hovels, which sometimes fall and bury whole families, alive or dead, in a heap of rubbish. The floor of a room in these dwellings is the hard earth, with a gutter across it for the water to run off; the fireplace consists of three cones of baked clay, between which the fire is made, and the pot for cooking rests upon their tops. Our Correspondent found a Fantee matron, with a baby perched and tied upon the curious bundle at the lower part of her back, engaged in preparing a dish of maize porridge, which he was kindly invited to share; but he had no stomach for the food in that house, and her invitation was politely declined.

The date of his last letter was Dec. 16, and he was to start, on the 20th, in company with the Standard correspondent, for the advanced guard of the expedition on the banks of the Prah. General Sir Garnet Wolseley had allowed him all the facilities and needful accommodation he could reasonably desire. We have news by telegraph to the 27th, on which day the General and his staff, with the naval brigade, 400 strong, left Cape Coast Castle for the Prah. The European troops (the Rifle Brigade and Welsh Fusiliers, if not the 42nd Highlanders) were expected to advance on New-Year's Day. The country beyond the Prah, in the dominions of Ashantee, had been explored to seven miles north of that river, by scouts who found no sign of the enemy there; but the Ashantee army had left many dead along its line of retreat. Captain Glover, with his force of natives at the mouth of the river Volta, had not been able to proceed up the country. "The unwillingness of the natives, for fetich reasons," is assigned as the cause of this failure. He would therefore first turn his arms against a hostile coast tribe, the Ahuras, and then march to join Sir Garnet Wolseley on the Prah about the 14th inst. The town of Chamah, where the boats' party of Commodore Commerell was attacked at an earlier period of the war, has been destroyed by the neighbouring people of Commenda. The Royal Engineers were constructing the telegraph, from Cape Coast Castle to the Prah, at the rate of six miles a day. The late military commandant, Lieutenant-Colonel Festing, Royal Marine Artillery, has been promoted to the rank of Colonel for his services on the Gold Coast. It is hoped that the campaign may be accomplished in the months of January and February, and before the middle of March.

"EARLY LESSONS."

In the "good old times," to which this pleasantly-conceived and cleverly-executed picture, by Mr. Valentine W. Bromley, carries us back, youth were taught some things which have almost dropped out of the modern curriculum of education, physical or mental. Foremost among these was the art of fencing. When every gentleman carried a sword, it was necessary to know how to use it; when war-service was not confined to a distinct profession, and when the social manners were such that every one was liable to a challenge and dared not decline, it was also of literally vital importance to know how to handle a sword well. Be it remembered also that the rapier was the sword in general use—a weapon to be master of which demands long training of eye, and hand, and foot, and a development of the flexor and extensor muscles of the whole frame, so as to command the utmost agility combined with power. The elements of fencing seem simple enough, yet nothing but the severest training will render anyone a master of the subtleties of carte and tierce, feint, and thrust and parry; so, as we see in this picture of the old retainer playfully engaged with his little master, the lessons in this "noble art" had to be commenced early. The little fellow is heir, perhaps, of a great house, and the "early lessons" may be of service on many romantic occasions by-and-by; but we must leave the artist's suggestions to the reader's imagination. Suffice it to add that the picture is in the Exhibition of the Society of British Artists.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, Jan. 15.

We have had a somewhat agitated political week, commencing with the adjournment of the proposed municipal law and the resignation of the Ministry, and concluding, singularly enough, with the obnoxious measure and the reinstatement of the Government in power. The preliminary debate on the Nomination of Mayors Bill opened with a speech from M. de Franchieu, a Legitimist of the extreme school, who proposed postponing the discussion on the measure until after the vote on the organic municipal law. While violently attacking the Republican party, he strongly opposed the contemplated measure, observing that at each election the revolutionary flood might be seen rising, and that, however well organised the municipalities might be, they would be powerless to stem the tide of demagoguery. After a few words from M. Clapier describing the bill as a measure of urgency, M. Ernest Picard made a long speech in favour of its postponement, defending the conduct of the Republican party, and stigmatising that of the Government in the strongest terms. The Duc de Broglie next mounted the tribune, and in the course of his short address said the Cabinet absolutely required to be armed with the proposed powers. He was, however, answered, in the most felicitous manner, by M. Picard.

The debate eventually took a most singular turn. On President Buffet putting the question of postponement to the vote by the members rising or remaining seated, it was evident that the majority was with the Left, the benches of the Right being but thinly filled; still, in the midst of considerable confusion, the Bureau declared the trial doubtful. It was repeated a second time, with the same result, the Left loudly protesting against the evident bad faith of the President and the Bureau. A secret and nominal ballot having been demanded, to prevent the members of the Right from voting for absent friends, as they often did, M. Haentjens, a Bonapartist, proposed to leave the balloting open till next day. This was protested against by the Left, and a violent and confused discussion arose, in which MM. Grévy, Fournier, De Kerdrel, and President Buffet took part. The question debated was the delaying of the vote owing to there not being 500 delegates present. M. Buffet, having vacated the Presidential fauteuil, was replaced by M. de Goulard, who, when the scrutiny was over, insisted upon postponing the proclamation of the result for a quarter of an hour, to enable absent deputies to arrive and vote. M. Duvergier de Hauranne, on protesting against the Vice-President's partiality, found himself called to order for his pains. At length the result was made known, and it appeared that the Government had been defeated by a majority of 42. It was evident that the vote had been directed more against the Duc de Broglie personally than against the Cabinet as a collective body. The Ministers, however, decided to stand or fall with their Premier, and unanimously resigned. Marshal MacMahon, as had been foreseen, refused to accept their resignations, and the Assembly, having adjourned until Monday to give the Government time to adopt some line of action, the delay was utilised by the Cabinet to recruit all their absent partisans and prepare for a decisive battle.

Monday's sitting opened with an interpellation from M. de Kerdrel, who, in the name of the Conservative "Majorité de combat," urged the Government to remain at its post. The Duc de Broglie replied that the Assembly had adjourned the discussion on the proposed municipal law, and that, as the Ministry felt that it would be impossible to govern the country without this measure, it had been obliged to resign. The members of the Right immediately proposed an order of the day expressing the confidence of the Assembly in the Government; and a vote was about to be taken, when M. Raoul Duval, one of the Duc de Broglie's most bitter personal enemies, mounted the tribune, and delivered a long speech equally condemning the equivocal conduct of Government and the servile attitude of the majority. He wanted to know what was the real Government of France—a Republic, an Empire, or a Monarchy; and whether Marshal MacMahon's presidency was a mere fiction, and nothing more. He insinuated that the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues were working behind the scenes in favour of some pretender, and concluded by announcing that he and his friends would not vote the order of the day expressing confidence in the Ministry. After a short speech from M. E. Picard, who formally asked the Duc de Broglie if he was intriguing on behalf of the Count de Chambord, to which the Premier only vouchsafed an evasive reply, the Assembly passed to the vote, rejecting the order of the day pure and simple demanded by the Left, and expressing its confidence in the Cabinet by 379 ayes to 321 noes. The sitting terminated by the Chamber deciding to discuss the obnoxious municipal law on the morrow, in spite of its previous vote, which had postponed the debate indefinitely.

Tuesday's sitting opened with a vigorous speech from M. Louis Blanc against the proposed nomination of provincial mayors by the Government to which an obscure member of the Right, the Marquis de Valfons, attempted to reply. M. Christophle combated the proposed measure in the name of the Left Centre, attacking the Duc de Broglie with great animosity, and reminding him that in 1869 he had declared himself to be "the devoted son of the principles of 1789." "I tell him," exclaimed M. Christophle, as he sat down amid the loud plaudits of the Republican party, "that the country is hostile to the political system which he has inaugurated, and that if he did his duty he would retire." The Duc de Broglie abstained from replying, M. Baragnon defending the proposed municipal measure in an energetic but very lengthy oration.

The discussion on the bill was proceeded with yesterday. M. Pascal Duprat, a member of the Left, maintained that the real object of the measure was to favour Monarchical schemes, but that the attempt to effect a restoration would merely facilitate the return of the Empire. Loud cheers from the Left followed these remarks. The House by 378 against 316 votes then declared the general debate closed, and agreed to proceed to the discussion of the articles. M. de Pressensé afterwards brought forward a counter-project in opposition to the Government bill, but it was defeated by a majority of 64.

Tuesday's Journal Officiel makes the formal announcement that, at the request of Marshal MacMahon, all the French Ministers withdrew their resignations after Monday's sitting.

Marshal MacMahon yesterday week invested the three new French Cardinals with the insignia of their dignity.

The first of the series of receptions given by Marshal MacMahon at the Elysée Palace took place yesterday evening, when nearly 2000 guests were present, the majority of whom belonged to the army. There was, however, a fair sprinkling of diplomats, functionaries, and deputies; the ladies, as a matter of course, being largely represented. A temporary salle de bal had been erected in the garden of the palace, which was brilliantly lighted up with coloured lamps.

SPAIN.

Cartagena has at length fallen, the insurgent Junta escaping in a man-of-war with about 2500 of their most desperate followers. Overtures were made to General Dominguez on Monday. He required unconditional surrender, promising pardon to all who gave up their arms within four-and-twenty hours, the members of the old and new Juntas excepted. The same night the troops entered the town, but not till the ringleaders had escaped. As the Numancia steamed out of the harbour she passed five Government frigates, and there was at one time an appearance of engaging her; but in the end it was deemed advisable to give her a wide berth. Though it missed the Numancia, the Spanish fleet has captured a small steamer, the Darro, which was trying to escape from Cartagena with refugees. It is reported from Oran that the Numancia has surrendered to the French authorities, and is flying the French colours. The Mendez Nunez has reached another Algerian port, with a French frigate attending her. As a first consequence of the capture of Cartagena, part of the troops which were recently besieging it have already been sent away to fight against the Carlists.

Having allowed the Carlists to get into Portugalete, General Moriones now proposes, it is stated, to turn their positions. A correspondent telegraphs from St. Jean de Luz that he is marching with 13,000 men towards Castraga.

The insurrection at Barcelona has not yet been put down.

In a long manifesto the Serrano Ministry declares that it reappears in its original character as the author of the revolution of 1868 and of the Constitution of 1869. It professes to see no change in the situation, except the disappearance of King Amadeus. Regarding its future policy, it promises that it will steer a middle course between absolutism and anarchy.

The Republican volunteers have been ordered to deliver up their arms, and those who refuse to do so will be tried by court-martial.

Manuel Espatar, who was lying under sentence of death in the Saladero prison for attempting to assassinate the ex-King Amadeus, has escaped, and the Governor of Madrid has ordered the arrest of all the gaol officials.

GERMANY.

The general elections to the German Parliament took place on Saturday last. An approximate estimate of the result is given by the Times correspondent at Berlin as follows:—100 Ultramontanes, 12 Socialists, 15 Poles and Danes, 15 Alsatians, 10 Particularists, 10 anti-Ministerial Conservatives, 10 doubtful Liberals, 225 Ministerial Liberals. The Ultramontanes have gained some 30 and the Socialists at least 7 seats. Notwithstanding this loss and the addition to the House of 15 Alsatians, the Liberals still are expected to muster about 220 in an Assembly of 397 members.

The following is the official declaration of the results of the voting in Berlin:—In the first district, the successful candidate was Herr Hagen; in the second district, Herr Klotz; in the third district, Herr Hoyerbeck; in the fourth district, Herr Ebert; in the fifth district, Herr Duncker; in the sixth district a second ballot will be requisite.

The Prussian Government has submitted to the House of Deputies bills demanding its sanction for the raising of 50,600,000 thalers for railway purposes.

The Second Chamber of Saxony has fixed at 950,000 thalers the Civil List of King Albert.

HOLLAND.

The Government has received an official despatch from General van Swieten, dated Penang, Jan. 11, announcing that the Dutch troops have bombarded the Kraton and Missigit, and have taken the latter position by assault. The defence made by the Acheneese was desperate, as they had been excited by absurd reports respecting the intentions of the Dutch. The Dutch losses were 17 killed and 197 wounded, the greater part slightly. Notwithstanding their losses, they gained a great success. In a later telegram relative to the expedition, it is said that the troops are constructing batteries at Missigit, and materially strengthening their position. The camp continues healthy.

A large fire has occurred at Natick, in Massachusetts.

INDIA.

Last week's official telegram respecting the famine in Bengal is favourable as to some districts, but alarming as to others. Behar is stated to be in a critical condition; and, should the rain keep off for another fortnight, there will be widespread distress. In the Presidency there is no change. In Patna the prospects of the spring crop are satisfactory. In Bhagulpore the situation has improved.

The Times of Thursday publishes a telegram from Calcutta, dated the 14th, stating that rain has fallen in several districts of Bengal, with benefit to the crops. Prices continue to rise; and in Patna and elsewhere the number of people employed at the relief works is increasing. On Monday a third of an inch of rain fell at Patna, and a tenth at Dacca.

By another telegram from the same correspondent we learn that Sir G. Campbell, presiding at the Social Science Association on Wednesday, urged a discussion of social questions as producing political freedom. He recommended to zemindars home farms and approved of leases. The native speakers said that all India felt loyalty to the Queen and desired British civilisation.

The Viceroy opened the Government horse show in Calcutta on Monday last, and personally offered additional prizes. Fifty horses were exhibited.

The Viceroy has signed a treaty with Siam promoting commerce between Burmah and Zimmoy, with a view of protecting the timber trade and preventing crime. The Envoys were to leave on Saturday (to-day).

Steam communication between Odessa and Constantinople having been suspended, owing to the port of the former place being closed by ice, letters for Constantinople cannot be forwarded by this route at present. Mails for Malta intended for conveyance via Italy will for the future be made up in London on the evening of every Tuesday, and a supplementary mail will also be despatched on the Wednesday morning, on the chance of its reaching Naples in time for the steamer.

The following letter, addressed to the Bishop of Troyes by the Empress Eugénie, is published in the Ordre:—"Camden Place, Chislehurst, Jan. 10, 1874.—Monsignor,—I am told, but I can scarcely believe it to be true, that you have forbidden the celebration of masses which it was desired should be said in your diocese for the repose of the soul of the Emperor Napoleon III. I cannot believe it, because the Church has never refused prayers for the dead. The spirit of charity and brotherly love form one long chain which binds us the one to the other—rich or poor, those in prosperity or those in adversity, the living and the dead! No; it is impossible that you can have refused a prayer for him who founded the institution of almoners for saying prayers after death. No; it is impossible, when you protest against those civil burials which deprive a Christian of the prayers of the Church, that you can have refused those same prayers when asked for. Moreover, it is impossible that you can have forgotten the oath which you took in the presence of him who is no more. If, however, such be really the case, I can only finish my letter by calling to your memory the closing sentence in the form of oath taken by our Bishops: 'May God call me to account for it!'—EUGÉNIE."

The Extra Supplement.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH AND HIS BRIDE.

The marriage of our Queen's second son to the Czar's only daughter is an occasion for congratulating both the English and Russian nations, and all the civilised world of Europe, and all that still needs the civilising power of these two great empires in Asia, upon the prospect of future peace and friendly co-operation. His Imperial Majesty Alexander II. is a just, benevolent, and truly liberal Sovereign, in whose disposition, proved by all his acts during nineteen years, we find the surest pledge of an enlightened policy, agreeable to the real interests of mankind. The good intention of his Government seem to be appreciated by the neighbouring Courts of Berlin and Vienna; and there is no reason why the statesmen of London and those of St. Petersburg should not cultivate a mutual good understanding. The Princes and Princesses of the two reigning families are determined, for their part, to keep up an entente cordiale which rests on their personal esteem for the amiable qualities of each other. We lately saw the Czarewitsch and his Czarevna much in the company of our Prince and Princess of Wales; their sister, the charming Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, will presently become the wife of our Prince Alfred, and three happily wedded pairs, embracing two princely daughters of Denmark, will then be more closely bound together in amity by a triple tie of fraternal affection. Her Imperial Highness, the bride for whom a hundred millions of people in the two countries and their remoter provinces are invited to pray a matrimonial blessing, is a young lady quite worthy of such a husband. She was twenty years of age in October, and we hope she will live among us in London a great many years, and many years afterwards in the serene enjoyment of a German sovereignty to be inherited by Prince Alfred, of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. As for him, the Duke of Edinburgh, Captain in the Royal Navy, we have nothing more to say of his Royal Highness than to repeat the former sincere expressions of our respectful admiration for his general character and behaviour, as an able and zealous officer, an English gentleman of an high honour, and a Prince of exemplary loyalty and public spirit. He will be thirty next August, and it was quite time for him to provide himself with a wife. All the world has approved his choice; and we have only to wait its nuptial ratification, followed by the arrival of their Royal Highnesses in England, that we may offer them our most hearty felicitations upon this joyful occasion.

The Portrait of the Duke of Edinburgh we have engraved is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company; and that of the Grand Duchess is from one by Mr. W. Luke, of St. Petersburg.

The notice of the appointment of the Rev. Y. A. Barrington to the chaplaincy of the Maidstone Gaol, given last week, is incorrect.

The installation of Dr. Woodford, Bishop of Ely, will be performed on Tuesday morning next, after morning prayers.

The Rev. Dr. Leary has been presented with a purse of £100 and an address by the parishioners of Christ Church, Epsom, as a mark of respect, on resigning the curacy.

Dr. Liddon resumed the lectures to men, on Tuesday evening, in St. Paul's Cathedral. His subject was "The Life of St. Paul." A second lecture on the same subject will be delivered next Tuesday evening.

Mr. Benyon, M.P., has subscribed £500 to the fund for raising a memorial to the late Bishop Wilberforce. To the end of 1873 the total sum promised for the memorial was over £4000. This amount falls short of expectations which had been formed, especially with regard to a proposed statue and a missionary studentship at Cuddesdon College.

On Thursday week the school chapel of St. Mary Magdalen, Oakhanger, was opened by the Bishop of Winchester, who preached on the faith and diligence of the shepherds and the wise men, and administered the holy communion, of which a considerable number partook. The hamlet is in the new district of Blackmoor, which was separated from the parish of Selborne a few years ago.

The first turf of a link line of railway was cut in Gisburne Park, Lancashire, last week, by Lord Ribblesdale. The directors of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, and others, were present. The line, when completed, will shorten the distance by rail from London to Scotland by thirty-two miles.

The following days have been selected for the respective yacht-matches of the forthcoming season:—Royal Thames Yacht Club—Cutter-races, May 25; schooners and yawls, June 10; Channel match to Dover, June 24. New Thames Yacht Club—Opening cruise, May 23; cutter-races, May 26; schooners and yawls, June 11; match to Harwich, June 20.

An accident, which from its nature might have been even more calamitous, befell the Great Northern Scotch express last Saturday evening at Barkstone Junction, two miles and a half north of Grantham. By some error a Boston stopping train had moved on to the main line, and was struck near its centre by the engine of the fast train, then travelling at the rate of between thirty and forty miles an hour. The fireman of the express was killed by an escape of steam, and a passenger was crushed to death. A dense fog prevailed at the time of the collision. The inquest on the Malton Railway accident ended on Tuesday in a verdict of manslaughter against Jackson, the signal inspector, and Boynton, a relief signalman.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The death of Tom Olliver will be much regretted by all classes of sporting men, as, for some forty years past, he has been a very well known turf character. He first appeared as a steeple-chase jockey, and, as an old friend of his remarked to us a few days ago, was a "most owdacious rider," and had many a desperate finish with his great rival, Jem Mason, and Captain Little, the best gentleman rider of that day. He performed the wonderful feat of riding three Grand National winners in succession—Gaylad in 1842 (which was the last occasion when the weights were 12st. each), Vanguard in 1843, and Peter Simple in 1844. As a trainer he greatly distinguished himself, especially with Albert Victor, who was a very delicate horse, and yet was brought to the Derby and St. Leger posts in the pink of condition. Perhaps Fairwater was one of Olliver's greatest favourites, and Ely about the best horse he ever trained; and to his skill and care Mr. Cartwright is greatly indebted for many of the victories he has achieved of late years.

During a run from Adbury Lodge, near Newbury, to Lord Carnarvon's covers, Mr. Harcourt Capper, master of the Craven hounds, had a fall, by which his right shoulder was dislocated. He is making satisfactory progress.

After a period of unexampled stagnation in all kinds of sport, the entries for the various great spring handicaps have appeared, so that the persistent followers of racing have at length something to talk about and bet upon. We append a table of the number of entries for the chief events for this and the previous seven years, for which we are indebted to the Sportsman:—

Liverpool Steeplechase	104	107	109	88	111	85	109	93
City and Suburban	113	141	107	140	165	156	129	113
Great Metropolitan	82	94	47	85	74	76	43	45
Northamptonshire Stakes	84	96	80	81	61	49	43	37
Newmarket Handicap	59	69	60	69	81	57	61	50
Chester Cup	150	140	126	123	124	103	109	80
Lincolnshire Handicap	84	79	89	63	65	121	100	159

It cannot be said that a study of this is altogether satisfactory, as there is this year a marked falling off in the number of horses engaged for every event except the Lincolnshire Handicap, which has made a marvellous stride, and has secured as much patronage as the City and Suburban and the Great Metropolitan combined. This is doubtless owing to the very liberal addition of £1000 to the stake and to the recent alteration in the course, by which a straight mile has been obtained, and the largest field of horses can be manoeuvred at the starting-post with perfect safety. It is not surprising that the entries for the Grand National should be below the average, considering the present dearth of good steeplechasers. Disturbance, Ciuderella, Casse Tête, Footman, Congress, Furley, Cramoisi, Harvester, Eurotas, and Ryshworth are the pick of the tried steeplechasers engaged; while Molly Cobroy and Barnston represent the exiles from the flat, as Laburnum, whom it had been confidently predicted would lose all his evil habits and prove a "jumper" of the first water, has not even been entered. The City and Suburban has been unfavourably affected by the great success of the Lincolnshire Handicap. M. Lefevre supports it well with eight entries, including Drummond, Eole II., and Negro; and such high-class animals as Cremorne, Kaiser, Winslow, Mornington, Kidbrooke, Wenlock, Spectator, Andred, Colonel, Thunder, Lemnos, Newry, Salvano, and Chandos have also been engaged. Uhlán, Lilian, Eole II., Winslow, and Mornington are the pick of the Great Metropolitan horses, and the first-named three are also nominated for the Northamptonshire Stakes, which has shown a steady decline for some years past, and has now been again altered to the original distance of two miles. Mr. Savile has his inseparable pair of "stayers" in the severe Newmarket Handicap, and Bertram, Eole II., and Shannon are about the best of the remainder. True to the resolution formed when he saw his favourite Mortemer defeated over the Roodee course, M. Lefevre has not a single representative in the Chester Cup; and, though Sterling has been entered, it is well known that he has run his last race, and has already joined The Duke and Oxford at the Yardley Stud Farm. Mr. Bowes, remembering last year's victory, has five horses engaged, and Mornington, Organist, Bertram, Walnut, Spectator, Colonel, Vanderdecken, Shannon, and Eucalyptus are the pick of the remainder, while it is worth noting that Captain Machell has entered Disturbance, the winner of last year's Grand National. Almost everything possessing the gift of going has put in a claim for the £1000 offered at Lincoln, and M. Lefevre has taken eleven chances, Roquefort, Drummond, and Eve being about his best; and when we see the names of such "flyers" as Thorn, Lily Agnes, Andred, Thunder, Sugarcane, Newry, Salvano, Vanderdecken, and Chandos, we feel sure that the Lincoln Handicap ought to take the lead of the great spring events. The Ascot Cup has obtained a splendid entry of twenty-four, exactly one-fourth of this number being nominated by M. Lefevre; and what a glorious race we should have if Winslow, Gang Forward, Boiard, Montargis, Flageolet, Eccosais, Marie Stuart, Cremorne, and Uhlán could all come to the post fit and well! We observe with the greatest satisfaction that, in spite of the positive statements that he had taken leave of the turf, Prince Charlie has been engaged in several short races; so we are likely to have a few more opportunities of witnessing the marvellous speed of "the Prince of the T.Y.C."

The horses trained at Kingsclere have always been somewhat subject to severe epidemics, and Polyhymnia has just died from the effects of one which broke out a few days ago; while the lives of two or three other animals are despaired of. Polyhymnia was a daughter of Asteroid and Monaca; and, from her performances last season, appeared to have a fair chance for the One Thousand and Oaks.

Our countrymen are faring very badly in Australia. Their first match resulted in a defeat, the second in a draw (greatly in their favour), and now we hear that a Twenty-two of the Stawell Cricket Club have beaten them by ten wickets, Mr. Grace and his entire team actually succumbing for 43 runs in their first innings.

Mr. Close, the president of the Cambridge University Boat Club, has taken up his quarters on the Cam, for the purpose of coaching the next University crew.

A billiard-match, for £100 a side, which arose out of the recent great handicap, was played at the Guildhall Tavern, on Wednesday night, between J. Roberts, jun., and F. Bennett, the latter receiving a start of 300 points. Roberts scored fast at first, and caught his opponent at 517; but the game then became very exciting, as Bennett twice regained the lead, and was only beaten by 68 points. The spot-stroke was very little used; and Roberts's best break only amounted to 115, against 87 contributed by his opponent. The winner is matched with W. Cook for the championship, and they will play on Tuesday, Feb. 24, at St. James's Hall.

Mr. Spencer Walpole has lectured before the Ealing Mechanics' Institute on the Thames, its history, its use, and its abuse. He concluded with a hope that in course of time the efforts of sanitary reformers would win back the river its poetic title—the silver Thames.

NEW BOOKS.

Only an enthusiast could have so laboriously composed—and only enthusiasts, it is to be feared, will read, with proportionate interest, and sympathy, and attention—the two really majestic volumes entitled History of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots, translated from the original and unpublished MS. of Professor Petit, by Charles de Flandre, F.S.A. Scot. (Longmans, Green, and Co.). More than ten years was the author in building up his manuscript, and more than two years was the translator in performing (very ably, one would say) his by no means light portion of the work. Nothing is easier to believe than the author's statement that he neglected no opportunity which happy chance, or diligent search, or the facilities afforded by national libraries offered him of throwing light upon his subject, for a simple enumeration of the authorities referred to in the pages would fill a marvellous amount of space. He even went to the trouble and expense of having "very many unpublished letters and manuscripts copied." It must suffice here to remark briefly that the author's object was to vindicate the character of a Queen who, more, perhaps, than any other, has been tossed upon the seasaw of opinion, and to settle a question which, almost as much as any other, has divided students of history, and even ordinary readers, into two hostile hosts. The author believes himself to have established to the satisfaction of earnest truth-seekers and reasonable beings the theory, or rather the fact, of Mary's innocence in respect of all the black charges against her as regards Rizzio, Darnley, and Queen Elizabeth, even if he have not proved her to have been the veritable angel she was taken for by a poor Frenchwoman who saw her walking, one Corpus Christi Day, in all her loveliness and taper in hand, amongst the more earthly-looking members of a religious procession. That the two volumes will convince anybody who is not already inclined towards Mariolatry, or that the subject is one which it is profitable to handle nowadays, it were rash to assert; but it may be confidently affirmed that both Mary-worshippers and others have now been provided with a book which, whether it be regarded as a memorial or not, will make a handsome and even imposing ornament for a drawing-room table, and will furnish them with such a mass of elaborately collected, discussed, weighed, and annotated evidence as will afford them excellent reading for many a long day, and enable them to decide for themselves whether it is possible to arrive at the truth. They must be prepared, however, with studious resolutions and powerful nutcrackers.

A fascinating title, suggestive of Mr. Harrison Ainsworth's tales, must not be allowed to mislead the bloodthirsty and the horror-loving into a misconception of the work, entitled A History of Crime in England, by Luke Owen Pike, M.A. (Smith, Elder, and Co.). The work, of which only the first volume, ranging from the Roman invasion to the accession of Henry VII., is as yet published, threatens to leave those who shall take it up, in hopes of being thrilled with sensation, instructed and set thinking. No doubt every history of every country must be, to a certain extent, a history of each country's crime; but, in the present instance, crime has been taken for, as it were, a point of divergence, fixed in the almost undiscernible past, and shooting forth rays which vary in appearance according to different conditions of the social, religious, moral, and legal atmosphere. Of course, the author has been obliged to go over a great deal of old ground; but he has taken up a new point of observation, and he has, apparently, been at infinite pains in his search after original records which would throw light upon a subject gloomy enough in itself, but relieved by the manner in which he has treated it and the comforting assurance he seems to give of gradual amelioration. Nor must due commendation as regards other points be withheld: his plan of not cumbering his pages with notes, of relegating all such matters to an appendix, and of facilitating reference by means of a copious index, is well worthy of general imitation; and the observations he has himself made upon the method he has adopted will probably command general assent. There are certainly few things more irritating to a reader than a text besprinkled with asterisks and crosses, and numbers tacked on to the tops of words. Perhaps the second page of the volume might have been omitted with advantage; for it is always a mistake to generalise from a case or two of personal appearance, and to associate "steel-blue eye and square jaw and set lips" with deliberate murder, "ears projecting outwards" with theft, and "the massive neck, broad behind as the head itself," with perjury. Out of the heart, not the jaw, or the eyes, or the ears, or the neck, proceed evil thoughts, murders, &c.; and if we allowed ourselves to connect in our minds certain crimes with certain physical peculiarities, we might be suspicious of the most estimable amongst our fellow-creatures.

The effect of a friendly chat with a cheery, affable nobleman, who has lived a good many years and seen and heard a great deal of life, may, without any exertion or trouble, be obtained by a perusal of two large volumes, called My Recollections from 1806 to 1873, by Lord William Pitt Lennox (Hurst and Blackett). The noble author is by no means a stranger in the paths of literature; and many readers will not learn now for the first time what his relations were with the illustrious William Pitt, the great Duke of Wellington, the facetious Lord Alvanley, and other more or less distinguished men, to say nothing of women. Nor will the anecdotes, in every case, burst upon the expectant reader with the sudden flash of novelty or the pleasant shock of surprise. Still everybody cannot read every book and everybody cannot be familiar with every good saying; so that even the repetitions, when they occur, may be as fresh to some persons as the really new portions are to others. Indeed the two volumes are likely to afford, on the whole, a considerable amount of entertainment to a considerable number of people. The author's characteristics are, chiefly, frankness, kindness of tone, tendency to be easily amused, fulness of memory or note-book, desire to be accurate, and belief, probably well-founded, that the world takes pleasure in learning the most trivial occurrences in the lives of certain men. He is candid enough to tell an anecdote, which many autobiographers would have omitted, referring to the origin of his family; and he enters so far into minutiae as to describe in detail some very small incidents in his career as a lecturer. He relates, moreover, how he was once mistaken for a bagman; and how, when he was in the household cavalry, it was his privilege to ride close beside his Sovereign's carriage in order to defend, at the risk of his own life, the Lord's Anointed from an anticipated shower of cabbages. All this may have an appearance of insignificance, but it is only a little part of a better whole; and, at any rate, it bears witness to tenacity of memory and a naturally confiding spirit.

The first edition of Recollections of the Emperor Napoleon on the Island of St. Helena, by Mrs. Abell, was published in 1814, and a second in 1853; and it seemed good lately to publish a third (Sampson Low and Co.), "revised and added to by her daughter, Mrs. Charles Johnstone." Mrs. Johnstone confesses "to being an ardent Bonapartist" and to believing that "the true interests of France and England" would be "best promoted by the succession of Napoleon IV. to the throne." Hence this new edition. How it is to promote the accession of Napoleon IV. is by no means as plain as a pike-staff; but the volume is elegant enough and, even still, interesting enough, and it has illustrations, four in number, and representing, respectively, Mrs. Abell, the Emars, Napoleon I., and Longwood.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated March 15, 1872, of the Right Hon. Robert Vernon, Baron Lyveden, who died at his seat, Farming Woods, Northamptonshire, on Nov. 10 last, was proved on the 6th inst. by his two sons, Fitzpatrick Henry Vernon, now Lord Lyveden, and Greville Richard Vernon, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £250,000. The testator bequeaths the residue of his personalty to his wife for life, and, subject thereto, gives the same to his wife and his two sons in equal shares. To his second son he devises his house and lands in the parish of Oundle for life, and, after his decease, to his wife, Lady Alfredda Vernon, if she should survive him, absolutely. All his other real estate testator devises to his wife for life, and, at her decease, all such part thereof as is in the county of Northampton to such uses as the mansion house and estate called Farming Woods were settled by the settlement executed on the marriage of his eldest son; and the remainder of such residuary real estate is devised to his second son.

The will, dated April 29, 1843, of Lady Harriet Frances Ramsden (wife of Charles Ramsden), who died, on Nov. 5, at No. 48, Grosvenor-street, was proved on the 30th ult. by her said husband, the sole executor, to whom is left all the property she has a power to dispose of under her marriage settlement. The personalty is sworn under £3000. The deceased was a daughter of the first Earl of Strafford.

The will and codicil (dated, respectively, May 23, 1865, and March 9, 1869) of Dame Emily Murray, widow of the late General the Hon. Sir Henry Murray, K.C.B., late of Wimbledon, who died on Nov. 23 last, was proved on the 18th ult. by Earl Cathcart and James Banks Stanhope, the acting executors, the personalty being sworn under £25,000. Subject to legacies to her executors, to her son, Frederick Stormont Murray, and to her daughter Susan Emily Murray, testatrix leaves all her property to her daughter Gertrude Louisa Murray.

The will, dated Nov. 22, 1865, of the Rev. John Dymoke, the honourable the Queen's Champion, of Scrivelby and Roughton, Lincolnshire, who died on Nov. 22 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by Mary Ann Dymoke, the relict, the sole executrix, to whom he gives and devises all his real and personal estate absolutely, in addition to an annual rent charge of £1000 out of the barony and manor of Scrivelby which she takes under settlement.

The will and three codicils of Jeremiah Little, late of Campden-hill, Kensington, were proved on the 19th ult. by Alfred Bennett and Francis Carr Beard, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator bequeaths £200 to each of his executors, free of duty; and the remainder of the provisions of his will and codicils are in favour of his wife and children.

The will, with two codicils dated respectively Sept. 23, Oct. 31, and Nov. 4, 1873, of William Twopenny, formerly of Rochester, Kent, and of Lincoln's Inn, and the Middle Temple, who died on the 5th ult., at No. 48, Upper Grosvenor-street, was proved on the 6th inst. by Edward Twopenny, the brother, and Henry Skrine Law Hussey, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £40,000. After leaving annuities to his brother David and his sisters, and making bequests in favour of his servants, he gives the residue of his property to his said brother Edward.

The Shaw Fellowship in Mental Philosophy has been gained by Mr. Robert Adamson, M.A., Edinburgh University.

Mr. Gillespie Dickson, one of the Sheriff Substitutes of Lanarkshire, has been appointed Sheriff of that county in succession to the late Mr. H. G. Bell.

The Rev. George Richardson Mackarness, of Lochgilphead, was, on Wednesday, elected Bishop of Argyll by an absolute majority in both chambers.

The quantity of tobacco consumed in this country appears to be largely increasing. Besides cigars, the value imported last year was £2,613,547, against £1,552,914 the preceding year.

Baroness Burdett-Coutts was presented with the freedom of the city of Edinburgh on Thursday afternoon. The ceremony took place in the Music Hall, which was crowded with a brilliant and fashionable assemblage.

The Earl of Derby was present at a banquet given on Wednesday night to the 1st Lancashire Volunteers by the Mayor of Liverpool. About 1000 officers and men were present. His Lordship is the hon. colonel of the regiment.

Two iron-merchants of Wolverhampton, who, when in partnership during the monetary crisis of 1857, failed for £30,000, and paid a composition of 8s. in the pound, have severally prospered since that time, and they have just made a voluntary payment of the balance, £16,000.

The death of Prince Augustus of Sayu-Wirtgenstein-Borleburgh, at the age of eighty-six, is announced. In his youth he made all the campaigns which marked the commencement of the century, and was successively diplomatic agent of the Grand Duke of Hesse, Minister of War of the German Empire under the Archduke John, and Minister of State to the Duke of Nassau.

Presiding at the annual dinner of the Devon Central Chamber of Agriculture, on Wednesday, the Duke of Somerset, Lord-Lieutenant of the county, made a long speech, in the course of which he attacked the arguments of Mr. Bright, and in particular met the right hon. gentleman's proposition that there should be no large farms by applying the tit-for-tat theory to the question of large manufactories.

Major Vaughan Lee was, on Saturday last, returned without opposition for the western division of Somerset, in succession to the late Mr. Gore-Langton, also a Conservative. On the same day Mr. Joseph Cowen (Liberal) and Mr. Charles Hammond (Conservative) were nominated for Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The polling took place on Wednesday; but the result had not reached us at the time of going to press with our early edition.

The annual winter entertainment of the inmates of the Asylum for Lunatics at Colney Hatch was given on Tuesday last. A ball wound up the evening's amusements. Dancing was entered upon not only with vigour, but with grace, many capital dancers being forthcoming from the ranks of the patients. Those who could not dance looked on, all enjoying themselves to the utmost degree, dancing being kept up till after ten o'clock. Mr. Wyatt, the chairman of the committee of visitors, was present with a large number of his colleagues, and did much to add to the enjoyment of the patients and to the success of the fête.

CURIOUS WILLS.

(Contributed by the Author of "Flemish Interiors.")

A TESTAMENTARY DIFFICULTY.

In 1796 two English gentlemen were called upon to act as executors for a common friend just deceased. They found the will duly executed, but were extremely puzzled, on comparing the schedule of property with the testamentary dispositions, to perceive there would be a deficit of a considerable sum. The executors were so much the more surprised as they had always known their friend to be peculiarly accurate as well as strictly honourable, and they believed him quite incapable of bequeathing a larger amount than he possessed.

They searched carefully, therefore, in every conceivable place, but without finding any clue to the missing amount, beyond a scrap of paper on which was written the memorandum, "£700 to be taken out of Till." As this sum corresponded with the amount by which they were out of their reckoning, they naturally concluded that the testator must possess some strong-box that he designated by the word "till," as he was not in business, and could therefore only intend it figuratively; still, after the most diligent inquiry, no such reserve appeared. Under these circumstances, the effects of the testator, furniture, plate, library, &c., were sold and the proceeds distributed. It was not until some time after, that, still pondering on the provoking mystery, it occurred to one of the parties that the writer of the paper might have meant some book whose author's name was "Till," the more probably as it was written with a capital T, and, referring to the catalogue, he found there inventoried among the folios a volume of Bishop Tillotson's sermons, a fact which at once threw a new light on the difficulty.

Having communicated his discovery to his co-executor, they repaired together to the bookseller who had purchased the library, and inquired whether he had as yet disposed of the volume in question.

"I had parted with it," replied he, "but, as it happens, it has been returned on my hands, for the purchaser to whom I sent it in the country objected to pay the price, and I shall therefore be glad to dispose of it to you."

The value was agreed on, and the book carried home, where, after carefully turning it over, page by page, bank notes to the amount of exactly £700 were found, as the scrap of paper had stated, "in Till;" and the intentions of the testator were carried out.

WILL OF DR. ELLERBY.

Dr. Ellerby died in London in February, 1827. He was a member of the Society of Friends. He passed for being a very eccentric character, and all his habits bore the stamp of originality. In his will are to be found some singular clauses: among them the following:—

"Item: I desire that immediately after my death my body shall be carried to the Anatomical Museum in Aldersgate-street, and shall be there dissected by Drs. Lawrence, Tyrrell, and Wardrop, in order that the cause of my malady may be well understood.

"Item: I bequeath my heart to Mr. W., anatomist; my lungs to Mr. R.; and my brains to Mr. F., in order that they may preserve them from decomposition; and I declare that if these gentlemen shall fail faithfully to execute these my last wishes in this respect I will come—if it should be by any means possible—and torment them until they shall comply."

This threat did not much alarm the above-named parties, for it appears that they unhesitatingly renounced their several legacies!

The Era almanack for the present year, containing a vast amount of information relating to the dramatic profession and to celebrated vocalists, has been issued.

The Rock mentions a report that Mr. Martin F. Tupper has received a pension of £120 a year on the Civil Service List, as the author of "Proverbial Philosophy."

The Mellington estate, a well-known property of 1725 acres, in the counties of Montgomery and Salop, has been sold, for £72,500, to Mr. Philip Wright, of Derby.

A few days since two men saw a golden eagle devouring a rabbit near Lochabar, and so intent was it on its food that they succeeded in stalking and catching it after a hard struggle.

At Fisherton Asylum, where a Commissioner of Lunacy was killed by a lunatic some months ago, a female warder has been attacked by a lunatic giving her a violent blow on the back of the head with a chopper. It broke her skull and drove part of her chignon into the wound. The woman still lives.

The half-yearly court of the Royal Humane Society was held, on Wednesday afternoon, at the offices, Trafalgar-square—Mr. Bedford in the chair. The annual financial statement submitted showed an income, including last year's balance, of £2881, against an expenditure, which included £1135 invested in Three per Cents and Board of Works Stock, of £2793. The general report, read by the secretary, Mr. Young, stated that 252 cases of accidents out of a total of 310 had been successfully treated by the society, and that during the year eight silver and seventy-nine bronze medals, besides numerous clasps and vellum and parchment testimonials, had been awarded for bravery in saving life. The society's receiving-house, in Hyde Park, and the apparatus, had been maintained in good order. The number of bathers in the Serpentine during the year was 356,813. After the presentation of the report, the court received the various officials, and voted the "Stanhope" gold medal, the society's most valued reward, to a seaman named Webb, who jumped overboard from a steamer to save the life of a passenger, whilst the vessel was sailing fifteen knots an hour, in a cross sea.

At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on Monday night, Sir Henry Rawlinson, who presided in the absence of Sir Bartle Frere, said that the president had lectured a good deal in Scotland on the subject of Dr. Livingstone, and he was happy to say he that had awakened a good deal of interest on that subject; and he believed the result of the visit would be that any further appeal on behalf of the Livingstone Relief Fund would be unnecessary. Sir Henry confirmed what had been stated by Sir Bartle Frere, that the stories about the arrival of Dr. Livingstone on the West Coast were altogether without foundation. They were persuaded that the first news they would receive of Dr. Livingstone would be through their agent, Lieutenant Grandy. He had great pleasure in announcing that Mr. Young, who was the author of this expedition, had communicated to the society his determination to pay the entire expenses of the expedition. With regard to the East Coast Expedition, letters had been received stating that the expedition, having reached the Unyamwezi, had passed through the intermediate country and got to Ujiji in safety. At Ujiji they expected to put themselves on the trail of Dr. Livingstone, and he had no doubt that by their earnestness and energy they would be able to give him supplies at the earliest possible moment. They had heard nothing directly from Livingstone, nor was it likely they would till Lieutenant Cameron or one of his party communicated with them.

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

During Dr. Kenealy's speech, yesterday week, the Court reminded him of the limit fixed for his speech before Christmas. He pleaded urgently for time to "go through his Carabiniers," but the Lord Chief Justice answered that he hardly required to individualise them—he might class them together. The Doctor would not undertake of his own accord to finish next Tuesday, but the Court intimated to him that he would be expected to do so. Under this pressure, he hurried through his South American witnesses, dwelling only for a few minutes on "Captain Brown," and devoting as much of that brief period to the rival Captain Oates, whose Admiralty appointment he regards as proof of the partiality of the Cabinet for the prosecution. He was rebuked by the Lord Chief Justice for insinuating that Mr. Chichester Fortescue had rewarded Captain Oates with a valuable office in consideration of his evidence for the prosecution. He contended that "Captain Brown," although guilty of falsifying a certificate, was nevertheless a truthful witness. Just before the adjournment the Doctor reached "his Carabiniers," and did not forget to rehearse the donkey story.

On Monday the analysis of the Carabinier evidence was proceeded with. Occasionally Dr. Kenealy tried to introduce an Australian or a family witness, but the Lord Chief Justice held him strictly to the prescribed arrangement. In a jocular allusion to recent disclosures at Bow-street, the Doctor surmised how the spoil was to be divided in the event of victory attending his client. He assigned Guilford-street to Mr. Onslow, a slice of the Doughty estates to Mr. Whalley, Aldershot to Lord Rivers, and Tichborne Park to himself as a minnow-catching refuge for his declining years.

Dr. Kenealy commented at length, on Tuesday, upon that part of the evidence relating to the sealed packet left by Roger Tichborne in the hands of Mr. Gosford before his departure from this country more than twenty years ago.

After having spoken twenty-three days, Dr. Kenealy, on Wednesday, brought his address for the defence to a close. Before opening his peroration the Doctor made a frank confession about "that scandalous witness he had had the misfortune to call." The theory that Luie had been got up by the defence he spurned as the action of Bedlamites. He declared that his client had been prosecuted with a virulence without example, which he hoped never to see rivalled in this country. He trusted that he should never live to see again every rule of law and practice pressed as it had been in every possible way against the defendant. The prosecution had no sympathy or feeling for him, and they did not care, in some instances, whether they strained the rules of law and evidence against him stronger than these ought to have been. No one, in his opinion, could seriously ask the jury to come to the conclusion that the defendant had perjured himself when they considered the evidence that had been given by Mr. Biddulph, Colonel Norbury, Miss Braine, Lady Tichborne, and others, that his client was Roger Tichborne.

On Thursday the court was very much crowded, several members of the Tichborne family, who have abstained from attending the proceedings since the commencement of the defence until the close of Dr. Kenealy's speech, being present. Their Lordships having taken their seats on the bench at half-past ten o'clock, Mr. Hawkins began to address the jury in reply upon the whole case. He said: "I rejoice, and I dare say you share in my satisfaction, that at length the hour has arrived when it becomes my duty to render you such assistance as is in my power in the consideration of the verdict which you will shortly be required to pronounce on the all-important issue you have to decide, and to point out to you, as clearly as I can, the grounds upon which you, having heard all that has been urged on the part of the defendant, will arrive at a true conclusion. I feel that justice demands that I should invite you to consider that part of the evidence which is adverse to the defendant. When, three-quarters of a year ago, I first addressed you in opening the case which I then had the honour, on the part of the Crown, to lay before you, and momentous as I felt were the questions upon which you would be called upon to pronounce your judgment, I little contemplated that, in the course of the inquiry upon which we were then embarking, these questions would have been so widely extended as to assume the enormous gravity with which they are now invested. I then thought we were about to investigate the simple question involving alone the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the charge of perjury with which he stands charged; but in the course of the trial we have found the accused turned accuser, and on his suggestion his learned counsel has attacked the character, the honour, the truth, and the honesty of so many whose lives have hitherto been passed without reproach. Were it not for my own unbounded confidence in you, I should feel appalled when I consider the magnitude of the interests which rests upon your verdict. The defendant, through his counsel, in order to extricate himself from the perils by which he is encompassed, has not hesitated to charge the Government of this country, and the responsible advisers of the Crown, with a scandalous and a shameless abuse of the influence and the power which they possess, with wantonly and wickedly lending their aid and the public purse to a prosecution which, upon his own daring assertion alone, he has denounced as one instituted to serve the ends of a private family in order to rob him of his inheritance, and that they have done it without regard to or in defence to the interests of justice, for the purpose of crushing, by his condemnation, one they know to be innocent of the crime imputed to him. He has not hesitated, unblushingly and audaciously, to charge that the prosecution has been supported by wholesale bribery, forgery, perjury, and conspiracy, induced by the grossest and most corrupt agencies; and in his sweeping and baseless charges he has accused as perjurers and as conspirators honourable men and women, and venerable and reverend gentlemen, who can by law have no other protection against these foul insults except such protection as your verdict can afford them. And you were solemnly exhorted by the defendant's counsel, in tones which struck one with amazement, that, if you desire to-day that your conduct should meet with the approval of your fellow countrymen, or, hereafter, that your memories should be held in respect when this great trial shall become a matter of history, you have no alternative but to accord to his client a triumphant acquittal, and in so doing to mark your abhorrence and detestation of this prosecution, which in studied language he stigmatised as wicked and profligate. These charges, if proved, would be diabolical crimes, compared to those which are charged against the defendant; it would be indeed weak and trivial. I will not do you the monstrous injustice to believe that you have given ear to those unfounded and scandalous libels and statements which the defendant, through his counsel, has hurled against all, with but few exceptions, whose duty it has been to take part in this inquiry; nor will I insult you by supposing that a thought has ever crossed your mind that this prosecution, which was directed by a much-lamented Judge, before whom the memorable action of ejectment was tried, has been promoted by the Crown other than with one object—that of obtaining, by your impartial, unbiassed, and unanimous verdict, whether, in the evidence given by the now defendant in support of his claims to the Tichborne title and estates, he wilfully foreswore himself. The grave crime of perjury, which was charged to have been committed by him, is a crime to be visited with the due punishment which the righteous laws of this country award to it with the view of enforcing truth in our courts of justice, and which it has been provided shall be preserved inviolate by the sanctity of an oath, without which the law would be powerless to afford security to the lives and liberties of the subjects of the Crown, and protection to their rights and property against wicked, lawless, and fraudulent claims by profligate men. In the spirit in which this prosecution has been instituted I pray you, whatever you may think of the course which the defendant, through his counsel, has thought fit to adopt, not to let it prejudice your minds against him in the consideration of your verdict; but let it be, as I know it will be, one which is forced upon you and upon your honest convictions by the evidence which you have had before you, aided by your own intelligence. I now propose to call your attention to the main question for your consideration, showing you how these questions arise; and then I will endeavour, as briefly as I can, to point out such portions of the evidence as I think will enable you to arrive at a truthful and satisfactory solution of them." The learned counsel then proceeded to pass in review the life of Arthur Orton.

The Judges met on Thursday morning in the private room of the Lord Chief Justice of England, and chose the forthcoming Spring Circuits as follow:—Home, the Lord Chief Baron (Sir F. Kelly) and Mr. Justice Lush. Oxford, the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas (Lord Coleridge) and Mr. Baron Cleasby. Northern, Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Honyman. Western, Mr. Justice Keating and Mr. Justice Grove. Norfolk, Mr. Justice Blackburn and Mr. Justice Brett. Midland, Mr. Justice Archibald and Mr. Baron Pollock. North Wales, Mr. Baron Pigott. South Wales, Mr. Justice Quain. The Lord Chief Justice of England (Sir A. J. E. Cockburn, Bart.) remains in town.

The Court of Exchequer has selected Sir G. Bramwell to preside at the trial of election petitions during the present year, in the place of Mr. Baron Martin.

We learn from Dublin that Mr. Pallas has been appointed Chief Baron of the Exchequer for Ireland; Mr. Low, Attorney-General; and Mr. Johnson, Solicitor-General.

Mr. Justice Grove on Tuesday opened the proceedings, in the Nisi Prius Court of the Shirehall, Taunton, in respect to the petition against the return of Sir Henry James, the Attorney-General, for the borough. On the same day Mr. Commissioner Biron opened an inquiry into the allegations of bribery and treating which have been brought in connection with the late municipal election at Hereford. Mr. Dowdeswell, Q.C., presided at a similar inquiry at Nottingham.

In the case of "Nuttall v. Wildes," in which a jury at the Liverpool Assizes awarded £3000 as damages for breach of promise of marriage, an application was on Monday made to the Court of Exchequer, on the part of the defendant, for a new trial. It was, however, refused, the Judges expressing the opinion that, considering the injury inflicted upon the plaintiff's feelings, the fact that defendant had increased his income to £800 a year by his re-marriage, and that he was the only son of a lady possessed of £5000 a year, they did not see any sufficient reason for disturbing the verdict.

On a charge of deliberately shooting at a creditor who had called on him for payment of an account, Mr. Henry George Burney, of the Firs, near Aldershot, has been committed for trial by the Guildford Bench, bail being accepted in the aggregate amount of £500, together with the accused person's own sureties for the same sum.

At Rickmansworth, on Monday, the Hon. Frederick William Fitzroy, son of Lord Frederick Fitzroy, was charged before the Rev. A. H. Barker, resident magistrate, with having, by letter, threatened to shoot Mr. Henry Charles Finch, one of the Herts county justices. The supposed cause of the threat is that the prosecutor was recently the presiding chairman of a bench of magistrates who heard a charge in which the prisoner was concerned. The prisoner, who defended himself, was remanded to the Watford Petty Sessions.

The January session of the Central Criminal Court opened, on Monday, with sixty-one prisoners for trial. In the case of Mr. Patrick Wood, who was accused of forging a bill of exchange, purporting to be signed by two clerks in the Admiralty, the prosecution withdrew the charge, and the prisoner was released. Two men, Charles Bruce and Thomas Williams, were tried for the burglary at Mr. John Chadwick's silk warehouse, when property of more than a thousand pounds' value was stolen, and a large quantity besides was packed ready for removal. Williams, against whom a previous conviction was proved, was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude, and his companion to nine months' imprisonment, with hard labour. On Tuesday George Baker, aged twenty-nine, was convicted of being concerned in knocking down and robbing a cabman in Mile-end. He was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude and five years' police supervision, and was ordered to receive twenty lashes with the cat. The session was brought to a close on Wednesday. William Parker, labourer, was convicted of the wilful murder of his two children at Wapping, the jury appending to their verdict a recommendation to mercy. He was sentenced to death. James Redgrave Harris, when brought up on a charge of shooting at William Walter, with intent to inflict grievous bodily harm, was pronounced by the jury unfit to plead on the ground of insanity, and he was ordered to be detained during her Majesty's pleasure.

Captain Maunsell, who assaulted the Duke of Cambridge, was again brought up at Marlborough-street on Wednesday, when evidence from the War Office was given. The prisoner then read a long statement of his grievances, and declared that his sole object in striking the Commander-in-Chief was to get arrested. The medical officer at the House of Detention certified that there were no symptoms of insanity in Captain Maunsell, who was committed for trial, bail being taken.

Giving credence to the story of a Mr. De Magnise Rutherford, that he was about to contract a marriage with a Welsh heiress, an upholsterer in Norwood sent him in a dining-room table, sideboard, carpet, and pair of fancy chairs, some of which property the victimised tradesman afterwards saw in a pawnbroker's shop. He has been remanded.

Imprisonment for six months, with hard labour, has been the sentence passed on a reckless driver named Charles Fido, who, having charge of a horse and cart in the Brompton-road, knocked down a person and seriously injured him.

Milk adulteration continues to occupy magisterial time and attention; and on Saturday Mr. Daniel Phillips was fined £3 and costs for supplying milk-and-water instead of the genuine fluid to the Lewisham Union. There were two more prosecutions for the adulteration of milk at Clerkenwell, and in each case a penalty of 20s. and costs was imposed.

James Robinson, aged thirty-five, a letter-sorter in the foreign department of the General Post Office, was charged at Clerkenwell, on Tuesday, on remand with stealing a gold ring, set with five brilliants, twelve diamonds fixed in paste-board, a Canadian Bank of Commerce bill of exchange for £50, and two Peruvian bills of exchange, one for 1100 francs, and one for £148 6s. 8d., a gold necklet, and other articles belonging to the Postmaster-General. The prisoner on Saturday week was employed at the General Post Office in sorting letters which had that day arrived from the Cape, and was afterwards found dealing with some of the property in question. He was committed for trial.

For begging persistently of a gentleman in Sloane-square and Westbourne-street, and also, as it would seem, for being like a man who had offered combs to a lady for sale, and, on her refusing to buy any, had addressed her in foul language, John Donovan was sentenced by Mr. Woolrych, on Monday, to twenty-one days' hard labour.

In sentencing a fellow named James Brown to six calendar months' imprisonment and hard labour for the atrocity of skinning half-dead cats, Mr. D'Eyncourt expressed great regret that he could not order such a wretch to be flogged.

A burglary took place, last week, at Sir F. Peel's residence, The Mansion, Hampton-in-Arden. A handsome dressing-case was forced open, and the gold mountings of its fittings were stolen. A despatch-case was also opened, as well as several drawers of a writing-table. The outside door of the plate-closet was forced, but the thieves appear to have been baffled by an iron door within. The thieves carried food, wine, and brandy into the drawing-room, and there made a feast.

An attorney has been fined 40s. and costs for unlawfully conveying tobacco to a prisoner in the Birmingham gaol.

A serious mutiny on board the ship Preston, of Liverpool, bound to New Orleans from Havre, compelled the captain to put into Weymouth Bay on Monday night; and on Tuesday six of the crew were sentenced by the borough magistrates to five months' imprisonment, a stowaway, who had joined in the acts of insubordination, being fined twenty shillings, with the alternative of going to gaol for fourteen days.

Arthur Cox, a Manchester butcher, was on Tuesday sent to prison for two months, with hard labour, for having in his post session the carcass of a cow which was unfit for human food.

A Salford coalheaver made his 160th appearance at the police court, on Tuesday, for being drunk and disorderly. He was sent to prison for a month.

A lock-keeper near Dublin has shot his son with a fowling-piece. Mental depression, resulting from the loss of his wife, is supposed to have occasioned the terrible deed.

Within the walls of Gloucester Prison, on Monday morning, Charles Edward Butt, a young farmer, twenty-two years of age, was executed for the wilful murder of Amelia Selina Phipps, on Sunday, Aug. 17 last. At the same time the extreme penalty of the law was carried out upon Edwin Bailey, thirty-two, a tradesman, and Anne Barry, thirty-one, charwoman, for the wilful murder, by poison, of Sarah Jenkins, a child of Bailey, also on Aug. 17. A petition signed by 8000 persons on behalf of Butt was presented at the Home Office.

CHRISTMAS AT NAZARETH HOUSE.

Inhabitants of the western suburbs of London have sometimes observed a small cart, in which are seated two ladies, dressed in black cloaks and hoods bordered with blue, going round the district and stopping at many shops or private houses, where the ladies get their large bags filled, in two or three hours of this quest, with a variety of scraps and fragments of food and clothing and household stores. These are the Sisters of the Convent of Nazareth, a religious establishment founded above twenty years ago, now possessed of a large house, with a chapel in its garden, in King-street East, Hammersmith, where they take care of a large number of aged and infirm destitute persons, and of sick and deserted children. An interesting description of their systematic charity, written in a pleasant tone and style, was published in the Daily Telegraph some time ago, and has been reprinted in a tract entitled "Always With Us," which may be had, we presume, by applying at the institution, in return for a donation to its funds. The good Christian women engaged in this work of benevolent piety, to which they devote all their time and labour, as well as their private fortunes and social influence, are worthy of sincere respect and hearty good wishes. There are more than 300 inmates of the House of Nazareth; a score of old men, none under seventy-three years of age, and about a hundred old women, employed in such work as they can do for their own comfort; about fifty children, who are cripples or incurably diseased; and a certain number of babes, like those reared in the Foundling Hospital, the illegitimate offspring of repentant erring mothers. The whole establishment is under strict though cheerful discipline and regulation, with the superintendence of highly respectable clergymen. There are no hired menials; but the Lady Sisters, who call themselves "The Little Sisters of the Poor," do all the drudgery of the household, besides going daily round that part of town to beg alms for its support. With this explanation, we leave our Illustrations of Christmas at Nazareth House to tell the rest of the story, merely stating, with reference to one of the Engravings, that the Christmas entertainments for the children included a performance of "Puss in Boots."

There has been a heavy snowstorm in the north of Scotland. In Caithness the roads in some parts are impassable, and the snowfall has been the heaviest for several years.

At South Shields an important meeting of local shipowners resolved, on Tuesday, to memorialise the Privy Council with respect to the proceedings of Board of Trade surveyors in arbitrarily stopping ships. They ask that no surveyor should be appointed who does not possess a practical knowledge of the class of vessels over which he is to have jurisdiction.

The report of the National Rifle Association for the year 1873 states that there was an excess of receipts over expenditure, and an addition of £3500 was made to the invested capital. The profits on the working of the year amounted, however, to only £2481. The council has purchased the freehold "Dairy Farm" at Wembleton, for £3500, and by the acquisition of these premises a reduction of the expenses will in future be accomplished. The number of members on the books of the association is 3134, of whom 630 are life members. The number in 1872 was 3115.—The War-Office returns for the past year as to the strength and efficiency of the volunteers show a large decrease in the force, especially within the last two years.—At the general meeting of the Middlesex Rifle Association, held at King's College, on Tuesday, a satisfactory report was presented as to the operations of the past year. The total number of members was 555.

WORK, WAGES, AND PRICES.

A statement, drawn up by the council of the Trades Guild of Learning, describes at great length the objects which are contemplated by the organisation. It states that its purpose is to provide education for workmen (1) in the sciences underlying their respective industries; and (2) in various branches of higher education; and that it has sprung spontaneously from the workmen of this country, and its responsible direction will devolve in the main on them, with the support of others who can undertake to advise and help in their educational work. It will accept of no aid from the State, but will make use of the National Universities as the best source of general education for the people of the great towns, enabling them to acquire not only the results of scientific research, but the most thorough and scientific methods of teaching. By means of branches, which it proposes to establish in the large towns, it hopes to supply what is required to render the work already begun by the University of Cambridge continuous and permanent. It will endeavour to form local boards, consisting mainly of workmen, who will be responsible for the preliminary formation of classes and the collection of the funds necessary in order to obtain University teaching. Among the members of the council ex officio are Lord Granville, president; the Lord Mayor, Professor Tyndall, Sir John Lubbock, Lord Houghton; and a number of other distinguished persons, vice-presidents.

The Working-Men's Clubs and Institutes appear to be growing in usefulness and rapidly increasing in number throughout the kingdom. Many of them are organised and aided by a society called the Working-Men's Club and Institute Union, which almost daily receives applications from London or the provinces for deputations to attend the inauguration of new clubs, or for advice regarding the better development of those already established.

Speaking at a dinner of the Leicestershire Agricultural Society, last Saturday, Mr. Pell, M.P., expressed a wish that the labourers could join in the discussions of that body, and said he had observed with admiration the first proceedings of Mr. Arch, though he now regretted that a movement which had promised so well should be clogged by political feeling.

In addressing the Nottinghamshire Chamber of Agriculture at its annual dinner, on Saturday last, the Duke of St. Albans professed a strong favour for the equalisation of the county franchise. He could not, he said, blink at the fact that the leaders of the Government had avowedly approved of such a measure. Whether or not they might think it opportune, they could not deny that the skilled agricultural labourer was as capable of exercising the franchise as many who possessed it in towns.

At the Trades Congress which opened on Monday, in Sheffield, Mr. Macdonald, chairman of the parliamentary committee, delivered an address. Mr. Howell, the secretary, stated, in his report, that the past year had been unparalleled for the growth of trades unionism. The National Federation of Employers was advertised to, but disastrous results were not anticipated from its intervention. On Tuesday Mr. Rolley, president, delivered his opening address. The parliamentary committee's report was received, and Mr. Henry Crampton read a vigorous critique on the programme of the National Federation of Employers. The Criminal Law Amendment Act was a prominent topic of discussion on Wednesday. A resolution, moved by Mr. Potter and seconded by Mr. Odger, was carried, expressive of satisfaction at the progress made during the year with the agitation against the Act, and, further, pledging each delegate, individually, to use all possible means, by agitations, public meetings, &c., to further the cause. It was also resolved that the conspiracy laws required amendment in the direction of the bill brought in last Session by Sir W. Harcourt.

A National Early-Closing Congress meeting was held in Manchester, on Tuesday, to support Sir J. Lubbock's Shop Hours Regulation Bill. Delegates attended from the principal towns of the provinces, and resolutions were adopted to the effect that, moral suasion having failed, every effort should be made to secure the passing of the bill.

The carpet manufacturers of England and Scotland have agreed to advance the wages of their workmen 10 per cent.

A new British Workmen's Club was opened, last Saturday, on premises in High-street, Wandsworth, which have been altered and arranged for the purpose. The ground floor contains a commodious coffee-room, whilst the upper floors are appropriated respectively to reading and smoking. There is also a library which already contains upwards of 300 volumes. Refreshments are supplied at a low rate, and, although intoxicating liquors are excluded, the club is altogether independent of any temperance organisation. The opening of the club was anticipated by a public meeting, which was held at the Spread Eagle Assembly Rooms, in Wandsworth. The Earl of Shaftesbury spoke warmly in favour of workmen's clubs.

At the first ordinary meeting of the People's Coal and Colliery Company the directors reported that the undertaking was now successfully launched, more than six thousand shares having been taken up. An agreement had been entered into for the purchase of the Newhill Main Silktone Colliery. Since the company commenced operations in September last it had supplied its members with Ruabon coal at 25s. per ton in London.

There is a split among the engineers in their "advance of wages" movement. At Limehouse, after considering the employers' offer to pay the advance to all who were considered worthy of it, a resolution in favour of going in was carried by a large majority. Immediately afterwards the Southwark men assembled, and emphatically censured the East-End men for making a separate surrender. Both meetings agreed in passing a strong censure on the Amalgamated Society of Engineers for its apathy with regard to the movement.

The Edinburgh Town Council have unanimously appointed Mr. William Skinner, who was formerly a magistrate of the city, to the office of Town Clerk, at a salary of £500 per annum.

The opening of the session of the twelfth year of the Ipswich Working Men's College was the occasion, on Monday night, of a meeting in the Townhall, at which the Mayor of Ipswich presided. Mr. Hughes, M.P., as Principal of the London Working Men's College, gave an address on presenting the certificates awarded to students by the Society of Arts.

A revolt occurred a few days ago in the lunatic Asylum of St. Andrew's, near St. Petersburg. While the keepers were at dinner the patients burst into a room where some arms were stored, and, having distributed them, prepared for resistance. The warders endeavoured to calm them by argument, but ineffectually, and some of the keepers, having approached too near, were seized and attacked with sword-cuts. Five were killed and two seriously wounded. Recourse was then had to famine, but forty-eight hours' fast was endured before the madmen laid down their arms. Six of the most furious have been placed in separate cells with strait-waistcoats on.

There were 2413 births and 1615 deaths registered in London last week, the former having been 116 and the latter 133 below the average number. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the three preceding weeks had been 1112, 642, and 721, declined last week to 618, and were 7 below the average; 303 resulted from bronchitis, 159 from phthisis, 103 from pneumonia, and 18 from asthma. The deaths from measles, which in the three preceding weeks had been 168, 107, and 108, further declined to 93 last week, exceeding the average, however, by 51. There were 32 deaths from fever, 17 of which were certified as enteric or typhoid, 5 as typhus, and 10 as simple continued fever. There were 19 deaths from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, 47 from whooping-cough, 13 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox. Seven cases of suicide and 6 deaths caused by street accidents were registered. The mean temperature was 40.0 deg., which was 4.0 deg. above the average.

UNVEILING THE STATUE OF THE LATE PRINCE CONSORT IN HOLBORN-CIRCUS.

LUNCHEON GIVEN BY THE LORD MAYOR TO THE PRINCE OF WALES AT GUILDHALL.

BY THE WAY.

The triple execution at Gloucester, on Monday last, is a topic to which we should be indisposed to call attention in this column, but for two incidents which should be noted by all persons of common sense. One of the culprits was a young man who, having vainly paid his addresses to a lady, became exasperated at her preference of a rival, and destroyed the poor girl. Several thousand signatures were appended to a memorial asking that the murderer's life might be spared, and among these appear the names of several of the leading persons in the county. There is, of course, in the petition the usual suggestion of insanity. No doubt that a man who for such a cause could commit such a crime had a distempered brain; but we can see nothing in the evidence to prove that he was not perfectly aware of what he was doing, or that the murder was the result of a brutal resolve that if he could not obtain the girl's favour no one else should profit by it. This is not the sort of madness which is entitled to call for mercy. Love itself, in excess, partakes, as we have been told for ages, of the nature of insanity; and hate upon the back of this is doubtless a terrible stimulant to wickedness. But, unless we are prepared to lay down the rule that a disappointed lover shall not be held responsible for any outrage he may commit, if women who have the power of inspiring passion are not to be protected, we fail to see how to justify the reprieve which was asked for, and which Mr. Lowe refused—of course, after communication with the Judge—to grant. In the other case, which was one of the most cold-blooded—the murder of a child whose existence was a scandal and an expense to its inhuman father—the jury actually recommended the culprits to mercy. We have seen strange things done by juries, but the course of these gentlemen was more extraordinary than any case of the sort within our recollection. They talked about circumstantial evidence. As if that is not the very best kind of evidence conceivable, when it is complete, as it was on this occasion. We have often objected to stress being laid upon confessions, but the ample avowals which these poisoners made of their guilt may be a comfort to the minds of a jury that seemed afraid to trust to their own common sense. In this case, by-the-way, other circumstances of a peculiar kind came out. The principal murderer declared that he had been an atheist, and had been led to his crime by reading evil books. The chaplain's counsels worked upon him, and he not only confessed, but gave strong evidence of conversion, and distributed religious books among his friends. It may be permitted to say, therefore, that the Home Secretary was the best of them.

We observe that the early-closing movement is again occupying the attention of the journals. But it seems to us that a good many of the appeals made on the subject are misplaced. The upper classes have really nothing whatever to do with the matter; nor can they interfere, except in the way of legislation, and that is very properly deprecated. The association begs that no lady will shop after seven. What lady shops after that hour? How can she do so? At that hour, or a little later, she is sitting down to dinner; and we believe that it is not the custom of ladies to go out after dinner and buy shawls and gloves. What shopping is done after six o'clock is done by members of the class that calls for relief, or by a still inferior class, for whom there is a good deal to be said. If tradespeople buy of tradespeople, that is a question between themselves; but the poor wife agitated with house and children all day, can make her purchases only when her work is done and her young ones have "surged up" to bed. But, at all events, the fatigues of overworked shopmen and shopwomen are not to be charged upon the upper middle class.

"Limerick prodigious!" as Thackeray called it in one of the very best of his Punch ballads, is keeping up its reputation as a "city of combat." At one of the last election meetings (Mr. Monsell's elevation to the Peerage creates a vacancy for the county) the scene was almost that described by the poet in the "Limerick Tragedy." There was a dreadful disturbance, candidates and others were beaten with sticks, and the arm of power had to interpose. Only, instead of

The soldiers and dragons,
And squadrons playing chunes, armed police came to the rescue, and drew from one of the patriots the pathetic remark that a cause was indeed bad when it had to be maintained by English bayonets. But the leaders in this last "day of Oireland's guilt" did not individualise themselves as in the evening of the tragedy. There was not even one hero to be handed down to posterity, as was one of whom we have since heard—

"Cut down the ruffian horde!"
Cries young Meagher of the Sword,
Such conduct would disgrace a blackamoore;
But the best use Tommy made
Of his precious battle-blade
Was to cut his own stick from the Shannon shore.

However, inspired by the recollections which we humbly venture to recall, the patriots of Limerick may yet do something that shall be worthy of song, though, alas! we have no longer the vates sacer who sang of their sires.

We are all so justifiably interested in our own black war that we have not much attention to spare for the proceedings of our friends the Dutch in Sumatra. We seem, however, to have handed them over some particularly disagreeable people to deal with, and, although civilisation is winning the game, it is a costly one. The last success of the Dutch was purchased at a considerable sacrifice. We hope that when Sumatra shall be reduced it will not occur to any Dutch Ministers and lawyers that Holland has a grievance against us; that we undertook, either expressly or by implication, to give her "quiet enjoyment," as the conveyancers say, of the property we set over to her, and that the war entitles her to demand direct or indirect damages. Of course, we shall pay them, if they are demanded, as we do not desire—and we are sure that Mr. Goschen does not desire—to see a Dutch fleet at Sheerness, as in King Charles's days. But it may be well to get up the arguments, if not to tell a fashionable silversmith to prepare a sketch of services of plate for some possible arbitrators.

The escape of Manuel Epatar, who was condemned to death, the other day, for an attempt to murder Amadeus, ex-King of Spain, will remind people of the endeavour by a friend to illustrate for his friend the difference between an accident and a misfortune. "If you fall into a river, that would be an accident, you know." "Yes, I understand; well?" "If you got out again, that would be a misfortune." That anybody in Spain should be convicted, at this time, of having sought to get rid of "the Italian," is one of those accidents for which we are utterly unable to account. The sentence must have amused Don Manuel Epatar, if any humour lingers in the country of Cervantes. His escape we take to have been as accidental as anything else for which his gaolers may have made due preparation. It is, however, none the less a misfortune.

A somewhat unusual case of breach of promise of marriage became recently the subject of a trial. A gentleman who had divorced his wife proposed for the hand of a young lady, and he appears to have obtained affections which, if we may judge by the correspondence, were very well worth having indeed. But before the second marriage could take place, the ex-husband had some kind of communication with the ex-wife, and the result is that explanations took place, which he asserts to have been so satisfactory that his course became one of duty, and he breaks off the proposed alliance and remarries the divorced lady. An action is brought, and the jury give rather heavy damages. A new trial has just been asked for, but the Court declines to grant it. The old French proverb on revienne toujours, &c., has been vindicated in the case; but we think that it is one in which the second lady deserved all compensation, the ordinary injury to her feelings being aggravated by the recollection that she was slighted for one whom her suitor must have naturally taken pains to depreciate during the second courtship.

THE HOLBORN-CIRCUS ALBERT STATUE.

An Illustration was given in our last of the bronze equestrian statue of the late Prince Consort in Holborn-circus, presented by a private gentleman to the City of London. It was unveiled, yesterday week, by the Lady Mayores and the Prince of Wales; his Royal Highness was accompanied by the Duke of Cambridge, and, of course, by the Lord Mayor, who afterwards entertained both Princes at luncheon in Guildhall.

There was little pomp or ceremony upon this occasion. A space had been inclosed round the statue; and there was a platform, carpeted with crimson, and roofed overhead, with valances of maroon cloth and yellow fringe. Here stood two chairs of state, in gold and crimson, with a few other seats. The Duke of Cambridge arrived at a quarter before twelve; the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayores, with the sheriffs, the aldermen, common councilmen, and City officers, came punctually at noon. The Prince of Wales, in a carriage and pair, attended by General Sir W. Knollys, Lord Suffield, and Major Grey, was a few minutes later. A guard of honour, formed of his own volunteer regiment, the Hon. Artillery Company, and commanded by Captain Nunn, presented arms to his Royal Highness. The bells of St. Andrew's Church rang a merry peal.

The Prince of Wales took his seat on the left hand of the Lord Mayor, and the Duke of Cambridge to the right. The Town Clerk began the proceedings by reading a brief statement of the manner in which the statue had been given to the City, with a description of its artistic design and that of the pedestal. The Prince of Wales then rose and said, "I desire that this statue be now unveiled;" after which he addressed to the Lady Mayores, in a lower tone of voice, his request that she would perform the office of drawing aside the covering of red calico, by pulling a tasselled cord at the eastern end of the pedestal. Her Ladyship did this, with the assistance of Mr. S. E. Atkins, chairman of the Holborn Improvement Committee, and Mr. H. G. Haywood, brother of the City Engineer; the curtain was pulled away, and the bronze figure of Prince Albert on horseback was exposed to view. Their Royal Highnesses, with the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayores and the rest of the company, walked round the statue to look at it from all sides. They immediately afterwards entered the carriages and were conveyed to Guildhall.

The luncheon or déjeuner was laid in the great hall for about 850 persons; the chief table was placed along one third of the length of the hall, with the other tables at right angles to it. The guests were received in the Library, where chairs of state were placed for their Royal Highnesses and the Lord Mayor.

Mr. Charles Bacon, the sculptor of the statue of the Prince Consort, was here presented to the Prince of Wales. Aldermen Gabriel and Truscott assisted the Lord Mayor in receiving the visitors. The members of the Corporation were attired in their civic robes, and attended by the City officials, with the maces, the swords, the caps of maintenance, and trumpets. A procession led them into the great hall. The Lady Mayores was conducted from the Library to her seat in the hall by the Prince of Wales; the Duke of Cambridge led in the wife of Mr. Sheriff Whetham. The Prince of Wales sat at the right of the Lord Mayor; next came the Lady Mayores, then the Duke of Cambridge, the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, Lord Suffield, Sir W. Knollys, and Captain Mildmay, equerry to the Duke of Cambridge. To the left were Lord Chelmsford, Alderman and Mrs. Sidney, Mr. R. W. Crawford, M.P., and Mrs. Crawford; and included in the rest of the general company were Sir A. Sassoon; Mr. R. N. Fowler, M.P.; Colonel Beresford, M.P.; Mr. Alderman M'Arthur, M.P.; Mr. G. B. Gregory, M.P.; Mr. Holmes, M.P.; Mr. Samuda, M.P.; Sir R. Baggallay, M.P.; Mr. Locke, M.P.; Mr. W. Torrens, M.P.; Mr. O. Foster, M.P.; Mr. Watkin Williams, M.P.; Mr. Eaton, M.P.; Mr. C. Reed, M.P., and Mrs. Reed; Colonel Hogg, M.P., and Mrs. Hogg; Sir F. Anson, Sir Antonio Brady, Sir A. and Lady Wood, and the Governor and the Deputy-Governor of the Bank of England. The repast being finished, grace was said by the Rev. C. Calthrop, the Lord Mayor's chaplain. His Lordship then proposed to drink the health of the Queen, which was done, and was followed by the National Anthem. The next toast, "The memory of the late Prince Consort," was drunk in solemn silence. In proposing the health of "the Prince and Princess of Wales and others of the Royal family," the Lord Mayor referred, with good taste and some humour, to the Duke of Edinburgh's journey to St. Petersburg and his approaching marriage. The Prince of Wales, in his reply, acknowledged the compliment to his brother, as well as to himself and the Princess of Wales. He proposed the health of the Lord Mayor. The company separated directly after this toast. The Grenadier Guards' band played the National Anthem.

The foundation-stone of a new parish church at Oban—named St. Columba's—was laid on Thursday week.

The Board of Trade inquiry into the loss of the River Eden was concluded at Greenwich Police Court on Saturday. It will be remembered that the vessel had a combustible cargo, and that the captain, having gone wrong in his mind, had set fire to the ship, and afterwards drowned himself by jumping overboard. Mr. Patteson returned William Clarkson, the chief mate, his certificate, and complimented him on the discretion and bravery he had exhibited under very trying and perilous circumstances. The inquiry into the circumstances attending the loss of the Liverpool ship *Circe, on the Hartwell Reef, on Oct. 18 last, has resulted in the suspension of the master's certificate for six months. The mate, who was in charge of the watch at the time of the disaster, had his certificate returned to him, with a rather severe lecture on the badly-kept log-book. The result of the inquiry into the loss of the Zambezi, of Glasgow, off Eddystone, in November last, is the suspension of the master's certificate for nine months, he being adjudged guilty of a grave default in the navigation of the vessel. The court of inquiry at Valparaiso into the loss of the British barque Charlotte, at Constitucion, in September last, has suspended the certificate of the master for twelve months, and that of the chief mate for six months. The Court of Inquiry at Galle into the loss of the steamer Arcturus has suspended the captain's certificate for twelve months.*

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

MUSICAL HARMONY OPTICALLY ILLUSTRATED.

Professor Tyndall began his sixth and concluding lecture on the Motion and Sensation of Sound, on Thursday week, by alluding to the mode in which gas flames may be employed to determine the state of the air in a sounding organ-pipe, whether closed or open—such flames being blown out at the nodes where condensation and dilatation are violent, but remaining burning at the ventral segments, where the air is neither rarefied nor condensed, but simply oscillates to and fro. He then showed how higher notes (such as the octave and fifth) are produced by blowing more strongly into the pipes, and how the tone may be modified by combination with reeds or vibrating tongues, among the illustrations of which was a pipe made to imitate the human voice, and give sounds somewhat resembling "Papa!" "mamma!" The Professor then proceeded to illustrate the phenomena of "interference," the term applied to the adding together of two systems of waves. When the crests of one system of waves of water coincide with the crests of another system, higher waves will be the result; but when the crests of one system coincide with the furrows of another, the two will wholly or partially destroy each other. The same result occurs with waves of sound. When they coincide the sound is augmented, but when the condensation of one system coincides with the rarefaction of another a destruction total or partial occurs, and consequently silence ensues. Two musical sounds of nearly the same pitch, when produced together, tend to obliterate each other. Thus, when two tuning-forks of the same pitch were made to vibrate the sound was perfectly uniform; but when one by loading was made to vibrate a little more slowly than the other, they blotted each other out, alternate swellings and sinkings of the sound being produced, due to the alternate coincidence and opposition of the two systems of waves. The effect was a series of shocks, termed in music "beats," separated from each other by a series of pauses. The latter part of the lecture was principally devoted to Lissajous's method of giving optical expression to the vibrations of tuning-forks applied to illustrate unison, harmony, and discord. It was stated that when two strings which execute precisely the same number of vibrations in the same time are sounded together they produce perfect unison; when one vibrates with twice the rapidity of the other, the result is the octave; when one string executes two vibrations while the other executes three, the result is a musical fifth; and when one executes three vibrations while the other executes four, the result is a fourth. These combinations were beautifully exhibited to eye and ear. A thin beam of electric light, received on a mirror attached to a tuning-fork with its prongs upright, was reflected on to the mirror of a second fork with its prongs horizontal, and cast from a second mirror upon a screen. When both forks were made to vibrate, a luminous figure, the combination of the vibrations, was produced. With unison the figure was either a circle, ellipse, or straight line; with an octave the form was either the figure ∞ , more or less symmetrical, or a parabola; with the chords of the fifth and the fourth the figures varied, becoming more complex as the number of the ratios of vibration became higher. In relation to this subject, at the request of Professor Tyndall, Mr. Tisley exhibited a new method of showing the figures resulting from similar combined vibrations. Two pendulums were made to vibrate at right angles to each other. Their ends were prolonged beyond the points of suspension, and to each was attached a horizontal arm. At the point where the two arms met was a collar, through which ran a stem directed vertically downwards. When a plate of smoked glass was placed beneath the point of meeting, the stem traced out the results of the combined motions of the pendulums—circles, parabolas, and other figures. Beautiful effects may also be produced by Wheatstone's kaleidophone, which consists of a glass bead, silvered within, and attached to the free end of a rod. When the bead is illuminated and the rod made to vibrate, curves of various forms are described by the spot of light. Our limited space has prevented us from giving more details of this very instructive course of lectures.

INNER AND OUTER RESPIRATION.

Professor Rutherford gave the first of a course of five lectures on Respiration on Tuesday last. After alluding to the various opinions which prevailed respecting this function from the time of Aristotle and Galen, he described and illustrated Black's discovery of the chemical changes in respired air by the addition of carbonic acid (1757), and Priestley's discovery that oxygen has been removed from it (1775). It was reserved for Lavoisier to show the connection between these two changes, and to suggest that a real combustion is always taking place within the body. Respiration was then described as being "inner" and "outer." By "inner respiration" is meant the absorption of oxygen and the evolution of carbonic acid going on in the tissues generally, as well as in the blood throughout the body. Muscular and brain tissues respire with remarkable quickness, owing to the rapid chemical changes proceeding within them, these being much accelerated by an increase of temperature. Tissue respiration is also much exaggerated by causing a tissue to evolve energy, such as throwing muscle into action, this being due to the evolution of energy within the tissue necessitating chemical change. After describing and illustrating some of the modes by which oxygen is conveyed to the tissues throughout the animal kingdom, Dr. Rutherford entered upon the consideration of this outer or lung and skin respiration, giving an account of the structure of the pulmonary apparatus, the lungs, the pleural covering, and the air-passages, which he elucidated by throwing images of the various structures upon a screen by the aid of the electro-microscope.

Professor Sylvester, at the next Friday evening meeting, will describe and illustrate some Recent Discoveries in the Mechanical Conversion of Motion.

After the examination announced for the 20th inst. candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy will be examined twice a year only—viz., about July 15 and Dec. 10—the limits of age being calculated to July 1 for the former examination, and to Jan. 1 following for the latter.

Mrs. Waters, who was suspected of having administered morphia to an elderly lady, named Gulliver, who died from its effects, has poisoned herself with strychnine. At the inquest on Mrs. Gulliver's body Mrs. Waters had what was supposed to be an epileptic fit, which ended in her death; but the real cause has since been ascertained, and a verdict of felo-de-se has been returned in her case by the coroner's jury.

During the stormy weather on Thursday week, and in a heavy sea, a vessel was seen from Theddlethorpe making signals of distress; and accordingly the life-boat of the National Institution proceeded to the rescue, and found she was the fishing-smack Mary, of Grimsby. The sea was breaking heavily over the wreck when the life-boat arrived out, but she was enabled to save five persons left on board—one of whom, a boy, was almost lifeless from the cold and exposure. The master and five of the crew had got ashore in their own boat before the life-boat came to the rescue.

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

Several young Parliament-men (perhaps they would prefer to be called young statesmen) have been exhibiting—and in some cases not distinguishing—themselves before public audiences lately. Dealing with them chronologically, we take the appearance of Sir Charles Dilke before his Chelsea constituents. The circumstances were peculiar, if not original, for he professed to give, as it were, a senatorial autobiography, bringing his doings as a member forward from the time when, full of hope and faith in the Gladstone Ministry, he seconded the Address in the second Session of the present Parliament to the last Session. Probably some will think that the necessity for such a chronicle argued either crass forgetfulness or singular inattention on the part of the Chelsea electors to the career of their member. Fortunately, though the lecture, as it was called, was long, there really was not much to tell, and it seemed as if the object was to trace the process by which Sir Charles Dilke declined and fell from Radicalism into Republicanism. The story is not very interesting, and cynical persons may deduce from it a notion that at some moment there came over the honourable member the idea that he was not distinguishing himself as a member, and that he could only do that by striking out some new and outré subject of Parliamentary matter which might so far astonish the political world as to give its propounder a notoriety, even if a bad and a momentary notoriety. There is no doubt he succeeded; though what he did was but a poor imitation of the plan which in the days of intensely-repressive Toryism Mr. Hume invented, and which obtained for that financial reformer a designation (for which Canning was responsible) expressive, but unsavoury. At any rate, the member for Chelsea succeeded in getting up the greatest row and obtaining the most ridiculous minority on a division which Parliaments in these latter days have ever seen. The reproduction, the other day, of the subject of Royal mis-spending (to coin a word) was a proof of that tenacity of purpose which is characteristic of the honourable Baronet, and that, as the best of all possible pessimists, he will continue to do what he can to convince the public that whatever is wrong, and that people are never so happy as when they are very miserable.

Once again Mr. Grant-Duff has addressed the world from Elgin. If possible, he has outdone himself and done more than ever to show that there is living in comparative obscurity a man who might be what some German Prince has been called—the saviour of society. It is true that, though a mere Under-Secretary, Mr. Grant-Duff gives the House of Commons always, and the people of Elgin now, to understand that he is really the working, moving, influencing Minister for India, and that under his control and guidance our empire in the East is so flourishing that the trifling circumstance of an impending famine in Bengal scarcely demands a passing notice; but, nevertheless, he is misplaced; his ambition is not satisfied, his sphere is contracted. What profiteth him that two hundred and fifty millions of Asiatics are happy and prosperous under his beneficent rule? India is, to a certain extent, an abstraction in the view of the nations of Europe, England included; and it is probable that the great potentates and the Ministerial magnates of those nations actually do not know of the existence of Mr. Grant-Duff. The Foreign Office—apparently the chief secretaryship of that department—is the area for him to bustle in. Who shall say how many of the complications, how the wars, the overturning of dynasties on the Continent, the so-called humiliations of England which have come to pass since 1868, might have been averted if, on the formation of the present Government, instead of selecting Mr. Grant-Duff as sub-Minister for India—upon the strength of his having a relative or a godfather, and partly a namesake, who was a distinguished Indian administrator—the Prime Minister had made him at one step a full-grown, full-armed Secretary for Foreign Affairs? The contemplation is too wide, too vast, too deep, too high to be lightly dealt with. In all reverence we refrain. It is clear that Mr. Grant-Duff has but a slight opinion of the Ministry as a body; and it would, perhaps, be amusing if he was to characterise them individually according to his estimate. Those who have observed the attitudes and the countenance of the Prime Minister on the occasions when Mr. Grant-Duff was addressing the House have thought that the Chief was on the watch to restrain, if possible, the fantastic phraseology and vagaries of personality for which the Under-Secretary for India is famous; but most likely without success. For when Mr. Grant-Duff throws his head into the air, shuts his eyes, and pours out a flood of optimism, he seems to be conscious of no presence but his own, and is as abstracted as the Pythian priestess when under oracular inspiration. As it were, he speaks over the heads of his audience, even there; and what must it be when he is making the good folk of Elgin a medium for conveying his grand, his imperial ideas to all mankind? He is a special instance of an orator who, intending to be sublime, is only amusing; and his latest produsion is, perhaps, a most remarkable specimen of his style and manner.

The reconstruction of the Ministry in August last elevated Lord Frederick Cavendish to the position of Assistant Chancellor of the Exchequer—a sort of financial jackal, if the phrase may be excused. Always airy, easy, and assured, since then he has been going about in Yorkshire, describing the position of the Ministry and the political situation in the most roseate colours. There, according to him, is no distrust of the Government in the Liberal party; there are no difficulties in the way of a triumphant Session; the education difficulty is a mere hill; the Conservative reaction is a myth; and so on. Thus he spoke at Todmorden. But soon after appeared Mr. Leatham at Huddersfield with one of those speeches of his, in which jests and witticisms and epigrams sparkle in every sentence, not with harmless rays, but with a scorching, withering effect. He sees no such charming prospect for the Government and the Liberal party, and unless the influence of Mr. Bright predominates and works a miracle he believes the education question will break up both; and he had the temerity to ridicule Mr. W. E. Forster, who, having obtained in the House a position akin to that of Aristides the Just, if Mr. Leatham could have his way, would speedily be ostracised.

Then there has appeared in his character as a political stormy petrel, Mr. Trevelyan, who, perhaps, has ascertained that the Government do not mean to deal with the subject of the equalisation of the county and borough franchise. At any rate, he deems it desirable that that question should be talked of just now, and he has begun his crusade at far Galashiels with a will, and a confidence all his own. There may be reasons connected with recent legal appointments which have induced Mr. Osborne-Morgan to address his constituents in duplicate, or triplicate perhaps, and his latest utterance is amusingly indicative of the probable state of his feelings towards the Government. If the Ministry are ever wise, it is when they act in unison with his notions, as he is always in the right. He lectures—nay, hectors—the Government on their duty to the Nonconformists, which would, according to him, be the instant disestablishment of the Church, and the yielding to all their crotchets on the education question; and, of course, he cannot agree with the suggestions of Sir William Vernon-

Harcourt on the subject of the land laws, not because that gentleman is Solicitor-General; oh, no! but because he is a type of a race of lawyers who, for the most sordid reasons, object to making the transfer of land too easy. What may be suspected from this out-speaking of the learned and excitable member for Denbighshire is that he is desirous of showing that he is worth being subjected to the usual process of muzzling. There may perhaps be two opinions about that.

Another lawyer, and another Welsh member, whose name was much before the public when Attorney-Generalships and Solicitor-Generalships were flying about, has been saying his say to his constituents. If half that one heard at the time be true, Mr. Watkin Williams was entitled to take to himself a grievance and let it out when opportunity occurred. But he has chosen a more judicious course; and has not presented himself publicly as an irritated censor of the Government. On the contrary, he has, with a certain subtlety, while admitting that the Ministry is not as popular as it was, argued that this was only a natural reaction following the full tide of their success and merits. Thus he has done nothing to endanger his relations with those who, it is to be hoped, will have an opportunity of compensating him for what, as it is reported, was something more than an indirect slight.

MUSIC.

With this week London music has resumed some of its wonted activity, after the usual Christmas recess.

The Monday Popular Concerts have recommenced, and the occasion brought back Dr. Hans von Bülow, who was welcomed with enthusiastic applause by a very large audience. The solo performance of the great pianist consisted of the variations by Beethoven on the same theme (and in the same key) as that of the finale of his "Eroica" symphony. Dr. von Bülow had previously performed the same piece at one of last year's concerts of the Wagner Society, when, as again on Monday, his playing elicited strong demonstrations of approval, the player having been twice recalled after his performance. In Beethoven's sonata in D, for piano and violoncello (from op. 102), with Signor Piatti, and in Mendelssohn's second trio, with the same associate, and Herr Strauss as violinist, Dr. von Bülow's powers, executive and intellectual, were again manifested, the general effect having been enhanced by the excellence of the co-operating performers. The concert commenced with the third of Schumann's three quartets dedicated to Mendelssohn (op. 41), one of the finest works of that composer's middle period. This was led by Herr Strauss, the remaining members of the quartet party having been, as usual, Mr. L. Ries, Mr. Zerbini, and Signor Piatti. The vocalist was Mr. Santley, who gave fine effect to a graceful aria ("Sul Tramonto"), by Filippo de Filippi, Schubert's "Der Alpenjäger" and Mendelssohn's "Morgengruss" (both in English), and Mr. Hatton's charming song, "To Anthea," which last was encored. Mr. Zerbini was the accompanist. The Saturday Popular Concerts are resumed this week with Madame Norman-Néruda as leading violinist, and Mr. Charles Hallé as solo pianist. The admirers of Madame Schumann and Herr Joachim will be glad to know that the former will make her first appearance this season on Monday, Feb. 23, the latter being announced for the previous Monday's concert.

The sixth subscription concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society took place on Thursday week, when the "Creation" was given, and Signor Giulio Perkin made his first appearance, postponed from a previous concert on account of illness. This gentleman (an American, we believe) made a highly successful début, and was greatly applauded in his execution of the bass solo music of Haydn's oratorio, particularly in the airs "Rolling in foaming billows" and "Now heaven in fullest glory shone," and the important descriptive recitative which precedes the latter. In this the extensive lower compass of the singer's voice was displayed with marked effect. The soprano and tenor solos of the oratorio were sung respectively by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. W. H. Cummings, with their usual refinement; Mr. Raynham having rendered good service as second tenor. The choruses were given with fine effect by the gigantic choir, now under the direction of Mr. Barnby, who conducted the performance, as usual, Dr. Stainer having occupied his customary place as organist. At the seventh concert, on Thursday next, Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" ("Lobgesang") and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" will be performed.

The second ballad concert of the year (the fifth of the eighth season) took place at St. James's Hall, on Saturday afternoon, when the solo vocalists were Misses Edith Wynne, Sophie Ferrari, and Antoinette Sterling, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Pyatt. The programme was of the usual varied and popular description, among the several effective pieces having been two new songs, "One morning, oh, so early," by A. S. Gatty, and "Night and Morning," by F. H. Cowen—both sung by Miss Wynne, and each encored; other encores having been those of Mr. Cowen's song "The Carrier Dove" (Madame Patey), Mr. Molloy's "Pull 'e-haul' e" (Miss Sterling), Mr. Hatton's "If my Mistress hide her face" (Mr. Guy), and Wallace's martial song, "Yes, let me like a soldier fall" (Mr. Rigby). The London Vocal Union, directed by Mr. Frederick Walker, contributed some pleasant part-singing; Mr. Sydney Smith played two brilliant pianoforte solos of his own composition; and Mr. Hatton and Herr Meyer Lutz conducted, as usual. The third concert of the year took place on Wednesday evening, when the programme offered attractions of a similar kind to those of the previous performances.

This (Saturday) afternoon the Crystal Palace concerts recommence, the programme including Schubert's great symphony in C (No. 9) and two novelties—an orchestral "serenade" by Taubert, and the late Mr. Pierson's overture to "As You Like It."

Next week's music will include some interesting performances. On Thursday evening the British Orchestral Society begins its second season; on Friday evening Dr. Crotch's oratorio, "Palestine," is to be revived by the Sacred Harmonic Society; and on the same evening a special concert of the Wagner Society will be given, with a programme including choral extracts from the composer's operas.

Mr. Carl Rosa's provincial successes with his English opera company will be supplemented by a London season, which is to commence at Drury-Lane Theatre on March 2—to continue for four weeks there, and to be transferred to the Standard Theatre on the occupancy of the first-named house by Mr. Mapleson, for his usual season of Her Majesty's Opera.

Middle. Titiens was, on Monday, presented by the people of Dublin with a handsome rose-coloured Irish poplin dress and a suit of Limerick point lace.

Mr. Charles William Townley, of Fulbourne, has been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Cambridgeshire, in place of the Earl of Hardwicke, deceased; and the Duke of Bedford has been selected to succeed Mr. Townley as Custos Rotulorum of the Isle of Ely.

ILLUSTRATIONS TO PANTOMIMES

We give three more Illustrations as indicative of the splendour of the pantomimes produced at the present festive season. After the full report which we have rendered of the various contents of these gorgeous productions we have little left to say in further commendation. First on our page is the

which has treated in a new manner an old subject, and expended much costly scenery on its adornment. Our Illustration presents a portion of the transformation scene, representative of the realms of night and morning, which is really beautiful. We have, first of all, the appearance of Luna rising in her car, encircled by the Pleiades; next, the breaking of morn, the rising of Aurora, and the ascent of Phœbus in his chariot; dainty devices to which great praise is due. The harlequinade also concludes with a grand picture, entitled "The Regions of the God of Day."

STANDARD.

The pantomime at the Standard Theatre is, we believe, the most magnificent of the season. As on a previous occasion, the manager has placed on the boards an army in silver armour—real silver, be it understood—which for brilliancy of effect is not to be paralleled. This gorgeous arrangement of troops and manoeuvres is made to grow out of a contemplation of Guildhall, and the spectators see as in a vision the glories of the Past and the Future. Among these evolutions is one entirely novel—a night scene, "with the camp-fires dotted over the plain." We quote the bill, it being impossible to improve the suggestion. The subject of the pantomime is, as we have previously recorded, the truly English story of "Whittington and his Cat." Our Illustration shows him sleeping by the stone at Highgate. He is roused from his prophetic slumbers by the female elf, the Fairy Fairweather (Miss Kate Neville); he returns to London, and commences the well-known series of adventures which conduct him to fortune. The transformation scene is exceedingly grand. It is called "A Descent from Sky to Sea," and presents the setting of the sun as Apollo descending in the West, and the rise of the moon as Diana ascending in the East. It is, indeed, a fine poetic vision, which, to be properly appreciated, must be witnessed. The harlequinade is illustrated by the extraordinary talents of the Paynes, who were so long associated with the pantomimic glories of Covent Garden.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

We have already described the course and progress of the pantomime at the Sydenham theatre, for such it now merits to be denominated. It treats nearly of the same subject as that of the Princess's, "Puss in Boots" and the adventures of the Marquis of Carabas. Our Illustration is from a principal scene—that, in fact, in which the miller's son is introduced as the Marquis to "Caractacus, the big King of little Brittany" (so called in the playbill). The Princess, his daughter, is immediately impressed with his appearance, and eagerly requests him to make the usual application to papa. These characters are supported by Miss Caroline Parkes and Miss Kemp, and admirably do both enact their different rôles. Having already set forth the general and special merits of the work in full, nothing remains for us to do but to recommend paterfamilias, with all his interesting responsibilities, to pay a visit at once to the Crystal Palace.

CLERKENWELL HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

The large prison, belonging to the county of Middlesex, in Coldbath-fields, Clerkenwell, is designed to contain nearly two thousand male offenders, under penal sentence for different terms, from one week to two years. Female prisoners of the same class, in the Middlesex county jurisdiction, are consigned to the prison in Tothill-fields, Westminster, which has room for eight hundred. The situation and outward aspect of the Coldbath-fields House of Correction, in an extensive square inclosure, with a high wall, between Gray's-inn-road and Farringdon-road, must be familiar to all who know London. It should not be confounded with the Middlesex County House of Detention for untried prisoners, which is also in Clerkenwell, but at a short distance eastward, not far from the Middlesex Sessions House. This House of Detention was the scene of the Fenian blowing-up exploit, which cost several lives, a few years ago. The House of Correction is mostly occupied by prisoners under sentence of simple imprisonment with hard labour for short periods; but those condemned to penal servitude for two years are, in some cases, placed here for a time before their removal to the Government convict prisons of Millbank and Pentonville. The City of London has its own House of Correction at Holloway, independent of that for Middlesex; but this is on a much smaller scale, accommodating not more than 370 male and female inmates. The famous gaol of Newgate, which we lately described with a series of illustrations, is now used only for the safe detention of prisoners awaiting their trial at the Central Criminal Court, Old Bailey; and for those under sentence of death.

The Coldbath-fields prison is seldom quite full; 1750 was the number actually there when the sketches were made which are now presented to our readers; but the average is 1600 adults and 100 juveniles. There are two classes, with different kinds or degrees of hard labour. Those of the first class are kept to the treadmill, the motion of which is utilised for grinding wheat and pumping water from the well to a tank which supplies the prison. Those of the second class are employed in oakum-picking, and in mat, brush, and basket making, or in shoemaking, tailoring, and other trades, if they are fit to learn such useful arts; besides washing and cleaning the premises. The treadmill is a huge double machine, erected on both sides of a long gallery, the "wheel-yard," where 684 prisoners are assembled at a time. Half of these—namely, 342 men and boys—are upon the steps of the wheel for ten minutes, while the other half sit down and rest; so they take their turns, one set relieving another, throughout the working time of the day, which is six hours and a half. The actual exertion for each person is, therefore, limited to three hours and a quarter, and those who have tried it say that it is not more fatiguing than to climb an ordinary ladder. The work of picking oakum is rather painful to delicate fingers, but becomes easy after a few days. Our Illustrations show this sort of work going on, and in another room the work of tailoring. The prisoners are constantly watched, and are forbidden to speak a word to each other when assembled for work or dinner; even a detected glance or sign would be severely punished. Each person is locked up at night in a solitary cell.

The award of the gold medals of the late Sir Gilbert Blane, Bart., has recently been made, in accordance with the bequest of the founder, by the Presidents of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Director-General of the Medical Department of the Navy. They have been bestowed on Staff Surgeon John D. Macdonald, M.D., F.R.S., Professor of Naval Hygiene at Netley, for his journal of H.M.S. Lord Warden; and to Staff Surgeon (second class) Thomas Colan, M.D., for his journal of H.M.S. Rattlesnake.

Archæology of the Month.

The site of the great conflagration in which the printing-offices of Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper were destroyed, on the 29th ult., had been a notable place since Samuel Richardson, the novelist, lived in the north-west corner of Salisbury-square: here he wrote his "Pamela," and printed his own novels; here, in the house at the top of the court (No. 76, Fleet street), Richardson was visited by Hogarth, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Young; Secker, Archbishop of Canterbury; and Mrs. Barbauld, when a playful child. Goldsmith sat here as press-corrector to Richardson; and in the square was printed "Maitland's London," folio, 1739. Richardson's house was unroofed by the recent fire. Adjoining was Gillett's printing-office, twice destroyed (in 1805 and 1810) by fire; the premises were rebuilt, and here, in 1814, were burnt 10,000 copies of the Memoir of the notorious Mary Anne Clark, the burning of which occupied three days. North-east of Salisbury-square, in 1821, were burnt several old houses, opposite Bride Church, after the architectural avenue to Fleet-street was opened, at the cost of £10,000.

Mr. W. H. Overall, librarian to the Corporation of London, has read to the Society of Antiquaries a paper entitled "Early Views and Maps of London, and their Authors," reviewing each map and pointing out their merits and shortcomings. In examining the map done by Ralph Agas, who surveyed London, as he himself tells us, in or about the thirtieth year of Queen Elizabeth, Mr. Overall proved the dates when the now known copies were published. Extracts from the parish registers of Agas's native village, showing the birth of his children and grand-children, and his own burial, were then read. Mr. Overall next clearly showed the deceit practised by Mr. George Vertue, the eminent engraver, in 1737, not only upon the Society of Antiquaries, but upon hundreds of antiquarian inquirers. On the date mentioned, Mr. Vertue brought to the notice of the society a plan of London, which he stated had been re-engraved from a copy of Agas's old map of 1560, then in the possession of Sir Hans Sloane; but, unfortunately for his reputation, there are still in existence two maps bearing the author's name, which, at first sight, appear to be Vertue's, but Mr. Overall proved from the internal evidence of the maps themselves that they were the production of some Dutch artist in the reign of William III., and that the identical plates had in some manner found their way into the possession of Mr. Vertue, who, after working them up in several places with a dry point, so as to assimilate them to the genuine Agas's, then added his name and issued them as his own. The society purchased the pewter plates, which they still possess. Upon the back of one of these plates was discovered a spoilt plate, the section being St. Paul's, Blackfriars, Bridewell, &c., and he pointed out the strange differences existing upon this with the one subsequently engraved. This valuable topographical information given to the society is attested by Mr. R. H. Major, who moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Overall, as did also Mr. George Schurff. Mr. Overall drew attention to the facsimile of Agas's old map, just completed from the original, in the library of the Corporation, so that the members of the Society of Antiquaries may now have an exact similitude of this ancient map, of which only two copies are known.

More about Charterhouse. We read in the Builder that Dr. Middleton has applied to the Chancellor of the Diocese of London (Dr. Tristram), at the Consistorial Court, for a faculty, or licence, to take a portion of the churchyard of the Charterhouse, and to remove the bodies to another part. In order to make the new street from Bloomsbury to Shoreditch it would be necessary to take part of the churchyard of the Charterhouse, and a faculty was required to appropriate a consecrated spot. The Court granted the prayer of the applicants.

In the restoration of St. Sepulchre's Church, Snow-hill, upon taking down the octagonal turrets and pinnacles, erected in 1630 and 1632, they were found cased with Portland stone and cramped with wrought iron. The cores of the turrets and the pinnacles were filled with rubble, and some of the crockets, embattlements, and gargoyles, with lions and other heads, belonging to the Perpendicular church of 1450, all being of Ketton stone. This discovery confirms the employment of crockets in the pinnacles and embattled parapets on the turrets of the present restoration, which remains will, of course, be preserved. The committee do not recommend that the body of the church should be made to match the old tower and porch in style of architecture. Wren, in his repairs, had little sympathy for the Gothic materials, and so used them for filling in the pinnacles, whose picturesqueness was lost by their plain stone carving; yet they cost about £150 each.

The fine old church of Bath Abbey, "the lantern of the west," has undergone important restoration, under the direction of Sir Gilbert Scott; embracing the reparation of the exterior masonry and the roof, the strengthening of the foundations of the pillars in the nave, the substitution of a magnificently-groined stone roof for a plaster one, the reseating with carved oak of the whole area of the church, the providing (at a cost of £800) of a corporation pew, the removal of all tablets from the floor and fixing them on the walls, the removal of galleries in the choir, the substitution of an ornate pulpit for the old one, and a new system of lighting and heating.

A new reredos has been fixed in the choir of Exeter Cathedral; the structure designed by Sir Gilbert Scott. It is beautifully carved in alabaster and marble, and has cost nearly £2000. It rises 22 ft. above the floor of the choir, and has a very magnificent appearance—the Derbyshire alabaster, marble, and precious stones showing to great advantage, a central cross, finely gemmed, and forming the apex. In the centre is a representation of the Ascension; the figure of the Saviour stands 3½ ft. in height, with the eleven disciples underneath; fifteen figures are skillfully grouped, the three Marys being introduced with the disciples; executed by Farmer and Brindley, ecclesiastical sculptors. St. Peter, to whom the sacred fane is dedicated, is conspicuous. The compartment on the right has the representation of the Transfiguration, and on the left compartment is the Descent of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost. Legal proceedings have been instituted.

At Redhill, on a farm about three miles from Bournemouth, Mr. H. N. Cox has caused to be dug up eighty-six urns, many of them containing portions of human bones. Opinions differ as to the urns being Roman or ancient British. Only one of the urns having been secured in tolerable preservation. They are found 6 in. or 8 in. below the surface, and about 2 ft. deep.

Exactly a century ago, we learn from Mr. Octavius Morgan, in the Gloucester Journal, that the same ideas prevailed respecting the decoration of St. Paul's Cathedral as are entertained at the present day, and six of our most distinguished artists were appointed to carry out this great design—Mrs. Angelica Kaufman, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Signor Cipriani, Mr. West, Mr. Dance, and Mr. Barry.

Gold has been discovered in Bute. The specimen has been pronounced "auriferous quartz, with heavy gold in it." Some time ago, Mr. James Cameron discovered gold in the island, and had it made into a ring, which was presented to the present Marchioness of Bute on the occasion of her marriage.

FINE ARTS.

THE LANDSEER EXHIBITION AT THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

Having in our last week's article noticed the interesting collection of studies and sketches by Sir Edwin Landseer in the first room at Burlington House, and having also had a foretaste of the whole exhibition in the very miscellaneous contents of the second room, we propose to review the remainder of this gathering in something near chronological order. Arranged, or rather wanting in all arrangement, as this exhibition is—without the slightest attention to the dates at which the component items were produced—the opportunity of tracing an artist's career, which such an assemblage of his works should afford, is apt to be lost without some attempt at chronological comparison. So little, however, are we aided, either by the hanging or the catalogue, that to inspect several of Sir Edwin's earliest works the visitor must be directed to the very last room containing his oil-paintings.

In Room VI., then, are two droll pictures painted in 1814, and remarkably clever for a boy of twelve, representing a "French Boar" (421) and an "English Boar" (448); the one a miserably gaunt, lean, lanky-legged animal; the other so enveloped in fat that there is scarcely any distinguishable protrusion of head, legs, or tail. "Greyhound and Dead Hare" (454) dates three years later, about the time that Landseer became a student of the Royal Academy. In "Fighting Dogs" (422) we come to the picture which, exhibited in 1818 at the Society of Painters in Water Colours, Spring-gardens, under the title of "Fighting Dogs Getting Wind," won for the artist his first and great public success. It was bought from the exhibition by Sir George Beaumont, the ancestor of the present possessor, and the acknowledged leader of the connoisseurship of that day, whose approbation meant fame and fortune for any young artist. It is, indeed, wonderfully vigorous, firm, and masculine, as the work of a youth of sixteen, and in those qualities recalls Snyders and James Ward. You may almost see the panting of the gaping-mouthed dogs with their fierce exertion; and although one dog stands astride the other, there is plenty of fight yet in the fallen antagonist. The "White Horse in Stable" (322) belongs to the same year. This picture lay forgotten in a hayloft till 1842, and Sir Edwin, on then sending it home to its owner, wrote that this was "the first horse of that complexion I ever painted," adding that he had not retouched it, thinking it "better to leave my early style unmingled with that of my old age." In 1819 appeared "The Braggart"—England, Scotland, and Ireland (453), and the much finer picture engraved as "The Intruder," but here called "The Cat Disturbed" (265), a white terrier frightening a cat from a trapped rat. The characteristic action and expression of the animals, and the chiaroscuro of this picture, are worthy of high praise. The white dog was probably a famous rat-ter, and it, or a descendant, appears as "Brutus," sniffing at a door, in No. 433, painted in 1824. "Why does a Donkey like Thistles?" (393), exhibited in 1820 as "The Thistle, &c., from 'Æsop's Fables,'" is an example of robust power verging on rudeness, that is diametrically opposed to the feeling and style of later works. In "The Boar Hunt" (381), 1821, we are again reminded of the energy and truth of Snyders, though the trail of the dog's legs that has fastened on the boar's ear is questionable. "Pointers: To Ho!" (389), well known by Mr. T. Landseer's engraving, is a faithful and spirited transcript from nature, but rather thin, compared to works of this period, and somewhat heavy in colouring. "The Intrusive Puppies" (204), of the same year (1821), originally exhibited as "Impertinent Monkeys Dismissed by a Monkey," is equally vigorous and more solid. Of two young dogs who would make free with his platter of food, a monkey has hold of one by the tail, and is about to seize the other by the ear. The picture, painted in 1824, familiar to all by the engraving, of "The Cat's Paw" (281)—a monkey holding a cat swathed in a napkin and using its only free paw to withdraw roasting chestnuts—is, probably, the most complete of the early humorous pictures. "The Widow" (314), of the same year—i.e., a duck quacking disconsolately over the dead body of a drake—is specially noteworthy as one of the earliest examples of Landseer's wonderful skill in depicting the markings and character of feather, as well as other animal textures. The large group, "Dead Game" (216), of the following year, with its peacock, swan, &c., is a far more elaborate but less successful effort in the same direction, and in the comparison with Weenix, Houde-Rotter, and other Dutch masters, which Landseer here appears to invite, our English painter comes off but indifferently well. "The Travelled Monkey" (369), of the same year, is replete with nice touches of humour, but inferior in solidity and strength of painting to some preceding works.

Landseer had now been (in the year before, 1826) elected an A.R.A.; he had also visited Scotland, and henceforth a change is observable in his practice. The early works are remarkable for conscientious carefulness; nature, and nature alone, was his prototype. As far as in him lay, the artist strove to render every hair of a dog's coat, every filament of a bird's feathers. And Landseer may be quoted to prove that great precociousness in art is not delusive. Yet we now (1827) perceive a more obvious aim at "composition," and telling effects of light and shade. "Breadth" is resorted to as facilitating rapid production, and the emptiness too apt to be engendered is sought to be counterbalanced by touches here and there of extremely dextrous but self-conscious manual facility. The enervating influences of courtly and fashionable patronage begin likewise to make themselves felt. The painter's female figures and children belong to the "Book of Beauty" and "Keepsake" race. His animals no longer appertain strictly to the brute creation, but are the vehicles of human sentiments and passions, and as such appeal to the populace. Qualities of magisterial treatment, and especially of design, are, it is true, developed which render Landseer's work eminently well suited for translation in black and white, but the engravings are in many instances preferable to the paintings themselves. In short, we cannot but feel that (whatever his present vogue) flattering and misleading influences have deprived posterity of an animal-painter of the English school worthy to rank on their own ground with the old masters. The first picture here which illustrates the change to which we allude is "The Return from the Deer Forest" (276), which has not the firm grasp on nature of earlier works, though an elegant composition—in truth, almost monumental in symmetry.

The change to which we allude is least observable in the remarkable series of pictures, painted at various periods, forming the Redleaf collection, contributed by Mr. Wells, which the Academicians have wisely hung together. This series consists, however, for the most part of studies of game, not of ambitious subject-pictures. We commend to the visitor as worthy of the closest scrutiny the following careful studies in this collection:—"Heads of Sheep and Cattle" (337), "Woodcock" (339), "Hare and Weasel" (341), "Not Caught Yet" (343), a fox cautiously sniffing at a rabbit-baited trap, "Wild Duck" (349), "Hawk Unhooded" (349), "Blackcock" (352), "Otter and Salmon" (354), "Pheasant" (356), and "Grouse" (358). In this collection also is the picture of a dog standing over "The Shepherd's Grave" (312), which may be taken as a sequel to "The Shepherd's Chief Mourner," lately engraved by us, and which in its sentimental suggestiveness indicates a new aim and feeling in the artist. But all the dog-portraits and pictures of Landseer's middle and late periods, including the smooth, sleek, and excessively "well-bred" series of Queen's pets, several of which we have already noticed, exemplify the change of practice to which we refer. Compare the "Neptune" (305), painted in 1824, with "A Distinguished Member of the Humane Society" (310) and "Saved," already noticed. The noble mastiff-bloodhound called "Odin" (200), dated 1835, is interesting as an example of the power of painting rapidly, upon which Landseer prided himself after his painstaking early period. The artist has himself recorded that this fine study was "painted at a single sitting, within twelve hours, with the object of showing the superior effect of one continuous effort over more elaborate work." Doubtless, certain qualities of handling and colour are only attainable by painting at once; but a conscious aim at rapidity too often leads to superficiality. In our observations on the picture "There's no place like home," which we engraved last week from the Sheepshanks Collection, we alluded to Landseer's often forced attribution of human habits, gestures, and expressions to the canine world. In no picture is this more obvious than in "Laying Down the Law" (205). Clever as the animal-painting unquestionably is, the picture is a mere travesty of human life; dogs could hardly be trained to enact the semblance of such a scene; and as applied to the polity of dogs the subject is absolutely meaningless. This picture reveals the effects of painting on a bituminous preparation; one dog, introduced in shadow, is seamed with a network of cracks, disclosing the bituminous brown beneath. Scarcely less far-fetched is the allusion to Mrs. Stowe's novel in the much-lauded, but to our mind questionably sentimental, "Uncle Tom and his Wife for Sale" (245).

The pictures with lions show the same transitions. The "Lioness Attacking a Horse" (246), "The Prowling Lion" (315), and the study of a crouching and snarling lion, numbered 238, have more of the savage nature of the king of beasts in its wild state than the later representations, including the sketchy studies (208 and 212) for the lions of more majestic, quiescent mien in Trafalgar-square, or the sleek, handsome, beasts in the two Van Amburgh pictures. In one (319) of these, painted for the Duke of Wellington, the lion-tamer stands whip in hand, and the animals make various signs of fear and subjection. In the other and finer picture (209), painted for the Queen, Van Amburgh is recumbent, with a lamb at his side, and grips a ferocious tiger by the head. A lion sitting apart in placid majesty already suggests the type of the Trafalgar-square beasts. In both pictures the lion-tamer is but a coarse, truculent, theatrical showman, and compares disadvantageously with the mighty creatures about him.

Though the first of the Highland pictures marked, as we have seen, a transition in style, yet the splendid series which followed contain many fine artistic elements, and will probably form Sir Edwin's most lasting source of fame. It must suffice, however, merely to enumerate some of the principal works (not hitherto noticed) of this class—works au reste well known by the engravings—such as "There's Life in the Old Dog Yet" (224), "The Sanctuary" (278), "The Stag at Bay" (234), "The Random Shot" (217), "Lost in the Snow" (229), "Night" (295), and "Morning" (287); "The Highland Nurses" (384), with a dedication, in questionable taste, to Miss Nightingale; "The Hunted Stag" (130), and "An Event in the Forest" (223), which, like the "Morning" above mentioned, represents a fox and an eagle making towards a dead stag. The largest and the most robust and masculine work of this class is that first named, which worthily occupies the place of honour in the great room. A hunted stag, with two hounds, have dashed over a precipice, and fallen together into a deep, rocky cleft; a gillie has been lowered to them by a cord, and, finding signs of life in one of the dogs, he shouts to some one above the words taken for title. "The Random Shot" has a very beautiful effect of low sunlight on snow; but the subject is so painful that, like some other of Landseer's works, it almost argues a lack of true sympathy with the animal world. A doe, that has been inadvertently shot, lies dead, with a fawn sniffing for customary sustenance in the blood-stained snow at its side.

Among miscellaneous subjects, the "Bolton Abbey in the Olden Time" (214) of 1834, and "The Return from Hawking" (207) of 1837, are universally known by the admirable engravings; but the pictures themselves are comparatively slight and artificial in treatment. "Refreshment" (215), of 1846, is one of the best pictures produced by Landseer from Continental materials. The picture of a panting, exhausted fox, here called "The Last Run of the Season" (268), but engraved under the title of "The Best Run of the Season," gains in the engraving, but less so than does the "Titania and Bottom" (236) in the exquisite mezzotint by Cousens. It would seem, however, that this picture, reputed to be Landseer's most poetical conception, is not original. We have seen a picture, by poor insane Dodd, of, we are inclined to think, earlier date, in which nearly the whole composition appears, though reversed from right to left. It is desirable that the dates of these pictures should be definitely ascertained. Among Landseer's pictures with horses the most noteworthy are "The Cover Hack" (233), which is altogether admirable; "The Shrew Tamed" (318), with its saucy horsebreaker; "The Arab Tent" (239), belonging to the Prince of Wales; and "Voltigeur" (411), a life-size portrait of the winner of the Derby in 1850, as he appeared with the fleshiness of retired stable-life many years later. The large, confused work representing "A Flood in the Highlands" (242); the picture of Polar bears coming on relics of the Franklin Arctic Expedition, entitled "Man Proposes, God Disposes" (222), the "Rent Day in the Wilderness" (252), and "The Queen Landing at Loch Muich" (293), illustrate progressive and, alas! rapid stages of decline.

As a portrait-painter Landseer was even more unequal than in other departments of art. The portrait of his father, John Landseer, the engraver (241), is, perhaps, Sir Edwin's most thoroughly characteristic and complete presentment of a human physiognomy. Very good, also, is the shrewd, sagacious, and penetrating head of Sir Walter Scott (407), with his favourite dogs, "Maida" and "Pepper." By-the-way, the picture here of a dog seated on a table before a bust of Scott, called "The Studio of Sir Francis Chantrey," was exhibited under the title, "Mustard, the Son of 'Pepper,'" and engraved as "Pen, Brush, and Chisel." Such changes of the titles of Sir Edwin's works are frequent. Allusion has already been made to the artificial mannerism or the astonishing unfinish of most of Landseer's portraits of courtly and fashionable personages; and for further confirmation of all, and more than all, we have said, we have only to point to the group of the Queen and Prince Consort as Queen Philippa and Edward III. (211), or the Loch Muich picture above mentioned. One of the latest, best, and most interesting portrait-pictures of Sir Edwin is that of himself sketching, with a couple of dogs looking over his shoulder, called "The Connoisseurs" (237), painted in 1865. We have, lastly, to mention "The Stag at Bay" (366), an exceedingly spirited model in coloured plaster, and the only piece of sculpture by the artist, besides the medallion reliefs of a lion's head which form permanent decorations of the jambs of the doors of the Academy rooms.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

BARONESS DE CLIFFORD.

The Right Honourable Sophia, Baroness de Clifford, died, at 14, Lewes-crescent, Brighton, on the 3rd inst., in her eighty-third year. Her Ladyship was only daughter and heiress of Colonel George Coussmaker, by Catharine, his wife, eldest sister and co-heiress of Edward Southwell, twenty-first Lord de Clifford, at whose death, Sept. 30, 1832, the barony of De Clifford, fourth on the roll, fell into abeyance. The next year, however, the Crown was pleased to terminate the same in favour of the lady whose death we record. Lady de Clifford married, Aug. 21, 1822, John Russell, Esq., Captain R.N., son of Lord William Russell, and nephew of John, sixth Duke of Bedford, and had by him (who died 1835) two daughters and one son—Edward Southwell, formerly M.P. for Tavistock, present and twenty-third Lord de Clifford, born 1824, who married, March 31, 1853, Harriet Agnes, daughter of Admiral Sir Charles Elliot, K.C.B., and has issue.

LORD DE ROS.

The Right Hon. William Lennox Lascelles Fitzgerald de Ros, Lord de Ros, General in the Army, Colonel of the 4th Hussars, and Lieut.-Governor of the Tower of London, died, on the 6th inst., at Old Court, Strangford, county of Down. His Lordship was born, on Sept. 1, 1797, the third son of Lord Henry Fitzgerald (third son of James, the first Duke of Leinster) by Charlotte, Baroness de Ros, his wife, daughter of Admiral the Hon. Robert Boyle Walsingham; and succeeded, at the death of his brother, Henry William, nineteenth Lord, in 1839, to the ancient barony of de Ros, which dates from the reign of Henry III., and after Le Despencer, now enjoyed by Viscountess Falmouth, stands first on the roll of Barons. He was educated at Westminster, and at Christ Church, Oxford, entered the Army in 1819, and attained the rank of General in 1868. He was Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard in 1852, and Equerry to the Prince Consort from 1853 to 1861. He married, June 7, 1824, Lady Georgiana, third daughter of Charles, fourth Duke of Richmond, K.G., and leaves issue one surviving daughter, Blanche, wife of James Rennie Swinton, Esq., and one son, Dudley Charles, now Lord de Ros, Colonel in the Army, late 1st Life Guards, and Equerry to the Queen, born March 11, 1827, and married, October, 1853, to Lady Elizabeth Egerton, eldest daughter of the Earl of Wilton, by whom he has a daughter, Mary Frances. The late Lord de Ros was author of a "History of the Tower of London."

SIR JAMES CHATTERTON, BART.

General Sir James Charles Chatterton, third Baronet, of Castle Mahon, in the county of Cork, Colonel 4th (Royal Irish) Dragoon Guards, G.C.B., K.H., and Knight of San Fernando of Spain, Gentleman of the Privy Chamber, died on the 5th inst., just six weeks after his wife. He was born, in 1794, the second son of Sir James Chatterton, first Baronet, second sergeant-at-law, and Clerk of the State Papers in Ireland, by Rebecca, his wife, daughter of Abraham Lane, Esq. He entered the Army, in the 12th Light Dragoons, in 1809, and was actively engaged in the Peninsula and at Waterloo. For his services he was given the war medal with seven clasps, as well as the Waterloo medal. He took part in the sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz, and the battles of Salamanca, Vittoria, Nivelle, and various minor actions; and in 1815 fought at Quatre Bras and Waterloo, and was in the advance on and at the capture of Paris. At the state funeral of the Duke of Wellington he was commissioned by the Queen, "in consideration of his long, faithful, and distinguished career," to carry the grand banner. Sir James sat in Parliament as M.P. for the county of Cork from 1831 to 1835 and from 1849 to 1852, and was High Sheriff from 1851 to 1852. He succeeded to the baronetcy, at the decease of his brother, Sir William Abraham Chatterton, second Baronet, in 1855, but, as he leaves no issue, the title expires with him. He married, in 1825, Anne, daughter of James Atkinson, Esq., of Lendale, Yorkshire, and had an only son, who died in infancy.

MR. CHARLES WRIOTHESLEY DIGBY.

Charles Wriothesley Digby, Esq., of Meriden Hall, Warwickshire, and Studland Manor, Dorset, High Sheriff for the latter county, 1864, died, on the 29th ult., at 43, Eaton-square. He was born, May 2, 1803, the eldest son of the late Rev. Charles Digby, Rector of Bishops Caudle and Canon of Windsor, by his wife, the Hon. Mary Somerville, and grandson of Colonel the Hon. Stephen Digby, Equerry to George III., and his first wife, Lady Lucy Fox Strangways. Mr. Digby was a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for the county of Dorset. He married, first, Miss Floyer, by whom he had issue one daughter (married, in 1854, to H. Maitland Wilson, Esq., and died in 1856); and, secondly, Mrs. George Bingham, widow of the Rev. G. Bingham, of Bingham's Melcombe, and sister of J. H. Blagrove, Esq., of Calcot Park, near Reading, by whom he had issue one daughter (married, in 1865, to the Rev. R. H. Wingfield Digby, Rector of Thornford); and lastly, in 1856, Adelaide, daughter of the late Right Hon. George Bankes, who survives him, and has issue one son and five daughters.

During the Christmas vacation an exhibition of the works of the students of the Royal Dublin Society School of Art, Kildare-street, has been on view to the public. It was opened by the Lord Lieutenant and Countess Spencer on the 23rd ult. This display of works of art-study is fine, and of such magnitude as to fill the whole of the galleries and class-rooms of the vast building in which it is located.

SCIENTIFIC RESULTS OF THE MONTH.

The employment of compound steam-engines of the marine type for driving factories and mills, in substitution of the ordinary forms of land-engine hitherto employed for that purpose, appears to be making the steady progress we expected. Messrs. Schneider, the celebrated engineers of Creusot, in France, have recently produced a compound engine of the marine pattern for factory purposes, and Messrs. Penn and Sons, the engineers, of Greenwich, are about to replace the engines which now drive their factory by a compound engine of their ordinary marine construction, except that it will be without the link motion, as it does not require to be reversed. Messrs. Schneider have, on former occasions, distinguished themselves by their early appreciation and employment of important English inventions—as for example in their introduction of the steam-hammer, which they found in progress at Mr. Nasmyth's works, near Manchester; and such was their alacrity of movement that they had their hammer going before Mr. Nasmyth was able to start his. Messrs. Penn and Sons, about two years ago, constructed a compound engine of the marine type for land purposes to the order of Messrs. Bourne and Co., of London, for service in Italy, and the engine which they are now making for driving their works is a duplicate of that which they then produced. It may be added that the engines which Messrs. Penn are taking out to make room for the new compound are a pair of grasshopper engines, of very perfect construction, resembling in every respect the engines which they constructed a few years ago for driving the newspaper machinery of the Times printing office. Up to the present time these engines have been regarded as the most perfect of their kind. But compound engines, with inverted cylinders working into a reservoir, and with the cranks at right angles, are now judged to be so greatly preferable that the former engines have been displaced, though still in good repair, to make room for the new type, which, like Aaron's serpent, appears destined to swallow up all the rest. The question of the best form of factory engine is one of the greatest importance to these kingdoms. Up to the present time no very confident judgment could be pronounced upon the subject, as it had not yet emerged from the experimental stage; but now the course is clear, and it only remains to promulgate as widely as possible the conclusions which have been arrived at.

Diamond drills for perforating hard stones have for some years been in satisfactory operation, as also diamond cutters for toothing millstones. We now hear of a diamond saw for cutting stone, which is formed like a common saw; but the teeth are made of diamond points set in cutter blocks, the points constituting the teeth of the saw, while the blade acts merely as a guide. The diamond saw, it is said, will cut as much stone in half an hour as any other kind of saw will out in a day.

The antiseptic treatment of wounds is a method which is being regarded with increasing favour. The use of powdered charcoal as a dressing has long been known; and latterly the employment of carbolic acid has been found to be productive of the most beneficial results. Now M. Magnis-Lalens, of Toulouse, uses charcoal mixed with 33 per cent of coal-tar. In some cases galvanism has been employed in conjunction with antiseptic dressings with great advantage.

We have on former occasions noticed Sir Joseph Whitworth's method of producing articles in wrought iron or steel by melting the metal by a neutral flame and running it into moulds, where it is subjected to a very high pressure in cooling, whereby porosity is prevented. The system until quite lately, however, can scarcely be said to have come into operation on a commercial scale, although pieces of the metal, of exceptional soundness and toughness, have been privately exhibited. Lately, however, at Woolwich a good deal of trouble was experienced in obtaining sound air-vessels for Whitehead's torpedo, and it was found necessary to forge them of solid masses of steel and then to bore them. This was a tedious and costly process, and Sir J. Whitworth at length consented to endeavour to produce them of his metal, which he has done with great success, and the articles so produced are found to be sounder than those produced by forging in the solid and then boring out. The air-vessels in question are about 18 in. in diameter at the one end, tapering to a point at the other end, and are about 10 ft. long and 1 in. thick.

The last part of the Quarterly Journal of Science contains an article by Mr. Crookes, entitled "Notes of an Enquiry into the Phenomena called Spiritual during the Years 1870-73." In this article Mr. Crookes repeats his former statements on this subject, with the addition of many other experimental results, which appear to him confirmatory of the soundness of his previous communications. Mr. Crookes says that he has found heavy bodies to be moved, sounds to be produced, sofas and chairs with persons upon them to be raised many inches from the floor, and phantom forms to appear, all under circumstances which precluded the possibility of trick or illusion. The results of his investigations Mr. Crookes will embody in a work he is about to publish, and it appears to us that everything which the most advanced spiritualist asserts Mr. Crookes will corroborate, except that he denies that the phenomena are produced by the agency of spirits at all, and he believes that they are the result of certain occult powers in the mediums not yet understood. Hooke, nearly 200 years ago, showed that gravity was merely the result of a certain species of motion in the particles of matter, which we may suppose that heat or electricity will, under certain circumstances, disturb, as when electrical repulsion is excited, or when, by the application of heat, bodies assume the spheroidal form. A drop of water on a hot plate will roll about without touching the surface, and by looking between the drop and the plate it will be seen that the drop is suspended. Other agents besides heat or electricity may produce an analogous effect with more energy, and the phenomena termed spiritual certainly deserve, in common with all other phenomena, careful and impartial investigation.

Mr. Pearson, the superintendent of the East Indian Railway, has introduced a method of cooling and ventilating the carriages of a train by placing a centrifugal fan in one of the carriages. The fan is driven by one of the wheels of the train, and the air is conducted in canvas pipes to any point.

The French Government are reported to be meditating the construction of a new harbour at Androcelles, between Calais and Boulogne. The coast at that point is denuded of sand. But it is doubtful whether the sand would not accumulate in any inclosed space of still water such as a harbour must be. The Standard of Dec. 25 contains a long article setting forth the advantages of a deep sea port at Dieppe, both as constituting a new port for Paris at the nearest point of the coast, with which, too, Paris is now connected by two railways, and as affording the means of improving the Channel communication between Newhaven and London. By a comparison of distances it is shown that the Dieppe route is shorter by more than fifty miles than the Calais route, and with Channel steamers like those at Holyhead the Dieppe route would be the shortest in time as well as in distance, even if Paris be the terminus, while for Lyons, Marseilles, Italy, and many other important points it will be shorter still.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 24, 1874.

We take our place in that numerous crowd of well-wishers who (in a figure at least) throw the old slipper after the carriage which bears the Royal bridegroom and the Imperial bride to Tsarskoe-Selo, there to spend the first few days of their honeymoon. We send after them our aspirations for their nuptial bliss. Our desire for them is—a desire which spontaneously rises up from the deep places of the heart—that the path of life upon which our sailor Prince and the sole daughter of the Emperor of Russia have started hand in hand may be pleasant to the end; rich with the fruits of a united and sympathising discharge of the duties of their station; always tending upward to higher and nobler enjoyment; teeming with delight to themselves and with blessings for others.

The marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh with the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrowna, diffuses equal satisfaction among the people of the United Kingdom and the people of Russia. That event, interesting for its own sake, is doubly interesting because it constitutes a centre in which two great nations meet each other with feelings entirely in unison. Politically speaking, the ultimate objects of England and those of Russia have, for a long time past, appeared to be those of keen rivalry. The difference between them in national temperament—and, to some extent, in national interests—although it has generally been compatible with political amity, has placed the two peoples at a considerable distance from each other. The thoughts of England have seldom been in harmony with the thoughts of Russia. There has been mutual respect, amounting on occasions to mutual admiration. There has been no insurmountable bar to their international intercourse. They have measured their strength one with another to little other purpose, perhaps, than that of ascertaining that the nature and description of the power wielded by the one differs altogether from that wielded by the other. There has been, it is true, a rather wide surface of the affairs of life over which Russia and England have felt themselves to be at one. There have also been great purposes respecting which the two nations have believed themselves to be antagonistic. Hence they have kept up towards each other the outward profession of friendliness, and have honestly striven to act towards one another in accordance with that profession. But hitherto it can hardly be contended that cordiality of feeling has characterised their general relations. Very possibly—we may even say probably—the distance which has separated the one people from the other may be ascribed to their want of intimate acquaintance one with another. It is, we may say, a new thing for both to mingle their affections in something that has an equal interest for both. We would not lay too heavy a stress upon it. The effect following it may be evanescent. But it is impossible to divine what may be the desirable consequences which may flow from it, and which may hereafter justify the feelings of enthusiasm with which it has been greeted.

Over and above the interest which we all take in the nuptial union of any loving pair, there has been, we believe, in both England and Russia, the most affectionate sympathy with the occupants respectively of the throne. We can only speak with confident knowledge of our own gracious Sovereign. That she enjoys the loyal trust and ardent affection of her subjects it is almost superfluous to affirm. That which is known to gratify her is sure to gratify her people. They take delight in sharing her feelings. They identify themselves with her as a mother and a widow, as well as in her queenly relationship to them. They are proud of her character and bearing as an English matron. They rejoice in the pure light she has thrown over family life. They enter into her joys and sorrows as a woman, and feel under deep obligations to her for the purity of her example. It is no matter of surprise, therefore, that they interest themselves in the domestic settlement of her sons and daughters, almost as much as if it directly concerned the wellbeing of their own. From myriads of hearts earnest prayers have gone up, and will go up, to the Supreme, for His blessing upon the marriage just celebrated. A similar statement, no doubt, will hold good with regard to the Russian people. They, too, hold in affection as well as in reverence the Imperial family. It is part of their tradition; it belongs to their religion; and it will certainly and expressively utter its emotions in connection with the solemnisation of those ties which have just been contracted.

The Royal and Imperial marriage will not, we imagine, give rise to much political speculation; least of all among the well-informed. It will divert neither England nor Russia from the prosecution of their respective "missions." Such influence as it may have upon the public affairs of either nation can be indirect only. In no respects, perhaps, will the consequences resulting from it resemble those which may be expected from an international treaty. We shall still have and pursue our exclusive interests in India, and Russia will still have and pursue its special objects in Central Asia. There will continue to be, as has been for a long time past, a rivalry of influence in the east of Europe. The Black Sea, the Mediterranean, Turkey, and Egypt will doubtless present, as before, claims upon each which are considered by statesmen as conflicting, and will turn up incidents over which they will differ in opinion. The grand ceremony which has just been celebrated at St. Petersburg will do little or nothing to turn the drift of matters of this nature. Nevertheless, it will not be without some kind of reflex influence for good. Great destinies are almost always materially affected by popular temper. A sincere repugnance to go to war with another is found by experience to be a powerful element in the maintenance of peace. We have seen the fact vividly illustrated in the recent conduct of our relations with the United States of America. Perhaps we may see it with Russia on some future occasion. At any rate, as far as this marriage shall exert any political influence at all, it will almost certainly be on the side of preserving unimpaired international amity. We may very reasonably, therefore, rejoice in it as fraught with good and not with evil to both countries.

The alliance is full of promise—we speak, of course, not of knowledge, but by common report. The young couple are said to be fairly adapted to one another, and the union, which has been one of ceremony, is generally understood to be one also of true affection. We have already uttered our heartiest good wishes. We close with the expression of our sanguine hope that our beloved Queen, the newly-married pair, their Royal and Imperial kinsfolk, and the two nations at whose head they are placed, may find in the union of the Duke of Edinburgh with the Grand Duchess Marie a solid and lasting cause for mutual congratulation.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, continues at Osborne House. The Bishop of Winchester arrived at Osborne on Saturday last and dined with her Majesty. On Sunday the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service, performed at Osborne by the Bishop of Winchester. The Bishop left the next day. On Tuesday a courier arrived at Osborne from St. Petersburg, bringing with him a portrait of her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia, painted by M. Gustave Richter, which was sent by the Empress of Russia as a present to the Queen. Colonel M'Neill, V.C., who was severely wounded in the engagement at Basman, on the Gold Coast, and returned to England on Jan. 3, arrived at Osborne and dined with her Majesty. Dr. Acland has also dined with the Queen. Her Majesty, with the members of the Royal family, has driven to West Cowes, Newport, and other parts of the island. The Queen will return to Windsor Castle during the second week in February, in order to receive the Duke of Edinburgh and his bride. The Lancaster Tower, situated on the west side of the principal gateway on the south front of the palace, facing the Long Walk, is being prepared for their Royal and Imperial Highnesses. The Queen has appointed James Bontein, Esq., to be one of the Grooms of the Privy Chamber in Ordinary to her Majesty, in the room of Arthur Johnstone Blackwood, Esq., deceased. The Countess of Caledon has succeeded Lady Churchill as Lady in Waiting on her Majesty. The Marchioness of Ely has returned to Osborne.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE.

The Prince of Wales, shortly after his arrival at the palace of the Czarevitch and Czarevna at St. Petersburg, on Thursday week, paid a formal visit to the Emperor and Empress of Russia at the Winter Palace. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with the other members of the English Royal family and the Grand Duchess Marie, were present at a dinner given in their honour by the Czarevitch and Czarevna at the Amitchkoff Palace. Afterwards their Royal Highnesses visited the French theatre. The following day the English Princes and the Princess of Wales received and paid numerous visits. In the evening the Imperial and Royal party went to the Great Opera. The Dean of Westminster, Lady Augusta Stanley, and Lady Emily Osborne, who is to be attached to the Grand Duchess after her marriage, arrived at St. Petersburg. On Saturday last Prince Arthur received Prince Gortschakoff in the Winter Palace. On Sunday Dean Stanley preached in the English church, the Royal personages being present. The sermon was upon "The Marriage in Cana of Galilee." At the request of the Grand Duchess Marie the Dean afterwards read to her his sermon. The Royal visitors were present at the annual ceremony of blessing the Neva. In the evening the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Arthur were present at the Court Theatre. On Monday their Royal Highnesses dined with the Emperor and Empress at the Winter Palace. Viscount Sydney, who represented the Queen at the marriage, arrived at St. Petersburg. On Tuesday the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Arthur were present at the funeral of Field Marshal Count Berg, the Governor of Poland. The Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany arrived, and were received by the Czar and the Imperial family and the English Princes. The Prince of Denmark and the Duke of Coburg also arrived. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Arthur went to the English Club, at the invitation of the committee, and supped there. On Wednesday the Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Arthur received the Corps Diplomatique at the Palace of Amitchkoff. A Te Deum was celebrated in all the churches of the capital, the bells of which were rung throughout the day and on the two following days.

The marriage was solemnised yesterday (Friday). The following were the regulations officially announced to be observed:—

"The august bride will wear a crown, and will be arrayed in a cloak of crimson velvet lined with ermine, the train of which will be supported by four Chamberlains and borne by the Equerry of the Court of her Imperial Highness.

"Her Imperial Highness and his Royal Highness having received lighted tapers and each knelt before the altar, the marriage will be solemnised according to the rite of the Greek Church.

"The Metropolitan, assisted by the members of the Holy Synod, will thereupon commence the prayers and thanksgivings, and at the close of the 'Te Deum' a salute of eleven guns will be fired from the ramparts of the fortress of St. Petersburg. Towards the close of the prayer the members of the Corps Diplomatique, the Council of the Empire, the Senators, General Aides-de-Camp, and the Major-Generals of the suite, and the Aides-de-Camp of his Majesty the Emperor, will pass into the Alexander Hall, and will there take their places in the order indicated by the Master of the Ceremonies. On issuing from the church, their Imperial Majesties and the august married pair will receive the felicitations of the members of the Holy Synod and of the Clergy of the Court; and their Majesties, with the rest of the Imperial family, will return with the same cortège, and in the same order as on their arrival, to the Alexander Hall, where there will have been prepared an Anglican altar. Then, when the Emperor shall have conducted the august newly-married pair towards this altar, the marriage ceremony will be renewed in accordance with the English rite, which will be celebrated by the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster. That being terminated, the august persons will receive the congratulations of the Dean of Westminster, and will then repair to their apartments in the interior of the palace.

"On the same day, at half-past four o'clock, a banquet will be given in the Nicolas Hall; and in the evening, at half-past eight o'clock, there will be a ball in the Hall of St. George."

In accordance with a custom observed on the wedding of each member of the Royal family, a cairn has been built at Balmoral to commemorate the event. The cairn, which will be known as that of the Duke of Edinburgh's, has been constructed on Raep, a small wooded hill in the forest of Glengelder, situated in front of the castle. The cairn is 15 ft. through the base, and 22 ft. high. On the evening of the marriage a huge bonfire was lighted on the top of Craiggewan Hill, and a supper, followed by a ball, was given in the Iron Ball-room at Balmoral.

Instructions have been issued by the Admiralty for the celebration of the marriage at the various ports. In the morning every ship-of-war is to be dressed from stem to stern. At one o'clock a Royal salute is to be fired, and the English and Russian colours hoisted together. At night another Royal salute will be fired and blue lights burned.

The Act of Parliament passed in August last came into force on the day of the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh. His Royal Highness has, by the 29 Vic., cap. 8, £15,000 a year, and by the statute of the late Session an additional annuity of £10,000—making £25,000 a year. By the last Act the Grand Duchess will have an annuity of £6000 in the event of surviving his Royal Highness. The allowance of the additional £10,000 dates from the marriage, and on the next quarter-day the proportionate amount is to be paid free from all taxes, assessments, and charges.

THE TICHBORNE TRIAL.

The trial for perjury of the person who has claimed the name, title, and estates of Sir Roger Charles Doughty Tichborne is at length drawing near its end; yesterday was the 165th day, and Mr. Hawkins, Q.C. was still at his reply, on behalf of the prosecution, having begun on Thursday week. He first reviewed the known events of the true Roger Tichborne's early life, and the circumstances of his departure from England and subsequent disappearance. He next commented on the situation and behaviour of the defendant, living under the name of Thomas Castro at Wagga Wagga, in Australia, at the time, in July, 1865, when Lady Tichborne advertised for the lost Roger Tichborne. The communications he then had with Mr. Gibbs, the attorney, his fraudulent will pretending to deal with the Tichborne property, and all the steps which were afterwards taken to set up this claim, were narrowly examined by Mr. Hawkins, who exposed the numerous blunders, omissions, and marks of ignorance in the defendant's sayings, writings, and doings, to prove that he could not really be the Hampshire Baronet's son and heir. The learned counsel pointed out that there were four persons—Guilfoyle, the gardener, Bogle, the valet, and Bogle's two sons, Andrew and John—from whom the defendant might probably have learnt such particulars of the Tichborne family and of Roger Tichborne's life as he was enabled at length to relate. Some details of genealogy and heraldry might have been got from the Illustrated London News. Mr. Hawkins proceeded to argue from a long chain of proofs that the defendant was Arthur Orton, the butcher's son, of Wapping. The evidence of the Wapping witnesses called by the defendant was severely criticised, and much stress was laid on the non-appearance of Orton's sisters, who ought to have declared that the defendant was not their brother. The defendant was called upon, if he were not himself Arthur Orton, to show what had become of that person, whom he said he knew, and to prove where he was now living, or else that he was dead. Mr. Hawkins censured the conduct of several of the defendant's partisans, male and female, and finally demanded his conviction for the crime of which he is accused.

The rabble of some hundreds of idle people, daily congregated in Palace-yard and Westminster Hall, to watch the arrival and departure of the persons engaged in this trial, have been rather troublesome during Mr. Hawkins's speech. On the afternoons of Thursday and Friday last week they pursued that gentleman across St. Margaret's churchyard, yelling, hooting, and hissing, with threats of actual violence. Four young men—of whom one was a lithographic printer, and one was a hawker of photographs, making their trade of likenesses of the defendant and the counsel in this case—have been taken into custody for this breach of the peace. They were brought up again at the Westminster Police Court on Thursday, when they were ordered to find sureties for their keeping the peace for three months.

The convict Jean Luit, alias Lundgren, alias Smith, one of the witnesses called by Mr. Kenealy for the defendant, with reference to Roger Tichborne's alleged voyage to Australia in the Osprey, after the wreck of the Bella from South America, is charged with perjury and bigamy. On Thursday, at the Bow-street Police Court, he was again brought up, but was remanded to this day (Saturday).

A letter signed by Mr. G. H. Whalley, M.P. for Peterborough, who has taken an active part in supporting the defendant's claim to the Tichborne inheritance, has appeared this week in the Daily News, by which the hon. gentleman and the publisher of that journal seem to have rendered themselves guilty of a contempt of court. The Lord Chief Justice took notice of this at the sitting of the Court on Wednesday, and gave order, with the assent of Mr. Justice Mellor and Mr. Justice Lush, that Mr. Whalley should attend on Friday to answer for what he had done.

The Engraving on our front page represents Mr. Hawkins, Q.C., in the attitude of speaking, as he has appeared in court during the progress of the Tichborne perjury case.

THE YARKUND MISSION.

We have repeatedly noticed the journey of Mr. Douglas Forsyth and his party from India across the Himalayas and Karakorum mountains, beyond the highland valley of Ladak, to Yarkund and Kashgar, on a political mission to the Atalik (Ghazeh, the ruler of those countries of Upper Turkestan. At the last meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on Monday week, two letters were read from the gentlemen of this expedition, and a large map was exhibited, showing the topography of the mountain region which they traversed in October, including some of the loftiest passes and largest glaciers upon earth. We are indebted to Captain E. F. Chapman, several of whose sketches have appeared in our Journal, for three more illustrations engraved for this week's publication. One is a view of the fort of Shahid-ulla-Khoja, or Shadulla, on the Karakash river, in latitude 36 deg. 20 min. N., longitude 78 deg. E., at an elevation of 12,000 ft. above the sea level. The British Envoy and his party reached this place on Oct. 17, and remained there until the 23rd, awaiting the arrival of Syad Yakoub Khan, the late Envoy of the Atalik (Ghazeh) to Constantinople, then on his journey homeward to Yarkund.

Shahid-ulla-Khoja is the frontier outpost of Upper or Eastern Turkestan on its southern side. It was originally built by the Maharajah of Cashmere, at the suggestion of the British Government, for the protection of traders when the Chinese ruled in Yarkund and Kashgar; but it came into possession of the Atalik Ghazeh when he became master of these countries in 1866. The place is named from a martyr of the Moslem faith, who was slain here fighting against the heathen Chinese. A small ziarat, or shrine, dedicated to the saintly memory of this Shahid-ulla, is found upon the rock which appears to the left hand in our Engraving. The readers of Mr. Shaw's "High Tartary and Yarkund" may recollect that he was detained three weeks in this place before he could get leave to proceed; and Mr. Hayward arrived here before Mr. Shaw's departure, but they were unable to meet for fear of exciting the jealousy and suspicion of the Yarkundees, who at that time regarded all Europeans with extreme distrust.

In the foreground of Captain Chapman's view of Shahid-ulla-Khoja we observe the "akoe," or Kirghiz tent, which was pitched for the accommodation of the English travellers by the chief of a wandering tribe in the neighbourhood. It was used by the Englishmen as a smoking-divan, since they had their own tents for ordinary habitation. "A peep into our akoe," with the attendants spreading the "dastarkhwan" for a comfortable repast, is the subject of one illustration; but this scene belongs to a later stage, after they had entered the Yarkund territory, when Mirza Yakoub Beg Umsah, as the Daikwah's representative, entertained our countrymen with liberal hospitality. At Shahid-ulla-Khoja, the temperature being sometimes as low as 4 deg. Fahr., with a piercing cold wind, the shelter of the Kirghiz akoe was highly appreciated. The tents and heavy baggage were sent forward on Oct. 21, and it was on the 24th that Mr. Forsyth and the Yarkund Envoy, returning from Constantinople, proceeded on their journey together. The following description of their road will explain Captain Chapman's sketch of the train of baggage mules on the Grim Pass:—

"Our route lay for some miles down the valley of the Karakash, here flowing between lofty mountains of gneiss streaked with veins of quartzite, large blocks of which mineral were strewn upon the track we pursued. Our first march took us past 'Kurgan,' a small stone inclosure at the base of a gigantic rock, dignified in Toorkce as a 'fort.' The cold in the valley of the Karakash, even at this season, is intense, and, as the river was running in a semi-frozen state over its boulder bed, fording was no pleasant task; yet all were in high spirits at the thought of dangers overcome, and the misery of a ducking was made light of by those who were not themselves sufferers. On the 25th we found the river bending eastward away from our road, and, turning up a narrow ravine, we made our way along its course towards the Sanjoo or 'grim' pass, the last obstacle on the road to Yarkund. Here we were once again in the region of schists and shales, being shut in by precipices that terminated in knife-like ridges far above our heads, allowing but one short hour of mid-day sunshine, and justifying in their wildness the term 'grim' applied to this region by I know not what sententious geographer. A scanty ration and a short supply of fuel, due to some untoward accident, have, perhaps, impressed upon my mind the discomforts of a halt in the depths of this gully, when hungry baggage animals in search of scanty herbage disturbed repose, and falling rocks suggested subjects for one's dreams.

"The passage of goods and baggage across the pass is from this point conducted by the Kirghiz tribes resident in the neighbourhood the yak (kutas) being the only animal that can carry loads with safety up the steep ascent leading to it. To control these wild people is beyond the power even of a ruler as despotic as the Atalik Ghazeh; and, in spite of the best intentions on the part of our hosts, we found considerable difficulty in making a move the following morning. Imagine us, however, en route on the 26th, the Envoy and ourselves all mounted on yaks, and still threading the windings of the inhospitable gully described. At about three miles from the pass itself, which is 16,600 ft. high, a side passage through a narrow choke of rock and ice led to a more extended view, from which the whole ascent could be seen, leading by a long zigzag over snow to a small opening in a lofty ridge 3000 ft. above us. Our unladen mules, one hundred in number, and the officers of our small cavalry detachment had made an early start of it, and as we passed this narrow defile were toiling up the zigzag. Suddenly the whole string of animals, as they neared the top, received a check, and we, who had not yet reached the snow and ice, could assign no cause for so inopportune a halt. It took us two hours to gain the point where our line of march had been jammed, and then we discovered an opposing stream of struggling animals, which had met the head of our column in the very gorge. A 'kafila' from Yarkund was pushing up the reverse of the ladder, and only by a very slow and painful process could the consequent entanglement be remedied. The passage of our advanced party three days previous, and of other caravans, had caused difficulties we in no wise anticipated. The whole line of route, which to them had been comparatively easy, owing to fresh-fallen snow, was now an ice-path, ending, as it were, in a frozen stair of about 40 ft. or 50 ft. at the summit; and the opposite descent, for some 2500 ft., consisted of a series of slides, from each of which it needed but an overbalance to tumble each suffering quadruped down a frozen slip to the valley below. In real difficulty the Kirghiz proved admirable workers; a small number of them formed a line along the stair of ice which each horse or mule must needs ascend, felts were spread over the most slippery part, and, one by one, after our arrival, the distressed animals were pulled or pushed, till, struggling, they attempted the passage. Animal suffering is at all times painful to witness, and during the hours spent in superintending the crossing of our 110 beasts the trials of each particular one seemed to become separately impressed upon our minds, whether it was the dun horse that three times reached the turning point and then, lacking heart, fell headlong back, was once again brought up, and was finally literally dragged over; or whether it was the gallant bay mare that picked her way so cleanly and bravely, rivaling a goat in her cleverness, till, with many a cheering word, unaided, she cleared the worst and stood at the top in safety! Strange to say, we passed our ten horses over, but, of one hundred mules, five were killed on the spot and three died from after-effects. One unfortunate mule fell from below our feet headlong to one of the lower windings of the zigzag, and, with neck still unbroken, struggled up the steep ascent, only to fall once more and leave his carcass below the pass.

"But I have said enough to show what difficulties the Sanjoo Pass, usually considered easy of passage, may at certain seasons present. As may be imagined, the descent was scarcely less difficult than the ascent, and it was long before our baggage yaks, which formed the rear of the column, could get past. We halted on the 27th to pick up the pieces some seven miles on this side, congratulating ourselves that our last mountain pass, with all its toil and loss, was overcome. We reached Sanjoo yesterday (Oct. 30), and are well pleased to find ourselves in a land of comparative plenty. To do us honour we have had, in addition to the Envoy—whose position in the country may be looked upon as being next almost to that of the Atalik—the Hakim of Gooma and the Beg of Sanjoo in our train. Our daily wants are supplied with a liberal hand; in fact, according to Yarkund custom, our welcome is of the warmest."

THE FAMINE IN BENGAL.

Telegrams of this week from Calcutta announce that the Government of India and the provincial Government of Bengal have resolved now to commence operations for systematic relief. The officials have been authorised to organise committees, and the Government is to double all private subscriptions. Sir George Campbell has recommended Mr. Scholch, of the Revenue Board, as president-general of the Calcutta committee, to visit the distressed districts. A remission of half a year's land tax is promised to the zemindars who exert themselves to relieve the famine. The Government rice is blocking the private trade on the railway, and Sir George Campbell has ordered the officials to use their discretion. The water route failing, a system of cart-trains has been organised. Colonel Mackenzie, the commissariat, and six military officers are helping the relief operations. Lord Northbrook will not go to Simla, as usual, during the hot season. With regard to particular districts, we learn that in Behar distress is imminent, and in portions of Chumparun, half Sarun, North Tirhoot, and the adjoining portions of Bhagulpore, Monghyr, East Gya, East Purnea, North Malda and half Dinapore. Labourers and emigrant coolies crowd the works in the North Patna division. They are paid task rates till the distress becomes more severe. Numerous advances are being made to planters for wells and improvements. In Burdwan, Chota, Nagpore, and Behar prices are higher than in 1866.

The prevention of such great disasters as this, which threatens to inflict extreme misery on 24,000,000 people, can only be secured by great public works of irrigation, and improved means of conveyance from one district to another. With regard to the benefits of irrigation in India a striking instance was lately seen in the visit of the Viceroy to the Soane Works at Duhree. He there found 100,000 acres irrigated in a few weeks by the new works in their present unfinished state, not a quarter of the project being yet completed, and no doubt much more will yet be watered in time to help in this famine. The estimated value of the crop thus raised is £450,000, 100,000 acres at £4 10s. an acre; the works having as yet cost about £500,000, including the great weir, two miles and a half long, in one unbroken line of masonry, with the head sluices and locks. All this has been almost completely paid for by one dry weather crop on one one-twenty-fifth part of the whole area to be irrigated from these headworks. Considering it as a mere matter of money, without reference to the saving of life, the works cost in all £4,000,000, and water 2,500,000 acres. The expense per acre will be £1 12s., and the value of a single crop of rice at the present price of 1d. a pound, £5—three times the whole cost. This includes a canal for navigation, seventy yards broad at the head (which is already opened for some eighty miles) and 8 ft. deep, fitted for steamers of 250 tons.

The two illustrations we have engraved show different modes of applying water to the fields, as practised from time immemorial by the poor husbandmen of India, and likewise by those of China. In the one case a pan suspended by two pairs of cords or thongs is held with both hands by a couple of men on the river's bank, while they now dip it in the stream to fill it with water, now swing it in a sidelong direction to empty its contents into a reservoir of higher level, from which it may pass by conduits across the neighbouring field, and help to fertilise the soil. Another illustration shows the apparatus of pulleys for raising water from a well by the aid of a yoke of bullocks. The Persian wheel, furnished with a series of buckets around its circumference, one half of which is immersed in the tank or canal, so that each bucket on the ascending side of the wheel comes up full of water and discharges itself into an elevated gutter or channel, has long been a familiar invention to us. Some of the Chinese hydraulic machines for agricultural purposes are still more ingenious.

The Edinburgh School Board, at their meeting on Wednesday, resolved to adopt the system of mixed classes of boys and girls in the schools under their charge.

A meeting in favour of Hospital Sunday was held in Dublin yesterday week. A letter was read from Cardinal Cullen disapproving of the project.

The Trades Union Congress at Sheffield held its last sitting on Saturday, when, amongst the subjects discussed, were the direct representation of labour in Parliament, the federation of trades unions, co-operative and industrial partnerships, overtime and piecework, the limitation of apprenticeships, convict labour, technical education, and international arbitration. Next year's congress is to be held at Liverpool.

The Marquis of Ripon, as Worshipful Grand Master of England and Right Worshipful Grand Master of West Yorkshire, presided, on Wednesday, at a large muster of Freemasons from all parts of the West Riding, held at Leeds. His Lordship alluded to the spread of lodges in the West Riding, and spoke on the duties and privileges of Freemasonry. About 150 brethren subsequently attended a banquet at the Great Northern Station Hotel—the Marquis presiding.

The National Tenant Right Conference held at Belfast was concluded on Wednesday. Mr. James Sharman Crauford, J.P., presided, and there was a large attendance. Resolutions were adopted acknowledging the progressive statesmanship displayed in the Irish Land Act, and the consequent advantages to the tenantry of Ireland, but renewing a declaration against its inadequacy for the suppression of evils which have retarded agricultural prosperity.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Jan. 22.

The French Minister for Foreign Affairs, Duc Decazes, has thought fit to enlighten Europe with regard to the pacific intentions of Marshal MacMahon's Government. It is difficult to conceive how France could possibly have assumed a warlike attitude at the present juncture; but still, the past week has been fraught with rumours of serious diplomatic complications, and the violently hostile tone of the German and Italian press has occasioned a considerable fall of the rente at the Bourse. The Minister's declarations, however, have completely restored public confidence here. Dealing more especially with the Italian side of the question, brought before the Assembly on Tuesday by General du Temple, an ultra-Legitimist, the Duke formally stated that the friendly relations existing between France and Italy had never been troubled in the slightest degree, and that the numerous reports which had been circulated on the subject were entirely false. "The Government is desirous," he said, "of watching over the person of the Holy Father with pious respect and filial solicitude, so far as his spiritual authority and dignity are concerned, but it is also desirous of living in friendly relations with the Italian Government." With regard to other countries, the Minister observed that the policy of the Cabinet was essentially pacific. "We wish for peace," he exclaimed, "for we feel that it is necessary to assure the grandeur and the prosperity of France." These declarations were received with loud applause by the Assembly; and, General du Temple insisting upon speaking, the order of the day was put to the vote and carried by a large majority.

The Ministerial statements have removed a great weight from the public mind. A few days ago M. Ed. Scherer, a Republican deputy and a writer in the Temps, having addressed a telegram with reference to the Orénouque frigate, stationed at Civita Vecchia, to the Daily News, the despatch was communicated to the Duc de Broglie, and retained by him, under the pretence that its publication was likely to occasion a diplomatic complication with Italy. M. Scherer, having protested against this arbitrary measure, received a letter from the Duc de Broglie, in which the latter accused him of pointing out to Italy a causa belli against France. M. Scherer, in a circular forwarded to the Paris papers, declares, however, that, far from pointing out any causa belli to Italy, his intention was to warn the French Government of the danger that existed in allowing the Orénouque to remain stationed at Civita Vecchia.

While M. Scherer (in the Duc de Broglie's estimation) was doing his utmost to bring about a war with Italy, M. Louis Veillot, the eminent editor of the Univers, was busily engaged in provoking Germany. Count d'Arnim having called Duc Decazes' attention to the Bishop of Périgueux's pastoral charge, and to certain leading articles which recently appeared in L'Univers, the Governor of Paris has suspended that journal for two months; while the Bishop of Périgueux is about to be summoned before the Council of State for disobedience to the instructions contained in M. de Fourton's recent circular.

The obnoxious municipal bill has eventually become law. It was voted by a majority of forty-three votes at Tuesday's sitting of the Assembly after more than a week's debate, during which numerous divisions were taken on the different clauses and various amendments brought forward by Republican deputies. The innumerable attempts of the Left to throw the bill out were, however, frustrated; and, although the Government only succeeded in mustering a majority of four against M. Ducarre's proposition compelling them to select the mayors from the municipal councils, they have eventually gained the day. Armed with this aggressive and arbitrary law, the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues will now be able to organise in real earnest the much-vaunted "Gouvernement de combat."

The proceedings yesterday (Wednesday), when M. Ricard, of the Left Centre, interpellated the Government with regard to the suppression of the Journal de Lyon, were rather disorderly, and some violent personalities were exchanged, which are likely, it is said, to result in a hostile meeting between a Bonapartist and Radical deputy.

Mr. Washburne, the American Minister at Paris, presented on Tuesday to M. Thiers a gold medal struck in his honour by the French citizens resident in Philadelphia.

The daughter of Count von Arnim, the German Ambassador to France, died here on Saturday last, at the age of seventeen.

A prominent journalist, whose name has been long associated with Parisian comic literature, M. Eugène Philpoin, proprietor and editor of the Journal Amusant and the Petit Journal pour Rire, died rather suddenly in Paris on Saturday last, at the age of forty-one.

SPAIN.

Senor Castelar has received a vote of confidence from the deputies who formed the majority in the late Cortes, and they have entrusted him with the drawing up of a manifesto.

Santander, being threatened by Carlists, has received numerous reinforcements, upon whose approach the threatening body retired. Assisted by the troops relieved from service in front of Carthage, General Lopez Dominguez has commenced operations in the province of Valencia. The Carlist leader Llorente has taken Nagera, in the district of Rioja, capturing 500 rifles, fifty horses, and eighty head of cattle. A fresh outrage on humanity is charged against the Carlists. In the neighbourhood of Gerona twenty-seven volunteers shut themselves up in a tower, and, on refusing to surrender, they were burnt out. It is stated that all but two perished in the flames, and that these two were shot. The abortive rising in Barcelona has been suppressed. Those who died in defence of law and order have been honoured with a public funeral.

The federal ship Numancia was given up by the French authorities at Oran to the Spanish Admiral on Saturday. The convicts are to be given up to Spain, the other refugees being restored to liberty.

The Pope held a Consistory yesterday week, at which he performed the ceremony of "opening the mouths" of the new Cardinals in accordance with the ancient rites of the Church, the custom being that a new Cardinal should not speak between the first and second conclaves. His Holiness at the same time appointed seventeen foreign Bishops.

account mentions that a detachment of Acheenese took the Dutch in the rear and surprised them, but they were repulsed.

GERMANY.

Yesterday week the Emperor William gave a dinner at Berlin in honour of Viscount Sydney, the foreign Ambassadors being present.

By a decree dated Tuesday, the Emperor William has convoked the German Parliament for Feb. 5.

Amid great uproar in the Lower House of the Prussian Diet, Herr von Malinckrodt, yesterday week, reproduced a scandal by which Prince Bismarck is accused of having entertained proposals for a cession of territory on the left bank of the Rhine. Entering the House soon afterwards, Prince Bismarck, in very forcible language, characterised the statement as an audacious falsehood. Subsequently, the accuser withdrew his assertion, explaining that he had found it in a book by the Italian Minister, President-General La Marmora, to whom he assigned Prince Bismarck's imputation of falsehood. Prince Bismarck rejoined to the effect that this assignment was badly chosen, for La Marmora was neither President nor General.

The only daughter of Field-Marshal Manteuffel was yesterday week married, at Berlin, to Major-General von Wedell.

Augustus Henry Hoffmann von Fallersleben, the well-known philologist and poet, is dead.

Moreover, by means of various savings and reforms of the taxation, the yearly increase of the revenue is calculated at 12,500,000 fl.

We do not aim at military renown, but consider that the best lot that God could ordain for us is to lead Russia to glory in the paths of peace, and to increase and ensure her internal prosperity in every manner."

In the midst of the marriage preparations and Court festivities at St. Petersburg (some account of which will be found in another column) Field-Marshal Count Berg, the Governor of Poland, has passed away; and his funeral, on Tuesday, brought out all that grandeur of full military pomp for which Russia is famed above all nations. In memory of three of the missionary Bishops of the English Church, stained-glass windows have recently been executed by Messrs. Cox and Sons, of Southampton-street, Strand; one to the memory of Bishop Gray, Metropolitan of South Africa, placed in his son's church, St. Michael's and All Angels', North Kensington; and another as a memorial of Bishops Hatchard and Huxtable, sent out for the cathedral church of their diocese at Port Louis, Mauritius.

Mr. Justice Blackburn has refused a rule calling on the Bishop of Durham to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue directing him to license the Rev. G. Peake as Curate to Dr. Dykes, the Vicar of St. Oswald's, Durham. The Bishop had withheld his license in consequence of the refusal of Mr. Peake to sign an anti-Ritualistic declaration. His Lordship thought that the Court had no authority over a Bishop in such matters.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

The sketches of our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, engraved for this Number, represent the native market at Cape Coast Castle, and the carriage of water to supply the town, besides an illustration of the manner of shipping bullocks at Sierra Leone.

The market is a scene of great bustle, full of dark-skinned figures whose bright-coloured shawls and other attire, mostly of calico, are the more conspicuous by contrast. They chatter and chaffer, scold and quarrel, often bawling loudly to beat each other down. The women are of course the most busy, though not a few of them are loaded with their babies, slung in the fold of a shawl at the lower part of the back; when the little one must be suckled, the mother draws its head forward, under her arm, so that it lies round her side, and its mouth is applied to her breast. The articles of food usually offered for sale at Cape Coast Castle are Guinea grain, maize, bananas, plantains, cassia root, melons, and gourds, hot pepper, and half-dried fish, with the fins of the shark, and some cheap kinds of flesh-meat, amongst which the flesh of the monkey is used; there is also tiger-milk, a thick creamy yellow liquid, boiled from the starchy root of an esculent plant. The packets of grain are made up in wrappings of leaves, containing about 2 lb., and are sold for three halfpence. Among the figures in our market scene are those of a Krooby sailor, from Cape Palmas, who is recognised by the peculiar mark on his nose; and a Fantee policeman, in the right-hand corner, wearing cotton knickerbockers and a small cap, with his constabulary truncheon in his hand. The boy lurking behind is trying to mimic this policeman's attitude of official dignity.

The water supply of Cape Coast Castle is derived from Mr. Crease's apparatus for distilling fresh water from that of the salt ponds, a mile from the town. This apparatus is capable, by working night and day, of producing the daily quantity of 1500 gallons, but not more than 500 gallons is at present needed for the European residents, garrison, and troops. The water is very pure and clear, but it is usual for the consumer to filter it again before drinking any of it. After being distilled it is run into a series of casks or barrels placed outside the engine-house. There are eleven of these barrels, each holding ninety gallons, and they are so arranged that the water flows from one into the others, filling them all at once. A pump is attached to the last, by which the water is transferred to the casks of the water-carts shown in our illustration. When the water-carts have received their freight of water they are hooked together in a train, and pushed over the hilly road into Cape Coast Castle. The locality represented in our Artist's sketch is a little way behind the town. On the right hand is the signal station and lighthouse; Fort William is to the left. The official distribution of water at the Castle is conducted like that of military rations, with a regular allowance of so much for each person on the list.

The sketch from Sierra Leone was made during the stay of the mail-steamer Volta at that port, on the voyage to Cape Coast Castle, which was described several weeks ago. A number of cattle were purchased and put on board the steamer at Sierra Leone. They were fat and in good condition, but the mode of hoisting the bullocks on deck appears strange and cruel. It is performed by fixing a leather strap about the horns of the beast and attaching it to the tackle of the steam-winch. By this means, after some distressing jerks and tugs, the poor animal is lifted up bodily, and raised over the ship's side. Its agony of fright and pain seems to be great fun in the eyes of the negro helpers or loungers, who take it easily, and wear as little clothing as possible, even on board "him white man big canoe." These black fellows have assumed the oddest names, such as "Tom Pepper," "Bottle o' Beer," "Poor Feller," "Never Sweat," "Hungry Belly," "Raw Bones," and others invented by the sailors for them, but sometimes unfit for ears polite.

The scene "in the enemy's country," which forms the subject of a large Engraving presented for our Extra Supplement this week, is merely designed to give an idea of the interior of Western Africa. Travellers assure us that the imagination cannot easily form any sufficient representation of the tropical luxuriance of growth and life in this region at a certain distance from the sea-coast. Between the Assinee and Volta rivers the country is a mass of forest, the trees of which are on an immense scale, varying, however, on the coast and inland. Thus, near the coast are to be found the baobab, the cactus, the mangrove, various specimens of palms, the cotton, and other large trees, all mixed with a wild entanglement of thorny bush, itself growing to an inconceivable size. When the summit of the first mountains is reached, about fifteen miles inland, the baobab disappears, and is replaced by another tree of equal magnitude. So, too, does the mangrove; the palms become scarce, but other trees are found in their stead, including a new kind of aloe and citron. In the north there are trees and shrubs only in patches, and the country is covered with jungle and guinea grass of an enormous height and thickness, which is fired and used to manure the plantations. The sugar-cane grows wild, and there are also tobacco, maize, and hourra, millet, yams, rice, potatoes, and every kind of tropical plant in abundance, of gums and aromatic spices, of dyes and hard woods. The animals are numerous and various. There are deer, antelopes, civet cats, monkeys, porcupines, and goats, as well as leopards, jackals, wolves, wild boars, and wild cats. The rivers swarm with alligators; but the animals seemingly peculiar to Ashantee are a gigantic rat, an odoriferous mouse, and the armpo or man-eater, which digs up and devours dead bodies. Reptiles are numerous, including serpents, toads and frogs (some of an immense size), and lizards. Of birds there are pheasants, partridges, and wild ducks (of a very beautiful plumage), doves, crown birds, parrots, paroquets, guinea-sparrows, and beccaficoes. The waterfowl are herons, bitterns, and sea-mews. Birds of prey include eagles, kites, and one, not larger than a dove, but bolder and more rapacious than any other bird. Those peculiar to the country are the pookoe, useful in destroying field rats, and a bird about twice the size of a sparrow, with a shrill, hollow note, the sound of which is held to be of ill-omen. All the Ashantee birds are remarkable for their plumage; but none have pleasing voices, the only songsters being the nightingale and the thrush. The woods are full of bees, and a species of ant called termites, so numerous and rapacious that a sheep, attacked by them in the night, has been found a skeleton in the morning. Fireflies, dragon-flies, a fly like the cantharides in appearance and scent, scorpions, centipedes, and many noxious insects abound in the marshy districts. The Ashantee beetle is three inches long and an ounce in weight. Among the people of Ashantee a superstitious reverence is paid to the larger and fiercer kinds of wild beasts. The lion and tiger they have not seen, but the panther or leopard is held in sacred awe.

We take the present opportunity to notice a very useful and amusing little book, "Life on the Gold Coast," by Dr. C. A. Gordon, C.B., Deputy Surgeon-General, published by Messrs. Baillière, Tindall, and Co., of King William-street, Strand. It contains the briefest minute and exact descriptions of Cape Coast Castle, the English fort, the native town, the habits of the people, the climate, scenery, plants, and animals of the Gold Coast, its different nations and tribes, including the Ashantees; and the best way to preserve one's health, and to live there in tolerable comfort and safety.

The news of General Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition is to the 3rd inst. He was then on the banks of the river Prah, eighty miles inland from Cape Coast Castle. The Rifle Brigade landed on New-Year's Day and marched at once towards the Prah, which it would reach in eight days; the 42nd Highlanders were to march on the 3rd, and the 23rd Welch Fusiliers would follow on the 6th. The whole force was to cross the Prah and enter the Ashantee territory on the 15th. We are further told that Captain Glover, having found himself unable to act upon the banks of the river Volta, is ordered to lead 1000 Houssas to join Sir Garnet Wolseley, crossing the Prah, on the 15th, at a point thirty miles east of Prah-su, where the General's main force will cross by the bridge already erected. Admiralty despatches from Commodore Hewett and Captain Bradshaw, of H.M.S. Encounter, relate the destruction of Chamah, at the mouth of the Prah, by the Commenda people, with some assistance from our ships' boats, on the day before Christmas Day.

BY THE WAY.

Sir Garnet Wolseley is probably, as we write, in-iting a despatch that will be most gratifying to readers at home. We trust that he is describing a brilliant success. But, whether he has yet gained it or not, the gallant leader of our force in Africa has gone to work in the right way to win. His last order of the day is one of those papers that are issued only by men who know what they are about. Its details and general advice to his men will be read with great interest, but we call attention to his inspiring battle-words:—"Providence has implanted in the heart of every native of Africa a superstitious awe and dread of the white man, and this prevents the negro from daring to meet him face to face in combat. A steady advance or charge means the defeat of the enemy. Soldiers and sailors! remember that the black man holds you in superstitious awe. Be cool. Fire low. Fire slow. And charge home!" There is not much of "de man and de brudder" about this; but Sir Garnet has been seeing too much of men and brethren lately to be inclined to cosmopolitanism. We do not know what certain theological sentimentalists will say about the superstition that has been implanted by Providence; but if Sir Garnet Wolseley is in Oboomassie, it does not much matter what anybody says. Another successful leader's preparations were criticised by sundry, but he persevered:—

At which, when wise men sneered, in phrases witty,
He made no answer—but he took the city.

A telegram from America announces the demise, or demises, of that extraordinary lusus naturæ the "Siamese Twins." We suppose that we may assume the news to be authentic. It is said that one of them survived the other about two hours. The fact, if it be one, suggests a variety of considerations; but we may as well wait for details. We do not suppose that the scientific men of America are likely to forego an opportunity of having, perhaps, the most interesting autopsy which has ever been possible, and we hope that it will not fall into unskilful hands. The Twins have been so long before the world that persons who, like ourselves, visited them on their first appearance in London scarcely care to count the years since the mild, pleasant-looking lads, each with an arm over the other's shoulder, laughed at the crowds that flocked to—we believe—the Egyptian Hall. But such persons will remember that the opinions of eminent surgeons were taken as to the feasibility of severing the band that united the youths, and of thus delivering each from utter dependence upon the fate of the other. We do not know whether, had the verdict of science been in favour of the operation, it would have been performed, as the twins were in the hands of a showman who might not have desired that his gains should cease, even for the sake of delivering two human beings from their strange thralldom. But the men of science decided that the separation would in all probability be fatal to both. This must be the best part of half a century ago, and the singular beings have lived on until they attained the age of sixty-three. When they are entirely forgotten, except by medical men, their names will be preserved in literature; for they helped Lord Lytton to a title for one of his smaller works, and Madeline to a portrait of Lord Lytton himself, as the "Siamese Twins," the author having been ingeniously doubled by the artist's device of representing him shaving himself at a huge glass. The picture is in the "Fraser" series just republished. Perhaps, too, an epigram may help to keep their name alive. A lady remonstrated with her husband on her being left to herself a good deal, and she quoted Byron's words, "Happiness was born a twin." The unkind answer was, "Yes, dear, but not a Siamese Twin."

"After compliments," as the Orientals say (by which in the present case, and in that of any future references to the "miserable business" until its end, we mean that we disclaim all ideas of contempt of court), we call attention to a remark made by the Lord Chief Justice on Tuesday. It was touching the operation which schoolboys, for whom nothing is sacred except holidays, describe as "blubbing." Somebody in the case had cried, or pretended to cry. Said Mr. Hawkins, "If I may be excused for mentioning it, your Lordship remarked long ago that when witnesses pretend to cry you should look for the tear-drop upon their cheeks." Sir Alexander answered, "I was not aware that I ever said it; but I confess the observation long ago occurred to me—I think during a trial in the Home Circuit. The fact is, there are people who can look as if they were crying; but, if you observe them narrowly, you will see that no tear comes, and a few moments afterwards you may find them looking as cheerful as possible again." This, being said from the bench, is of course to be accepted and remembered. But Sir Alexander Cockburn is the last man who would desire that people—good people—should learn to be hard-hearted. With permission, we shall append to his dictum another view of the hydraulic question, and we do so with the greater pleasure in that we quote from one of the most delightful books in the world, Mr. Black's "Adventures of a Phaeton." The husband and the wife, Tita, have had one of their sham fights, and the little lady says, tenderly, "You have been very rude to me." "Then don't say anything more about it," replies the husband, who is narrator; "receive my forgiveness, Tita." "That was not the way you used to speak to me when we were at Eastbourne," she said, "and with that she looked very much as if she were going to cry. Of course, she was not going to cry. She has had the trick of looking like that from her youth upward; but as it is about as pretty and pathetic as the real thing, it invariably answers the same purpose. It is understood to be a signal of surrender—a sort of appeal for compassion." But then this is only a code for nice people, like those who made the journey in the phaeton, of whom we had a welcome glimpse again at Christmas time.

There is nothing like a judicial investigation for affording illustrations of the manners and habits of thought of "our flesh and blood." Graphic descriptions by accomplished penmen are all very well, but, though we have no objection to their "pointing their moral," it suffers by their "adorning their tale." One likes to hear a person speak for himself or herself. At the Taunton inquiry a lady, whose name is Charity Venner, was most unconsciously amusing. She says that at the election she saw somebody lay hold of her son by the coat, as a kind of suggestion to that young gentleman to go to the poll and discharge the sacred duty which a trusting Legislature had confided to him. But for some unexplained reason Mrs. Charity was exasperated at seeing this very mild stimulus applied to her son's patriotism, and she uttered—being, she says, "excited"—a demand whether the individual so acting "considered himself a gentleman." Up to this point our feelings were rather with the lady, for we do not approve of demonstrative manners, which are quite apart from the traditions of refined society. Still, some little energy may be forgiven at an election. Not so thought Mrs. Charity Venner, for, on an Irish gentleman proceeding to a little roughish gallantry by way, we suppose, of propitiating her, she remonstrated with more severity than became a lady with such a Christian name. In fact, to use her own words, she "threw a handful of mud upon him." The next day she was always liberal; and Mrs. Venner made it a good handful, for "some of it splashed upon the carriage" of the Liberal candidate. However, the omen may be accepted, for a good deal more mud has been thrown at the Attorney-General, and it by no means seems to stick. We write before the decision, and therefore have no right to express an opinion on the case itself; but the learned Judge has expressed the strongest opinion that nothing which was done at Taunton affects the character of Sir Henry James—a declaration that can surprise nobody, but one which it is satisfactory to read in these days of wholesale vilification of men who aspire to serve their country.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

Among the recent publications of special interest are several books of travel in Asia, Africa, and America, which add to our knowledge of the earth and its products and living inhabitants. The Land of the White Elephant, by Frank Vincent, jun. (published by Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle), is an interesting account of personal adventures and observations in Burmah, Siam, Cambodia, and Cochin-China. The author has spent three years in examining various countries of Asia, in addition to those which belong to the south-eastern peninsula, sometimes called Farther India, or India beyond the Ganges. It was at the beginning of April, 1872, that he arrived at Rangoon, the chief port of British Burmah; and he left Saigon, the port of French Cochin-China, or Annam, in March, 1872; but half this interval of time was employed in visits to Java, Japan, and China, including a trip up the Yang-tze-Kiang. On his return to Singapore he betook himself to Bangkok, the capital of Siam, and saw much that is curious and remarkable in that country, of whose Kings and their Court fashions we have lately heard. Mr. Frank Vincent journeyed overland eastward through Siam, from Bangkok to the great river Mekong, in Cambodia, whence he descended the course of that stream to the French settlements. His narrative here occupies part of the ground that was taken by the late Henri Mouhot, in his "Travels in Indo-China, Cambodia, and Laos," published about ten years ago. We are glad of the opportunity to compare the French traveller's descriptions with those of a later English observer, as well as with the admirably-executed photographs by Mr. Thompson, of Singapore, a few of which have, from time to time, been engraved for this Journal. Our readers, we trust, have not forgotten the marvellous ruins of superb and elegant architecture and decorative sculpture in the temples of Angkor and Nagkon, in Eastern Siam. There is scarcely anything more wonderful among similar remains of ancient building in Assyria, in Syria, or in Egypt, or even in classic Greece and imperial Rome. But the antiquary cannot yet with certainty declare when or by whom, in what age or by what nation, these vast edifices of South-Eastern Asia were raised, and adorned with consummate artistic skill. The interest of such an historical problem is alone sufficient to invite a thoughtful reader's attention; besides which, Mr. Frank Vincent has much to relate of the actual condition of those remote countries, which may be found of no small value to the business of commercial intercourse and exchange. His volume is furnished with a map and plans, and with about fifty wood engravings.

The enterprising and persevering attempts of Mr. Thurnam Thomas Cooper to open a new route for British commerce into Tibet, whether from the western provinces of China or from the north-eastern corner of India, have been noticed on former occasions. His narrative entitled "Travels of a Pioneer of Commerce, in Pigtail and Petticoats," which appeared some three years since, told us of a most adventurous and perilous experience, at first in the disguise of a native Chinaman, afterwards in the unprotected state of a lonely foreigner, ill provided with the means of procuring subsistence or service. He was constantly baffled and thwarted by the intrigues of the Chinese official rogues on his way to the frontier of Tibet, and when he reached the town of Bathang, found himself expressly forbidden to proceed farther towards Lassa, the capital of that singular Central Asiatic State. His subsequent detention and narrow escape from a violent death among the half-savage tribes in the north of Yunnan, through which he endeavoured to get into Burmah, is a tale of much interest. Mr. Cooper's next attempt, on behalf of the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce, was to find a practicable road from the British Indian province of Assam, up the river Brahmapootra, into the same country of Tibet, to which the Assam tea-planters are looking as a most profitable market for their fragrant herb. The consumption of tea is enormous, for a moderate number of population, both in Tibet and Turkestan, six or eight million pounds of brick tea being annually imported into Tibet from China. This circumstance, with Mr. Cooper's and his employers' views upon the subject, may be a sufficient reason for the hostility of the Chinese provincial authorities to his mission of mercantile research. We believe that the trade of India will shortly obtain a more direct and convenient way of entrance into Tibet by a road across the passes of the Himalayas, either through the Sikkim territory, north of Darjeeling, a short railway ride from Calcutta, or else up the Sutledj valley. But in Mr. Cooper's new book, The Mishnee Hills; or, New Routes for Commerce (H. S. King and Co.), the lovers of geographical and ethnological anecdote may find plenty of instructive entertainment. The district through which he conducts them, that of the Degaroo and Meju Mishnees, lies along the upper course of the Brahmapootra, above Sudiya, and so far beyond the frontier of our Indian Empire, but on the northern side of the Patkoi mountains, which are the limit, as we suppose, of independent Burmah. It is evident, from Mr. Cooper's failure to obtain a passage through their country to Bathang, that private enterprise cannot deal successfully with this task, which must be adjourned till the political and military necessities of the Calcutta Government shall prompt a further conquest. We do not see, in the meantime, that there would be any great advantage in hastening this probable result.

It is at the opposite, or western, extremity of our Indian frontier, especially since the Russian conquest of Khiva, that we perceive more need for a vigilant anticipation of events. In the judgment of some esteemed guardians of India there is nothing so important as to secure its western approaches, through Afghanistan and Beloochistan, against the suspected rival Power. A most opportune publication for those who concern themselves with this subject is Mr. H. W. Bellew's narrative of a journey, in 1872, From the Indus to the Tigris (Tubner and Co.). The author, an army surgeon of the Bengal Staff Corps, went with General Sir Richard Pollock on his political mission to Seistan, and thence with Sir F. Goldsmid to Persia. He has made very good use of his observations in those countries which, intervening between India and Persia and Russian Turkestan, may possibly become, some day or other, the field of a great contest for empire. No such exact description has yet met our eyes, for instance, of the configuration of the mountain barrier that surrounds Afghanistan, separating it on the western side, in Khorassan, from some provinces of Persia, and dividing it from the plains of the Oxus, and other rivers flowing into the Aral and Caspian Seas, to the north. The strategic value of Herat, from this point of view, is shown with sufficient distinctness; and we must say that it will never do to let the Russians get hold of that fortress, the gate of Southern Asia. But it can only be defended by our alliance with the rulers of Kabool and Kandahar; and we ought, therefore, to desire such knowledge of their territories and populations as Mr. Bellew, and other travellers of credit, are enabled to bestow upon us. An historical and legendary interest belongs to Seistan, the country around that singular lake in the centre of the highland plateau, which receives nearly all the rivers of Afghanistan. This district, which was the birthplace of that Persian hero of romance, the renowned champion Rustam, has felt the vicissitudes of Macedonian, Arab, Mogul, Tartar, and Afghan conquest, but is now subject again to Persia. The route thence pursued by the British diplomatist's travelling party, of which Mr. Bellew was a member, lay northwards across the Khorassan mountain frontier to Meshed, and thence to Teheran, where he arrived in time to witness the dreadful sufferings of the people from the famine of that year in Persia. He gives a deplorably bad account of Persia and its administration. We repeat our commendation of his book as one that seems to give the precise information likely to be wanted, if certain political and military contingencies should ever be realised.

The revival of a feeling of particular interest in the geography of the Bible has lately been remarked. Our Work in Palestine, an account of the different expeditions sent out by the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund, and The Recovery of Jerusalem, by Captain Wilson and Captain Warren, two officers of the Royal Engineers, with contributions by Dean Stanley and others, have been published by Mr. Bentley. The Alps of Arabia, being the narrative of a recent tour in Egypt, Sinai, Petra or Edom, and the Holy Land, extending to Damascus and Babelbec, is an acceptable book on these subjects. Mr. William Maughan, its author, is a diligent observer and describer, but he has seen little that was not before familiar to Eastern travellers. His tone of sentiment is soberly reverential, as beholding the localities of sacred story in the light of a fixed religious faith. Indeed, though Jerusalem has been sadly vulgarised, the soul must be dull and dead that feels no Divine emotion in gazing upon the scenes of our Lord's life at Nazareth and on the shores of the Galilean lake. The author of this volume has a fair amount of appropriate historical knowledge, and he writes in a pleasant, unaffected style. The publishers are H. S. King and Co.

A work of much greater importance is The Land of Moab, by the Rev. Canon Tristram, being an account of his travels and discoveries on the east side of the Dead Sea and the Jordan (Murray). The learned author's topographical investigations are known to have obtained some results of considerable value. They relate, among other subjects, to the true site of Macherus, the fortress or palace of Herod, where John the Baptist was imprisoned and martyred; the place is still called M'khaur, and Canon Tristram gives a minute description of its ruins. Another interesting problem was to identify the peak of Mount Nebo, from which Moses viewed the land of Canaan; and in finding this eminence, with its extensive prospect, as well as in his conjecture of the site of Zoar, above the north end of the Dead Sea, the reverend author seems to have been guided by a discerning judgment. His expedition, accompanied by the Rev. F. A. Klein (Church Missionary from Jerusalem), and assisted by Messrs. Louis Buxton, Mowbray Trotter, W. A. Hayne, and R. C. Johnson, was due to a grant of £200 from the British Association of Science, to continue the researches of Professor Edwin Palmer and Mr. Tyrwhitt Drake in that region of the Syrian Desert. Besides the facts relating to Biblical archaeology which are mentioned, this volume contains the full description of another remarkable discovery—that of the ruins of the magnificent Persian palace at Mashita, probably built by Chosroes, about the beginning of the seventh century of the Christian era. Mr. James Fergusson contributes a treatise upon this subject.

In the same connection may finally be mentioned a little book for lovers of the Bible scenery, by Mr. Thomas Jenner, called That Goodly Mountain, and Lebanon (Hamilton, Adams, and Co.). The author is a diligent Sunday-school teacher, who spent his August holidays in a tour of Judea, Samaria, and Galilee, making notes and sketches; of which we have only to say that the sketches have furnished many pretty wood engravings, and the notes may be useful for his class at the Sunday school.

BOARD OF TRADE INQUIRIES.

The report of the court of inquiry into the abandonment of the brig Sultan, whilst on a voyage from Baltimore to Queenstown, on Nov. 17 last, states that the vessel was wrongfully abandoned, and the certificate of the master, Robert Hyde, has been suspended for six months. The court also expressed disapprobation of the manner in which the mate, James Lobb, gave his evidence, and of his apparent want of experience of the duties devolving upon him.

The inquiry into the loss of the steam-ship Chanonry, off Toulon, on Oct. 18 last, has resulted in a finding that if the master had adopted one of two alternative courses that were open to him he might have saved his ship. In the absence of any statement from the master, who died from exhaustion, there is considerable doubt on questions touching the navigation of the vessel; but the court strongly condemn the system which exists in regard to the stowage of wheat cargoes in bulk on board steamers (without permanently laid 'tween decks) in the Mediterranean and Black Sea trade.

The court of inquiry into the circumstances attending the burning of the barque Herbert Graham, of Newport (Mon.), in September last, near the entrance to the Straits of Magellan, has found that the casualty arose from spontaneous ignition of the cargo of coal.

The inquiry into the loss of the steam-ship Crimea, in the Black Sea, on Nov. 16 last, was concluded, on Tuesday, at Liverpool. The court thought that the captain had made an error in regard to the identity of the Karabournon Light, which resulted in the loss of his own life and that of the second mate.

A splendid new swing bridge across Leith Harbour was opened last Saturday. The bridge, which is of iron, cost £32,000, and weighs 750 tons. It contains two lines for railway traffic and two roadways for foot passengers. The dock commissioners afterwards gave a banquet, at which the members of Parliament and Corporations of Leith and Edinburgh were present.

The directors of the South Devon Railway have decided that at all stations on their line tickets shall be issued, on application, half an hour before the departure of every train, thus avoiding the necessity for the crush at the last moment which has been the subject of so much comment of late. The South-Western Railway Company have long had an office in Plymouth where tickets were obtainable for any train from Exeter the day previous to the journey being undertaken.

The Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce offers its gold medal, or £20, for the best "revolution indicator" which shall accurately inform the officer on deck and the engineer in charge of the engine what are the number of revolutions of the paddles or screw per minute, without the necessity of counting them.

At the United Service Institution, yesterday week, Captain Knapp Barron, formerly Military Secretary on the Gold Coast, delivered a lecture on the Ashantee War of 1863. Colonel Stephenson, C.B., occupied the chair, and there was a good attendance.—A paper, entitled "Economy of Coal as Viewed by the Commander of a Steam-Vessel," was read, on Monday evening, by Captain Shortland, R.N.

The annual courses of lectures at the Royal College of Surgeons will be begun on Monday, the 2nd proximo, by Professor Erasmus Wilson, F.R.S., who will deliver six lectures on "Dermatology," when he will be succeeded by Mr. W. K. Parker, F.R.S., who will deliver eighteen lectures on the "Structure and Development of the Skull in the Vertebrata." No Hunterian oration will be delivered this year.

At the third annual meeting of the Statistical Society, on Tuesday, Mr. Dudley Baxter read an interesting paper on the progress of national debts. He estimated that they had grown from 1700 millions in 1848 to 2980 millions in 1873. Borrowing States he distinguished into the economical, the good, the over-borrowing, and the insolvent. In the discussion which followed the Hon. Mr. Childers took part.

On Wednesday the London School Board resumed the discussion of Canon Gregory's motion, which had occupied attention on the 14th inst. Mr. Gover moved the previous question, and in a speech of some length defended the statistics, the accuracy of which had been impugned by Canon Gregory. Mr. Buxton seconded the proposition, the debate upon which was again adjourned.

The Civil Service Commissioners, at the instance of the Postmaster-General, recently advertised for candidates to fill twenty-two vacancies for letter-carriers in London, the wages and conditions being stated. The examination took place on Tuesday, when over 1000 respectable, well-dressed young men, between the required ages of twenty and thirty, presented themselves for admission.

The Licensed Victuallers' Asylum ball, which took place on Thursday week night at St. James's Hall, was the most successful and numerously attended yet given. The numbers present were 3120. So great was the pressure that the three halls were thrown open.—The annual ball in aid of the funds of the Licensed Victuallers' School is to take place at St. James's Hall, Regent-street, on Thursday next, the 29th inst.

The first annual meeting of the Medical Microscopical Society was held, yesterday week, at the Royal Westminster Ophthalmic Hospital—Mr. Jabez Hogg presiding. From the report of the committee it appeared that the society was in a most flourishing condition, 129 members having joined it during the year. A satisfactory balance remained in the hands of the treasurer. The officers for the coming year were elected, and the president delivered an address.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 106,908, of whom 36,947 were in workhouses and 69,961 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 4782, 16,944, and 57,155 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 584, of whom 436 were men, 109 women, and 39 children under sixteen.

Mr. Frank Buckland delivered an interesting lecture on fish-culture, at his museum in South Kensington, yesterday week. In the course of his remarks he observed that it was remarkable that nearly all salmon rivers ran through cathedral towns, though the reason was obvious—namely, that the monks who built the cathedrals had an eye to the obtaining of good fish. He directed attention to the efforts he was making to increase the culture of salmon and other fish, and said that he had been endeavouring to restore salmon to the Thames; but, however many were thrown in, they went down the river and never returned.

A paper on Buddhism was read by Bishop P. C. Claughton, at a rather crowded meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute, held on Monday night at the House of the Society of Arts. Bishop Claughton began by considering Buddhism—which was rather a system of philosophy than a religion—as it existed in Ceylon in the present day; after which he proceeded to examine the theory of Buddhism as taught by its priests, and showed that, whilst it inculcated a system of morality, that system had no sufficient principle or motive; and although, as a system, it was not comparable to the Christian religion, yet all who had studied its recognised books would grant that it was the best outside that religion. He concluded by showing that the natural results of its teaching were to foster superstition. The discussion began by the reading a letter from Professor Max-Müller, in which he stated that, "judging Buddhism from its own sacred books, he was not led to differ much from the Bishop in his estimate of it."

With respect to the desirability of extending the county franchise, certain views adopted by the Associated Federal Union of Agricultural and General Labourers, the Northern Reform League of Northumberland and Durham, the West Riding Miners, the National Association of Miners, and other organisations, comprising 400,000 individuals, were laid before Mr. Gladstone, on Wednesday, by a deputation of chosen representatives, who were introduced by Mr. Joseph Cowen, M.P., and Mr. Lambert, M.P. The Premier (who has scarcely yet recovered from his indisposition) replied at some length to the arguments of the several speakers.

Three tonic sol-fa deputations (one from the Tonic Sol-Fa College, the second from the Free Church Musical School, Glasgow, and the third from the Free Church Psalmody Committee of Edinburgh) waited upon Mr. Forster, on Wednesday, to complain of obstructions which they allege are thrown in the way of teachers trained on this system in obtaining certificates for music. It was prayed that an inspector be appointed who is conversant with both systems, or that a separate examiner be appointed for the tonic sol-fa method. Mr. Forster, in promising the subject his careful attention, cited to the deputation passages from their own reports in which they praised the ability and impartiality of Mr. Hullah.

At a meeting of the Royal Humane Society, held on Tuesday, several cases of saving life were brought under the notice of the society and rewarded. Bronze medallions were voted to Lieutenant A. P. L. Tudor, R.N., of her Majesty's ship Favourite, for assisting to save Michael Flynn, a private of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, who attempted to commit suicide by jumping into twenty-three fathoms of water in the Firth of Forth; to William Terry, seaman of her Majesty's ship Bellerophon, for going to the rescue of George C. Baker and William C. Hildebrandt, who were in danger of drowning at sea, in lat. 25 35 deg. N., long. 20 21 deg. W., in November last; to John M.K. Geddes, for diving into fourteen feet of water and supporting Mrs. M. Edgar, who was in danger of drowning, at Auckland, New Zealand, in November last; and to Charles Kibble for trying, but without success, to save two children named Theobald, who fell through the ice into seven feet of water at Swindon, on the 13th ult. Testimonials inscribed on vellum were presented to several persons.

There were 2458 births and 1553 deaths registered in London last week, the former having been 2 above and the latter 312 below the average. The annual death-rate, which in the two previous weeks had been equal to 29 and 25 per 1000, further declined last week to 24. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the four preceding weeks had steadily declined from 1112 to 613, further declined last week to 554, and were 143 below the average; 243 resulted from bronchitis, 181 from phthisis, and 83 from pneumonia. There were 6 deaths from smallpox, 87 from measles, 16 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 35 from whooping-cough, 27 from different forms of fever, and 12 from diarrhoea. The fatal cases of measles continue excessive, whereas those of each of the six other zymotic diseases were below the average. The six deaths from smallpox were more numerous than in recent weeks, and included 4 unvaccinated cases in the Smallpox Hospital at Homerton. The 27 deaths from fever included 16 which were certified as enteric or typhoid, 7 as typhus, and 4 as simple continued fever. The mean temperature was 41.6 deg., or 5.3 deg. above the average.

At a meeting of the Court of Common Council, on Thursday week, at which the Lord Mayor presided, petitions were presented from Mr. Percy Leonard Pelly, a stockbroker in Threadneedle-street, and Mr. John Hegan, merchant, of Moorgate-street, the sureties of Mr. Joseph Javier de Lizardi, praying for a remission of the sum of £6000 each, the amount of their estrated recognisances. They stated, in effect, that they had known the firm of Mr. de Lizardi for between thirty and forty years, and its character stood very high in the city of London. They implicitly believed in the innocence of the accused, and they therefore without hesitation offered themselves as his sureties. No one was more surprised than they were to learn that on the very night of his release the defendant absconded; and they at once took steps, by offering a large reward and securing the services of an experienced detective, to obtain his arrest, but were unsuccessful. They added that they had received no guarantee or indemnification from the prisoner or his friends, and that they had paid the entire sum into the coffers of the Corporation. Mr. Alderman Ellis moved and Mr. Alderman M'Arthur, M.P., seconded a resolution to the effect that the petition should be referred to the Law and Parliamentary committee for consideration and report. Mr. Alderman Figgins, M.P., proposed, as an amendment, "That the petition do lie upon the table." This was seconded by Mr. Henry Gover. A long discussion ensued, and the amendment was finally carried by a majority of eight in a court of 150 members.

The Newfoundland Government has been defeated in the House of Assembly. Mr. Carter is forming a new Ministry, said to be favourable to a union with the Dominion Government.

At the Middlesex Sessions, on Tuesday, Mr. Philip Hardwick and Mr. Henry D. Phillips were sworn in as justices of the peace for Middlesex and Westminster.

Heavy bail was accepted, on Tuesday, by Alderman M'Arthur, for the future attendance, at the Guildhall, of Albert George Hersfeld, who is charged with embezzling several sums of money, exceeding in amount £250, belonging to Auguste Wilhelm Holthaus, of Ronsdorf.

The annual session of the Jersey States opened on Wednesday, and several bills were brought in, among them being a measure for imposing a gun licence of £1 per annum, and forbidding youths under eighteen to carry firearms for sporting purposes. This law is deemed expedient from the large numbers of boys who are allowed, without hindrance, to wander about shooting in the most careless manner. After considerable opposition the bill was committed for discussion.

The Gazette of Genoa of the 12th says:—"In the historical palace of Brignole-Sale, or the Palazzo Rosso, was accomplished this afternoon a solemn act, which is without parallel, except in the most splendid annals of the former munificence of Genoese patricians. The Marquise Maria Brignole-Sale, the last surviving branch of that illustrious family, assisted and authorised by the Duke de Galliera, Senator of the Kingdom, her husband, and by their son, the Marquis Filippo, gave to the city of Genoa the said palace with its magnificent library and gallery of pictures, which are renowned all over Europe. These last will remain open to students and visitors, and the revenue of the building will be applied to the encouragement of literature and art, and the purchase of artistic treasures for the city." This palace is considered by many persons as the finest in Genoa in an architectural point of view. The collection of paintings contains a great number of portraits by Vandyke, as well as works by Guido, Tintoretto, Paul Veronese, and others of the old masters.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Coursing men, who have been comparatively idle for the last month, assembled in strong force at Altcar last week for the Club Meeting, in which the greatest interest was taken, as it was known that about twenty of the Waterloo nominators would be represented. Fortunately the weather, except on the final day, was most propitious, hares were strong and plentiful, and Mr. Hedley and Wilkinson, who respectively acted as judge and slipper, got through their work in very satisfactory style. Mr. T. T. C. Lister won the two first courses of the Members' Cup, his Cymal beating Glorious Apollo in rare style; and, a little further down the card, Genuine Business, who, as well as Glorious Apollo, is an own brother to Peasant Boy, was also put out. Old Chameleon was a little too clever for Hemlock; and Hamilton, who it is thought will fill Mr. Hornby's nomination for the Waterloo Cup, never gave Laudanum a chance in a nice trial. The meeting of Chameleon and Hamilton afforded the best contest of the first ties, and the former just managed to secure the award. She also won her third course in grand style; but was put out by Aunt Blanche in the third ties; and the latter, who is by Banner Blue—Aunt Agatha, eventually divided with Mr. Jardine's Progress, by Improver—Amy. Mr. T. T. C. Lister had it all his own way in the Croxteth Stakes, which was divided between his two representatives, Cantinière, by Cashier—Chloe, and Chorister, by Singing Master—Charming May. The Veteran Stakes was interesting from the success of old Black Knight, who took part in one or two Waterloo Cups in the Master M'Grath days. The Beckhampton (Wiltshire) Open Meeting, which was held about the same time, also proved very successful. The Beckhampton Stakes for puppies was divided between Heiress, by Pickle—Stourton Belle, and Sam's Delight, by Pat of Mullingar—Spendthrift; while Wax, that ancient damsel Deodora's daughter, and Jack Horner shared the Wiltshire Stakes between them.

Mr. Jardine's nomination is firmly established at the head of the Waterloo Cup quotations, and we hear that Muriel has quite recovered from the bite she recently received, while Progress showed great speed and cleverness at Altcar last week. Mr. Hemming's nomination still occupies a rather dubious position, and it is asserted that Peasant Boy will, after all, run for some other owner. This we do not believe for one moment, as, were such a course pursued, Mr. Hemming's first nomination for the "blue ribbon" would certainly be his last.

The annual sale of Mr. R. Clementson's saplings took place, at Aldridge's, on Saturday last. The entire lot of twenty-two brace made 645 gs., or an average of about 15 gs. each. Five whelps by Racing Hopfactor—Gravelotte made 129 gs., and Mr. Hemming purchased six lots.

The account of the last match played by our countrymen in the Antipodes is more satisfactory than some of the previous ones. We learn that they defeated twenty-two of Warrnambool by nine wickets, making 104 and (with the loss of one wicket) 17 against 68 and 51. No report of individual scores has reached us at the time of writing.

A very exciting billiard-match for £200 was played at Manchester, on Monday evening last, when John Roberts, jun., attempted to concede 300 points in 1000 to W. Timbrell. The latter, with breaks of 59, 42, 56, 111, and 127 (thirty-nine spot strokes), held his own during the early part of the game; but, after the interval, Roberts caught and passed him with contributions of 70, 47, 79, 49, and 42, and reached 981 against his opponent's 903, when Timbrell took full advantage of his last chance, and, with a fine break of 98 (thirty-two "spots"), won by 19 points.

NEW GUNS AT ST. HELENA.

This lonely islet of the Atlantic Ocean, which was the prison of Napoleon I., is not entirely forgotten. St. Helena is amongst the fortified places of the British empire which it has been thought necessary to arm of late years with heavy rifled ordnance in substitution for old smooth-bores. The rocky nature of the shores of this island, and the rollers which scarcely cease for a few consecutive days in the year, render the landing of such heavy masses of metal as our modern pieces of ordnance a difficult and dangerous operation to carry through in a surging sea. One of the two illustrations which we now give is a view of Munden's Fort (from the east), with the small barracks attached thereto. In 1846 the rollers washed up level with the parapet of this fort. The other illustration is a view of the rocks at Munden's Point, the place selected for landing the heavy guns, and showing also the sheers erected by the Royal Artillery, under Lieutenant Maclean; and in the background a view of the anchorage off James Town. The guns lately placed in position are rifled muzzle-loading guns of 7 tons weight. The conveyance of these guns from the schooner Just, which took them from England, and the work of landing them on the rocks, was performed by the shipping firm of Erridge and Co., Government water-transport contractors for the island of St. Helena.

The Great Western Railway Company is about to lay down the mixed gauge from Bristol to Swindon, the main line from the latter point to Fiddington having already both gauges laid.

At Cambridge the special committee appointed to inquire into the recent outbreak of typhoid fever reports that the sewers are watertight and have a free discharge into the river.

Speaking on Monday at the soirée of the Bradford Chamber of Commerce, Lord F. Cavendish reviewed the commercial events of last year and of other years preceding. Mr. Donnell, Registrar-General for Ireland, has issued a return showing that last year 90,149 emigrants left that country, being an increase, compared with the year 1872, of 12,017. The total emigration from Ireland since May 1, 1851, the date at which the collection of returns began, is stated to be 2,252,745 persons.

The new Board of Railway Commissioners has issued a form of notice to be used by companies when two or more desire to enter into working agreements. The particular powers sought are to be advertised in the newspapers, and persons aggrieved are to send in their objections to the Railway Commissioners twenty-eight days after the public notification of the scheme.

Lord Lyttelton has written a letter expressing his entire concurrence with the views of Sir Charles Trevelyan upon the subject of charity electioneering reform. He points out some of the evils of the present system, and adds that he once unadvisedly undertook to promote the election of a candidate to Earlswood Asylum, and the cost of sending out cards alone amounted to more than £60.—The Rev. R. J. Simpson states that nearly 500 life-governors and subscribers of the British Orphan Asylum have recorded their approval of the amendment proposed at the late court of that institution in favour of "Charity Voting Reform."

WEST AREA OF ST. PAUL'S-CHURCHYARD, AS NEWLY ARRANGED.

ST. PAUL'S-CHURCHYARD.

The western part of St. Paul's-churchyard, in front of the main entrance to the cathedral, and opposite the top of Ludgate-hill, will be much improved, both in appearance and in convenience, by the alterations now in progress. The new arrangement is shown in our Illustration. It has been agreed upon by the Dean and Chapter with the Corporation of London; the former giving up a space of more than 7000 square feet to the public roadway, and the latter paying £15,000 as the price of this land, while the Dean and Chapter expend about £6000 of the money in the proposed improvements, designed by their own architect and surveyor, Mr. Penrose.

After enlarging the roadway by about 7000 ft., as already stated, a space is laid out in front of the cathedral, of the form of a semi-ellipse. The major semi-diameter of the curve lies westward, and extends 114 ft. in front of the cathedral; the smaller diameter, 168 ft., extends from the northern to the southern tower. The area thus inclosed, upwards of 15,000 ft., will remain the property of the Dean and Chapter, but people on foot will have access to it; only upon the occasion of important services in the cathedral it will be inclosed temporarily by barriers fixed to the granite posts which mark the boundary, to diminish the pressure of the crowd from the doors. At night the upper part of the staircase and the portico will be protected by an iron fence of a suitable pattern, so contrived that by machinery concealed in the vaults it can be raised or lowered.

The reserved area extends to about 9 ft. westward of the railing of the Queen Anne statue, and the Corporation have agreed to form around and outside the entire boundary a paved footway, 6 ft. wide, which will be elevated by the usual curb above the roadway. The whole area within the curb will be flat up to the steps leading to the cathedral. The sill supporting the posts is of Aberdeen granite, 2 ft. 4 in. wide. The posts, which are of dark red granite from the Shap Quarries in West-merland, are polished, and are ornamented by a deeply-sunk neck moulding for the purpose of attachment of temporary barriers. The posts are 1 ft. 5 in. in diameter at the base, tapering in the shaft (3 ft. 6 in. high exposed to view, and about 1 ft. 6 in. sunk in the solid concrete and granite curb). They are 7 ft. 3 in. from centre to centre, or about four diameters apart, except that two larger openings, defended by larger posts, are formed to give carriage access to the west front for the Royal, civic, and other dignitaries on the occasion of great festivals. The paving in front of the great steps is formed with panels by means of granite bands, 11 in. wide, the intersections being marked by octagons; the filling-in where the carriage access is intended is of strong granite blocks; and the remainder, for the most part, is formed out of the old Furbeck pitching, a large portion of which was found to be sound and hard, and has been carefully reworked and gauged for the purpose. The statue of Queen Anne, the care of which belongs to a Government department, will be restored, also the fence round it, unless the fence be removed entirely. There will be a circular pathway round it, formed of radiating slabs of granite, circumscribed by a margin of the 11-in. granite, similar to the divisions of the panels. The steps forming the great flights in front of the portico are formed of black Guernsey granite, which take the place of the old black marble, now much worn. The material is very durable. Mr. Penrose has designed the lower flights with returned ends, as shown on a plan by Sir C. Wren himself, in the possession of the Chapter. The landing will be paved with marbles of different kinds, consisting of a margin of Sicilian, inclosing panels of squares, arranged losenge-wise, of black and red, the latter being from the revived Rosso Antico quarries. The lamp-posts are ten in number, two for the pedestals, for which open iron or bronze scrollwork designs are contemplated, and eight for the area, for which granite posts have been proposed. The works have all been designed by the cathedral surveyor, and carried out under his superintendence by Mr. Wilkinson, the cathedral clerk of works, and the regular staff of workmen, with such temporary assistance as the occasion has required.

THE LATE MR. OKE.

We lately recorded the death of Mr. George Colwell Oke, chief clerk to the Lord Mayor of London. The deceased gentleman, who was only fifty-one years of age, became assistant clerk to the Lord Mayor in 1855, having previously acted as clerk to the Newmarket Bench of Justices, and in 1865 he succeeded Mr. Goodman in the chief clerkship. He was one of the ablest of criminal lawyers, especially in the summary branch of procedure, and he was the author of many standard legal works, including "Oke's Magisterial Synopsis," which has passed through eleven editions; "The Magisterial Formulist," "The Law of Turnpike Roads," the "Handy Book of the Game and Fishery Laws," and "Oke on the Licensing Laws." Although ailing for some time past, he remained at his post at the Mansion House until the week of his death. Our portrait of Mr. Oke is from a photograph by Maull and Co.

WATERWORKS FESTIVAL AT CARACAS.

The city of Caracas, the capital of Venezuela, has lately been the scene of great rejoicing, to celebrate the opening of the new waterworks, which have been constructed by the present head of the State, General Guzman Blanco, President of the Venezuelan Republic. The day chosen for the event was the anniversary of the liberation of the country from the Spanish yoke, which was accomplished by Simon Bolivar, the Washington of South America, and which day is annually kept with great solemnity all over the country. The dawning of this auspicious morn was announced by salvoes of artillery and the discharge of innumerable rockets, which fireworks seem to be the necessary accompaniment of all fetes in this country, both by day and night. "Epps's Caracas" had, when the sun rose, assumed a festive appearance which made it look exceedingly picturesque, every house being gay with flags and other decorations. After grand mass at the church, and an official reception, the President proceeded in procession with his staff, the principal officers of the State, and the diplomatic corps, to the Calvario, a hill some 600 ft. high, to the top of which the water has been brought into reservoirs from a distance of some fifty kilometres along the flanks of the mountains.

General Guzman Blanco, who has risen to the high position he now holds through his own energy and determination, has added this important work to the Senate House and the University constructed during the short period he has been in office, and is now doing everything in his power to introduce railways into this magnificent country. The railway to the Arica copper-mines, the richest in the world, is being actively pushed forward by Messrs. Barnett and Gale, the contractors, on behalf of the Bolivar Railway Company, and a project for a line from Caracas to its port La Guayra seems now the pet idea of the President, but, on account of the mountainous district it will have to pass through, there will be considerable trouble in its construction.

The private house of the President is, as most others in Caracas (which is liable to earthquakes), only one story high, and of very modest appearance. A guard of honour is established before it night and day, and, as they usually sit in a row on chairs, have rather a peculiar appearance to a European eye.

SIAMESE ORDER OF KNIGHTHOOD.

The Grand Siamese Order of Knighthood consists of 300 members, exclusive of the King, who is its Grand Master. These are divided into five classes or grades, named respectively Knights Grand Cross, Knights Commanders, Commanders, Companions, and Fifth Class. The decorations worn by each class were designed by his Siamese Majesty, and have been executed by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, of New Bond-street. They are described as follows:—

The Grand Master wears a collar, scarf, badge, and star. The collar is of gold, with a centre ornament representing a three-headed elephant, surmounted by the regal crown encircled by rays. On each side of the elephant, and acting as supporters, is a dragon of conventional Siamese character; and the remainder of the collar consists of links formed alternately of lotus-flowers and the Royal cipher. The entire ornament is closely studded with gems.

The badge is formed of an eight-pointed star, in pink enamel, pendent from the regal crown encircled by rays. In the centre of the badge, on the obverse, is a portrait, in enamel, of his Siamese Majesty, and on the reverse an enamel painting of the three-headed elephant. Around these paintings are circles of diamonds, bordering a legend in Siamese characters in gold, on a ground of dark blue enamel. The points of the star are connected by a wreath of lotus-flowers in gold and enamel.

The scarf is of pink watered silk ribbon, with gold buckle and hook.

The star is of sixteen points, alternately silver and gold, closely set with diamonds. The centre is occupied by the Royal cipher in diamonds, on a ground of pink enamel, and is surrounded by two circles of diamonds, which inclose a legend in Siamese characters on a blue enamel ground.

The Knights Grand Cross, who are twenty in number, have the badge, scarf, and star, as worn by the Grand Master, but without any gems. The silver rays of the star are, however, cut in facets, like diamonds.

The Knights Commanders are fifty in number, and wear the badge, as above, suspended from a narrow ribbon collar of pink watered silk. The star of this grade has eight points, which are rayed, not cut in facets. The centre is the same as that of the Knights Grand Cross.

The Commanders, thirty in number, have the badge and ribbon collar, as Knights Commanders, but wear no star.

The Companions, to the number of one hundred, have the same badge as the other members of the order, but smaller in size; and it is worn suspended from a short piece of pink watered silk ribbon, with a buckle-brooch and bar, as our military medals.

The Fifth Class, also numbering a hundred members, wear a silver medallion, made in one piece, the details of which are almost identical with those of the badges worn by the other grades.

The first investiture of the members of this new order took place on the late occasion of the King's coronation.

MEMBERS OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

At a time when a dissolution of Parliament is perhaps imminent—or, at any rate, looming in the by no means far future—it is not surprising that representatives of the people of all classes should be interchanging ideas with their constituents, even to the very verge of the Session. This is, in some sort, an electioneering device; and perhaps it is thought that a vote of confidence in a member, caught from a meeting of electors in comitia assembled, is an implied promise of renewal of existing relations. Some of the out-of-door speeches are in the nature of voluntary valedictions; and, doubtless, a great many will be found to have had that character, though not intended to be so.

From a shoal of such addresses some may be selected for remark; and, in the first instance, note may be taken of Sir Charles Dilke, who has been delivering his regular annual oration to his friends in Chelsea, as distinguished from his recent political autobiography, about which so much has been said or written. It seems that the hon. Baronet was woefully misunderstood on that occasion, and that fierce articles have been written about him, evidently without his speech having been read, people, judging from the past, took for granted that his sentiments would be, to put it mildly, unloyal and wildly democratic. In this awful mistake has been made; for Sir Charles Dilke asserts that things are attributed to him in that particular discourse which are abhorrent and repulsive to him, and that he would rather jump into the Thames from the nearest bridge (there are two very conveniently near at Chelsea) than have it thought that he entertained such opinions. When, therefore, he, in effect, professes to be ready to die for his Queen, and by his own act, so as to be found some day at Barking Creek, as what Mr. Mantalini calls "a moist, unpleasant body," each of his mistaken detractors can only cry peccavi, and hope that Sir Charles Dilke may be preserved from a watery grave, long to do those services to the State for which his unquestioned abilities and originality of view render him eminently capable. In personal appearance Sir Henry Hoare is in a manner always picturesque. His "get-up," to use a colloquial phrase, generally betokens an artistic idea of costume; and sometimes in the hot summer days, when morning sittings are on, he appears in costumes which may be termed at once seasonable and radiant. In his speeches, too, there is an eccentric irregularity which would give them force, even if they did not usually contain a good deal of rough epigram; and, as he never speaks for more than ten minutes, he often enlivens a discussion which is growing wearisome. At the meeting at Chelsea above mentioned his appearance was quite dramatic. It was announced that an accident had almost incapacitated him from doing the outer part of his senatorial duty, and he withheld himself from the platform until the moment when it was his turn to speak, and he withdrew when he had concluded; so that he made an effective entrance and equally effective exit. He was as breezy, and cheery, and as practical as ever, his temporary mutilation notwithstanding; and the "enthusiastic cheers" amidst which he retired gave evidence that he is destined to be member for Chelsea in the next Parliament.

Amongst the comparatively young members who are always striving to come to the front in the House, Major Arbuthnot is one of the most striving. He is a devoted Army reformer, not in the Radical sense, but in that of bettering the efficiency and number of our forces. He is very troublesome to the War Office people in the House, having always some faulty matter of detail to tell of, and is utterly unconscious of ever being put down, let Mr. Cardwell charm never so wisely, or Sir Henry Storks prove that whatever is right (in his department) ever so sentimentally. He is as teasing as a gadfly, and will not be waved away by contemptuous brushes of the hand of any official, however high and mighty. He has been communicating with that portion of the constituency of Hereford which consists of his political friends, and naturally he went into so decided a military matter as the Ashantee war; and the mode in which he dealt with the subject was an apt illustration of his usual critical manner. To him the praise which has been bestowed by Liberal members, especially some military aspirants to Parliamentary honours, on the efficiency and promptitude shown in the arrangements for the African hostilities, is mere "bosh" (what he said may fairly be summed up by that expressive but curt and vulgar-sounding word); as if the dispatch and providing for an expeditionary force of 2000 men was a great feat for a country that spends £25,000,000 a year on its Army and Navy! Speaking as an authority, he put the expense of the Ashantee war at not more than £2,000,000; but some high-wrought sentiments which he uttered about expenditure of blood and treasure, for the preservation of the honour of England, would seem to indicate that he would not object to an indefinite expansion of that sum; and perhaps in this he will be gratified.

Usually a quiet, undemonstrative member, Mr. Tipping, when he occasionally favours the House with a few remarks, shows as a cheerful, pleasant gentleman and a practical man. A recent intercommunication which he has been having with his constituents at Stockport makes intelligible a recommendation which Mr. Disraeli made to the Stockport Conservative deputations which "kotoed" to him, amongst others, during his visit to Manchester, two years ago, "to take care of Mr. Tipping." For it would seem that he is a gentleman who has decided opinions on most of the topics of the day, in a Conservative sense; and some of his definitions—such, for instance, as of Home Rule—were pointed enough, and altogether his speech was well calculated to induce the Conservative electors of Stockport to "take care of him" at the next election.

According to a resolution passed at a recent gathering at Chester, Mr. Raikes, who represents that borough, has performed valuable services to the Constitutional cause and the city during the last five years. It may be so (we are not in a position to gainsay it); but it may be fancied that the electors of Chester have been viewing their member through a political magnifying glass, which has expanded the dimensions of a somewhat tart Parliamentary minor critic. But, in common with all constituencies, they only indulged in the amiable weakness of making a star of their member; and if they believe in him as a political influence that is all that is necessary.

Amongst the valedictions that are being made by members to their friends and electors one is notable—namely, that of Mr. Edmund Potter at Carlisle. In a quiet way Mr. Potter was a personage in the House, not because he thundered out blatant speeches and frothed-up opinions, but because he was a man essentially sensible and of large experience in matters on which he spoke, with a gentleness that, paradoxical as it may seem, gave force to what he said. He has scarcely made any appearance in the last two or three years, and it is understood that ill-health obliges him to retire from Parliament. As he always occupied a particular seat and was of a venerable aspect, he was a noticeable figure in the House. He was unequal to the task of meeting his constituents the other day, and upon Sir Wilfred Lawson fell a double duty, in instructing and amusing the assembled audience. He is equal to any occasion, and he proved himself to be equal to this. Nothing could be more incisive than most of his remarks, and one can well understand how effective they must have sounded when, as of course, accompanied by the easy style of banter, and that admirable by-play which characterises his rhetoric. Having told all the reforms which he wanted that had been obtained, he proceeded to say what further ones he desired—namely, the reform of the publicans and the English Church, a comically-contemptuous juxtaposition. As to the latter, he makes no difficulty about it, deeming it no question of time, because he says that either Mr. Gladstone or Mr. Disraeli (with odds on the latter) is to disestablish the Church; and, as both those statesmen are sexagenarians, each in his degree, they have not much time to spare before they set about their work of demolition. The reform of the publicans he appeared to treat as mightier work; for he does not despise his opponents in his crusade against free drinking, amongst the most formidable of whom he places brewers who are always building churches, and philosophical Radicals like Mr. Fawcett, who think the great object of legislation is to grant facilities for drinking beer. There was an obvious plagiarism when he asked favour for his Permissive Bill because it was only a little one; but, on the whole, his speech was sturdy, jolly, and at the same time earnest, as all his speeches are.

Time was when Mr. Baines stood out in the Liberal party as a most advanced Radical; but the progress of Radicalism has left him far behind, and he seems no better than an old Whig. An excellent illustration of the position which he now occupies in the ranks of Liberalism is to be found in the chronicle of a meeting which he attended in Leeds lately, and where he stood side by side with a representative Radical who is his colleague. The speech of Mr. Baines was, though he tried hard to assume a tone of ultra-Liberalism, a mere rattling of dry bones, compared with the full-blooded, rioting, rollicking Radicalism of Mr. Carter, who, luckily, if he is a personage on a platform at Leeds, is not an influence in the present Parliament, and is still less likely to be one in the next if, as is predicted, it should have a great deal more of the leaven of Conservatism in it.

SKETCHES OF ST. PETERSBURG.

Our Special Artist, Mr. John Proctor, who has been sent to St. Petersburg for the purpose of furnishing our Illustrations of the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh to the Grand Duchess Marie, supplies a page of characteristic street-figures and rather trivial incidents, belonging to ordinary domestic and social life in that city. He has not, like the famous reporter of courtly and aristocratic festivities who was formerly ridiculed by Punch, become so elated with false pride, from his approach to the splendid circle of supreme fashion, as to have no eye for the vulgar realities of a crowded and busy town, with its miscellaneous population, chiefly composed of the poor and the labouring classes. Our Artist, on the contrary, being a humourist and man of the world, has chosen to begin his task, whilst awaiting the expected assemblage of Imperial and Royal Princes, and the series of superb entertainments at the Russian Court, with a few truthful sketches of St. Petersburg cockneydom in its lower walks of daily traffic and service. People are obliged to do pretty much the same kind of things in every European capital; buying, selling, and hiring, various arrangements for eating and drinking, lodging and sleeping, the functions of the police, the use of carriages, and the delivery of letters by the post, must go on with but little substantial alteration in St. Petersburg, as in London, Paris, Berlin, and Vienna. Costumes and languages, the systems of coinage, weights, and measures, present an external difference in these transactions among the inhabitants of a foreign city; but the wants of ordinary townfolk, and the ways of supplying them, are essentially those to which we are accustomed at home. The first Russian city figure, therefore, in Mr. Proctor's gallery of St. Petersburg street characters is our familiar acquaintance, celebrated in an old comic ballad:

The dogs they barked, and the cats they ran,
At the handsome insinuating Dog's Meat Man!

We do not know the rule about keeping dogs at the metropolis of Alexander II.'s mighty empire; but there is due provision for cats, as we see by the gratitude of that affectionate creature rubbing her head against the purveyor's legs. She is not frightened by the terrible appearance of his broad-bladed knife, which is like that with which they cut off human heads in Ashantee, to please his Majesty King Coffee Calcutty. The usual rate of payment, we are told, for the feeding of a cat is one rouble, or 2s. 6d., a month. The next figure might be taken for that of a milkwoman, but it is a woman selling eggs. The head or bust-portrait, with these at the top of the page, is that of a common workman. Beneath him is a sweep, or foreman of a gang of sweeps, whose services have been very needful, we observe, in the thawed snow and mud of the St. Petersburg streets during the past week. The fifth subject, represented just below that of the sweep, is one of the street vendors of a cheap breakfast, consisting of eggs, boiled cabbage, bread, or sausages, to be eaten on the spot, like our baked potatoes and early coffee in London, hot from the portable oven or can. A maid-servant, who wears her summer dress, is next seen taking in her master's letters from the postman at the house-door. Beside this group is a hawk of toys, with a few of those Chinese counting-frames, set with parallel wires to support numbers of movable coloured beads, which are sometimes used for teaching arithmetic to children. At the bottom of the page is the hackney sledge, or sleigh, which in winter supersedes the ordinary kind of hackney carriage. This vehicle is hired at the rate of a rouble and a half for the first hour, and a rouble for each hour after the first, which is rather more than London cab fare by time. The furred cloaks and caps, worn by driver and passenger, are quite necessary at this season of the year.

A conference of licensed victuallers held in Birmingham, last week, was attended by about 300 representatives from all parts of the United Kingdom.

The hearing of the Hereford municipal election petition was concluded on Monday, Mr. Commissioner Biron pronouncing for the defendant, Mr. Edwin Smith, on all points, and declaring that, as the charges had in no case been substantiated, he should leave costs to follow the event.

The annual meeting in connection with the Children's Home and Seaside Hospital at Rhyl was held, on Thursday week, in the Townhall—the chair being occupied by the Marquis of Westminster. The noble chairman, in the course of his speech, dilated upon the advantages and necessity of such institutions for convalescents. If persons in his sphere of life found a change of air conducive to restoration of health, how much more so would they find it who have but a scanty fare at the best, and live in houses and atmosphere which are themselves unhealthy. He had visited the home, and was greatly pleased with its arrangements, cleanliness, and everything conducive to health which it possessed. Speeches were also made by Lord Penrhyn, Colonel Humberston, Mr. Townshend Mainwaring, Venerable Archdeacon Foulkes, Mr. P. H. Chambers, Professor McKenna Hughes, and Mr. John Churton. Lord Penrhyn gave £100 to the funds.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

ANIMAL LIFE AND PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY.

Dr. P. Martin Duncan, F.R.S., Professor of Geology, King's College, London, on Thursday week gave the first of a course of six lectures on Palaeontology, with especial reference to extinct animals and the physical geography of their time. He began by stating that considerable portions of the crust of the earth are composed of the remains of animals and plants, the relics of faunas and floras which once flourished on the globe. They are termed organic remains or fossils, and present remarkable resemblances to the preservable parts of the animals and plants of our own time—that is to say, in regard to the shells and internal and external skeletons. This resemblance necessitates the inclusion of fossil forms amongst recent kinds in every natural history classification which is founded upon the belief in the continuity of the laws of life. The Professor then pointed out that although fossils so closely resemble modern relics, they differ in their hardness and weight, which is due to the original shell, bone, or coral having been replaced by other mineral substances, a process analogous to the substitution of one mineral for another, such as quartz for sulphide of iron. Fossils found in strata which were the results of the denudation of the land are the relics of the particular fauna or flora of a definite physical geography; and as strata are consecutive, so there has been a succession of aspects of nature and of life. This relation between deposits or strata to the physical geography of their time the Professor illustrated by various examples, proving that geology is really the history of successive physical geographies; and he then proceeded to show the connection between the succession of living things on the earth and the grandest phenomena of inorganic nature. Two series of forces acted during the geological ages—those of denudation, chiefly by the action of water; and those producing movements of the crust, due to chemical action. As examples of the physical structure of the fossils having been entirely changed, Professor Duncan referred to cases where chalk had crystallised into marble by the action of hot lava, and where the soft parts of mollusca and wood had been replaced by silica; and he commented upon the conclusive evidence of three consecutive stages of physical geography given by fossils found in the strata, composed of a succession of clay, sand, and chalk, in the neighbourhood of London. The forces which produced the internal movements of the crust of the earth, he said, initiated and concluded geological ages, produced or terminated physical geographies, and limited the roaming powers of certain animals, and established distributional provinces. The nature of these provinces, modern and ancient, was explained and illustrated by reference to the natural history, palaeontology, and alterations in the physical geography of New Zealand, Australia, and South America. Amongst the animals specially commented on were the ostrich, the little apteryx, and the gigantic fossil dinosaur, or moa, of New Zealand; the kangaroo and the large fossil marsupials of Australia; and the sloth and its ancient relatives, the megatherium and mylodon, in South America: the chief part of these being represented in large diagrams.

ACOUSTIC TRANSPARENCY AND OPACITY OF THE ATMOSPHERE.

Professor Tyndall, at the first weekly evening meeting of the season, Friday, the 16th inst., gave a discourse founded on the results of experiments and observations on fog-signals, conducted at the South Foreland in 1873, under the auspices of the Corporation of the Trinity House, of which he is the scientific adviser, and to whose officers, Mr. Douglas, the engineer, Mr. Ayres, his assistant, and Mr. Edwards, the private secretary of the deputy master, he expressed great obligations. After mentioning that in the ten years ending with 1872, 273 ships had been totally lost on the coast of the United Kingdom through fog and thick weather, the Professor gave interesting details of the experiments which began on May 19, on board the Irene, the proper apparatus, such as brass trumpets and air and steam whistles, having been previously mounted on the top and at the bottom of the South Foreland Cliff, under the direction of the Fog-Signal Committee. The maximum distance at which sound was heard was, on May 19, 3½ miles; on May 20, at first, not more than 3 or 4 miles—afterwards 6 miles; on June 2, 3 miles' range ran up to about 6 miles; on June 3, a dark and lowering day, range 9 miles; there were violent rain showers. June 10, range of 9 miles; on this day there was an extraordinary sinking of the sounds observed on the Dover side of the Foreland. At a mile distance they rapidly fell; at 2 miles they were inaudible, and guns fired were also unheard at the same distance. After close investigation the Professor attributed this weakening of the sound, partly to what he termed the acoustic shadow due to the instruments being cut off by a projection of the cliff near the station, and partly to the interference of the sound reflected from the cliff with the direct sound. In establishing a fog-signal station such matters, he said, must be carefully attended to. On June 25 the range of sound was 5½ miles, and on June 26, 10 miles—the former with the wind in its favour, the latter with the wind against it. This proved that there must be something besides wind which determines sound-ranges. On July 1, through a thick haze with opposing wind, sounds were heard at 12½ miles, twice the distance of the transmission on a clear day with favourable winds. On July 2, Professor Tyndall said, an acoustic darkness, as it were, settled upon the atmosphere, the range being only 4 miles. The fluctuation thus had been from 3½ to 12½ miles, without any apparent meteorological cause. On July 3, a glorious morning with calm air and smooth sea, nothing was heard at 2 miles' distance; the puffs of the guns were seen as in dumb show. This led the Professor to conclude that the common belief that a clear, calm atmosphere is the best vehicle of sound, and that optical and acoustic transparency go together, as published by Dr. Derham in the Philosophical Transactions for 1708, and generally received by scientific men ever since, is quite erroneous. After deep reflection, he was led to conjecture the true cause of this stoppage of the transmission of the sound. As he stood on the deck of the Irene, considering what could so destroy the homogeneity of the atmosphere as to enable it to quench in so short a distance so vast a body of sound, he became conscious of the great heat of the sun. Beams of equal power were falling on the sea, producing copious evaporation. That the vapour generated should so rise and mingle with the air as to form an absolutely homogeneous mixture he considered highly improbable. It would be sure to streak and mottle the atmosphere with spaces in which the air would be in different degrees saturated, or it might be displaced by the vapour. At the limiting surfaces of these spaces, though invisible, the Professor saw that we should have the conditions necessary to the production of partial echoes and the consequent waste of sound. This explanation was tested and confirmed on the same day. By the intervention of a cloud, which checked the formation of vapour, the audibility of the sounds was increased. As the sun fell and the formation of vapour ceased, the sounds were heard—eventually at 7½ miles' distance. This echoing from aerial surfaces was demonstrated before the audience by an entirely new experiment, devised, at the Professor's suggestion, by his assistant, Mr. Cottrell. The sound of a bell transmitted through a tube filled with perfectly homogeneous common air strongly agitated the sensitive flame employed as a test; but when, by an ingenious arrangement, alternate layers of coal-gas and carbonic acid were allowed to cross the tube at right angles to the direction of the sound-wave, the sound was reflected by the limiting surfaces of this non-homogeneous medium, and the flame became quiescent. This reflection of sound is analogous to that of light in foam, clouds, snowballs, common salt, and to all transparent substances in powder. In the concluding portion of his discourse Professor Tyndall stated that, by recent experiments on the Serpentine during foggy and clear days, he had conclusively proved that the non-homogeneity of the air was the entire cause of the stoppage of the transmission of sound, quite irrespective of fog, haze, rain, or other supposed causes. Among the apparatus employed in the coast experiments was a very large syren, willingly lent by the Government of the United States. The secretary, Mr. William Spottiswoode, LL.D., Vice-President, was in the chair.

KANT'S PHILOSOPHY AND LIFE.

Professor G. Croom Robertson, of University College, London, gave the first of a course of four lectures on Kant's Critical Philosophy on Saturday last. He began by pointing out Kant's importance in the present day in Germany among men of science and philosophers, from Johannes Müller to Helmholtz, who, although not his professed followers, recognise him as one whose thought could grasp the principles of scientific inquiry, and even forecast some of its issues. In France a modified form of his doctrine was adopted by Cousin, and even Comte has not been insensible to his power. In England, also, the interest in Kant is a striking feature of the present philosophical movement. Nitsch (1794) and Wigram (1813-23) in vain set forth the new system; but gradually Hamilton, Mansel, Whewell, and others have familiarised the English mind with the main principles of the system. Kant's chief work, the "Kritik of Pure Reason," and the greater part of his ethical writings have been translated; and workers in Trinity College, Dublin, have expounded his doctrine in a coherent form. Kant was a thinker of unsurpassed reach and power; but he strongly vindicated for the positive sciences a domain of their own. In this he was anticipated by Bacon, Locke, Berkeley, and Hume, who spurred on positive inquiry on the basis of experience. But by the side of these were thinkers of a different cast, such as Descartes and Leibnitz, whose philosophy was no sober inquiry into the condition of human knowledge, joined to the practice of experimental research, but a succession of bold attempts to reason out the All. According to them, there was nothing to be known that could not be rationally evolved from within the mind. . . . But now philosophy has reverted to its original and proper function of carrying disinterested inquiry to the uttermost of human conceiving. The natural sciences have grown up as a legitimate and fruitful system of search into the different aspects or departments of nature, proceeding upon experience, and having no higher object than to explain and control it. This was what Descartes and his fellows did not see or would not allow; but Kant understood it, and is thus distinguished from the school of mere speculative metaphysicians. He made no pretence of stemming the resistless tide of scientific research, but rather desired to guide it into effective channels. Yet he opposed the English thinkers when they sought to explain all knowledge as developed from particular experiences, and he made it a great part of his philosophic task to explain from the native constitution of the mind how experience, to be truly so called, could come to pass; and in doing so displayed a depth of insight and width of intellectual grasp never before shown. The course of modern thought may now be looked upon as a long struggle waged between the rival principles of inquiry, named Reason and Experience. Kant could not entirely accept the speculative doctrine of innate ideas, ousting experience and making it superfluous, nor could he accept the position of the English experimentalists, working without system and without discernment of the true issues to be met. Hence his new manner of inquiry, named Critical, into the foundations of human knowledge has been regarded as the reconciliation of all the differences. But the struggle still continues, and the dominant experimentalism, even as transformed by Mr. Herbert Spencer, has come face to face, at all points, with Kant's doctrine, and has stood the encounter, but, said Professor Robertson, has not secured its future. Therefore Kant is now specially important. The latter part of the lecture was chiefly devoted to a sketch of Kant's life and characteristics, and the development of his philosophical opinions. He was born at Königsberg in 1724, being the grandson of a Scotch tradesman named Cant. He was educated for the Church, but declined to take orders, and devoted himself to the study of philosophy. He became a house-tutor, lived long in modest poverty, and only became a professor in 1756. He published his "Kritik of Pure Reason" in 1781; and, after publishing invaluable speculations in almost every department of knowledge, he ceased to lecture, at the age of seventy-three. Still making calls on his brain he aged rapidly, sank into utter helplessness, and died in 1804. To his intellectual powers he added singular nobility of character, and in all the affairs of life he displayed an unwavering rectitude and manly independence.

MECHANISM OF RESPIRATION.

Professor Rutherford's second lecture, on Tuesday last, was devoted to the explanation of the muscular and nervous mechanism concerned in respiration. With the aid of preparations, diagrams, and models, he showed that our ordinary inspiration is entirely due to muscular action; while an ordinary expiration is apparently the result of the elastic recoil of the lungs, ribs, and costal cartilages, and also of the weight of the chest. He explained the dispute regarding the action of the portions of the internal intercostal muscles between the bony parts of the ribs; some physiologists believing that it produces expiration, others that it causes inspiration. With the aid of elastic bands and the ribs rightly placed in the thorax of an animal, the Professor demonstrated that, as Haller long ago maintained, these muscles draw up the ribs, when the ribs above are more fixed (as they normally are) than those below. The phrenic, intercostal, and pneumo-gastric nerves were then described, and the manner in which they act explained; and an instrument for registering the motions of the chest was shown in action.

Sir Julius Benedict will give a discourse on Weber and his Times at the next Friday evening meeting, Jan. 30.

The Right Rev. Dr. Keane, Roman Catholic Bishop of Cloyne, died, on Thursday week, at his residence at Queenstown. He had been suffering some time from paralytic seizure, consequent on overwork.

Early on Sunday morning a lamentable wreck occurred on the south-west shore of St. Mary's, the largest of the Scilly Isles. The captain and eight of the twenty hands on board the Minnehaha were drowned, as was also the pilot, ten men only getting safely ashore.

MUSIC.

The resumption of the Crystal Palace Saturday afternoon concerts and of the Monday Popular Concerts last week, may be looked on as the first important signs of the musical activity which speedily follows the brief lull of the Christmas holidays. The event last referred to has already been noticed, and we have now to speak of the twelfth of those concerts, which, when completed, will form the eighteenth series of the excellent Sydenham performances.

Last Saturday's Crystal Palace Concert included some orchestral pieces of special interest, two of them having been novelties in this country. To speak of the latter first, Mr. H. Hugo Pierson's concert-overture, entitled "As You Like it," is one of several such works composed in illustration of some of Shakespeare's plays. The piece now referred to contains some very effective orchestral writing, and many of the themes are characterised by much grace and beauty. There is, however, a want of order and design in their arrangement, with a general vagueness of structure, that somewhat militate against the effect of the whole as a composition. Nevertheless, it was acceptable as a specimen of the productions of an Englishman who was highly esteemed in Germany, where he had resided for many years up to the time of his death, at Leipzig, twelve months ago. With the exception of his oratorio, "Jerusalem," and portions of that entitled "Hezekiah" (both produced at Norwich Festivals), but little is known here of the late Mr. Pierson's music, further selections from which might hereafter justifiably be introduced in our concert programmes. A second novelty at Saturday's concert was a charming little orchestral piece from Taubert's music to the German version of "The Tempest," in which the chess-playing scene of the lovers is converted into a music lesson on the lute. The movement referred to is entitled "Liebesliedchen," and is in the style of a serenade. The stringed instruments are used "pizzicato," the principal theme (the "Love Song") recurring as an oboe solo, in which M. Dubucq's fine tone and style were admirably displayed. The gentle grace and charm of the piece were generally recognised, and the encore which it received was replied to by a repetition of the latter portion. Splendid performances of Schubert's great symphony in C (No. 9), Mozart's overture to "Le Nozze di Figaro," and Mendelssohn's to "Die Hochzeit des Camacho," completed the instrumental portion of the concert, which included vocal solos by Madame Patey, Miss Anna Williams, and Signor Agnesi. Miss Williams gained the prize in one of the classes for solo singing at the Crystal Palace National Music Meetings in 1872; since when she has been studying in Italy—to good purpose, as evidenced by her rendering of Puccini's cavatina, "Ah! con lui," and Handel's air "From mighty kings," in both of which the singer was much applauded. Mr. Manns was warmly welcomed, as usual, on his reappearance in the orchestra.

At last Monday's Popular Concert Dr. Hans von Bülow was again the pianist—his solo performances on this occasion having been Bach's organ prelude and fugue in A minor (transcribed by Liszt) and the first of Mendelssohn's six preludes and fugues, op. 35, his performance of which elicited great applause and three recalls of the player. The programme included Molique's pianoforte trio in B flat, in which Dr. Bülow was associated with Madame Norman-Néruda and Signor Piatti, and Beethoven's sonata for piano and violin in G (from op. 30), the latter instrument in the hands of the lady just named, who was the leading violinist in Schubert's quartet in A minor; the other executants having been Mr. L. Ries, Herr Straus, and Signor Piatti. Miss Enriques was the vocalist, and Sir Julius Benedict conducted.

The Saturday performances were resumed last week, when Madame Norman-Néruda, as leading violinist, and Mr. Charles Hallé as pianist, reappeared; and the same artists are announced for the concert of this (Saturday) afternoon.

The British Orchestral Society began its second season, at St. James's Hall, on Thursday evening, when the programme comprised Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony; Sir W. S. Bennett's overture, "Les Naiades," and that to Cherubini's "Les Deux Journées"; a new "saltarello" for orchestra, by Mr. J. H. Clarke; Mozart's concerto in E flat for two pianofortes (Mr. W. Macfarren and Miss Linda Scates the pianists); and vocal pieces.

The seventh subscription concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society took place on Thursday evening, with a programme of high interest, although devoid of novelty—Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" ("Lobgesang") and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" having been the works selected. The solo-singers announced were Madame Corani, Miss Sterling, Mr. Cummings, and Signor Agnesi.

Two performances of high interest took place simultaneously last (Friday) evening, of which, as of Thursday night's concerts, we must necessarily defer our notice until next week. At Exeter Hall, Dr. Crotch's oratorio, "Palestine," was revived, after having been unheard for many years. At the same time, at St. James's Hall, the third of the second series of the concerts of the Wagner Society was given, with a programme including (for the first time at these concerts) choral extracts from Wagner's operas.

The success which attended the production of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," at the recent Bristol Festival, was recorded at the time. The oratorio was to be produced—again under the direction of Mr. Charles Hallé—at Manchester on Thursday last. As previously mentioned, the work is to be given by the Sacred Harmonic Society during its present season.

THEATRES.

Early as it is in the theatrical season, and before the pantomimes can have been all visited, the various managements show themselves vigilant in the preparation of further novelties. We have at the Gaiety the oddest of burlesques, by H. J. Byron, on "Guy Fawkes"; and at the Royalty an adaptation of Mrs. Edwards's novel, "Ought We to Visit Her?" Mrs. Edwards, with the aid of Mr. W. S. Gilbert, has dramatised her own romance. Unfortunately, it is one of those equivocal productions which now too frequently appear, and of which so much has been said in censure. Curiously enough, on Saturday, when "Ought We to Visit Her?" was produced, the moral points were taken up by the gallery, and condemned. Society is not yet corrupt at its roots. The classes that lie at its base have not yet made those nice distinctions by which the superior orders have grown accustomed to palliate their guilty sentimentalities. They are rough but honest, and as yet their conscience is single-eyed, and has not learned to trifle with duty. They have stern, earnest work to do, and no leisure for refinements which enfeeble while they lend factitious graces to the comparatively indolent. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Theobald (Mr. Peveril and Miss Henrietta Hodson) represent the sentimentalists of the time, who, weary of convention, hover on the brink of the opposite, and are in danger of the precipice which it too frequently conceals. The lady has been formerly a ballet dancer, and has yet a sister on the stage and an uncle in the orchestra. The family of the Crosbys, belonging to the class of country gentry, naturally think that they ought not to associate with such people, but prefer the society of princes and countesses—a truly snobbish feeling; and, being at a foreign hotel, as naturally look out for such privileged parties. They mistake the Theobalds for aristocratic people, and particularly Mrs. Theobald and her little one for a Russian Countess and her child. Discovering their error, they alter their behaviour, and are made to act very contemptibly. But Rawdon Crosbie, the son (Mr. Charles Wyndham), takes a different view, and gets up a flirtation with Mrs. Theobald, to which she lends herself. Her husband, too, pairs off with a certain Lady Rose Golightly (Miss Maggie Brennan); and we begin to fear that a grievous scandal will ensue. But just as these improprieties are about to culminate in a change in the dream takes place, and all parties resume their normal social positions. The success of the piece may be fairly ascribed to the excellent acting and the costly scenery.

Of Mr. Byron's extravaganza the success is mainly dependent on Mr. Toole's eccentric acting. He is, of course, Guy Faux, and such a guy as was never paralleled on any fifth of November. The author has revelled in fun and pun, and caricatured history in the most ridiculous manner. All this, with the aid of some sterling jokes, many excellent dances, and some capital songs, enforce a favourable verdict. Mr. Lionel Brough, too, as a rebel collier, and Miss Farren, as Lord Montague, conduce greatly to the particular effect of the scenes in which they appear. Altogether, this is the merriest drama of the class to which it belongs which Mr. Byron has written.

On Wednesday night Lord Lytton's "Richelieu," which derives new life from the excellent acting of Mr. Henry Irving, was performed for the hundredth time at the Lyceum.

LADY BURDETT-COUTTS AT EDINBURGH.

The Lord Provost and Town Council of Edinburgh presented this charitable lady with the freedom of their city on Thursday week. The ceremony took place in the Music-Hall, which was decorated for the occasion with hangings of red cloth, a range of greenhouse plants, the unionjack at each end, and a trophy of flags above the portrait of her grandfather, a Coutts who was Lord Provost of Edinburgh in 1742. This portrait was copied from one by Allan Ramsay, and was given to the city by her Ladyship. A numerous company of ladies and gentlemen filled the Music-Hall. Several pieces were played on the organ by Professor Oakeley, while awaiting the commencement of the proceedings. The Town Council, in their official robes, sat at the back of the platform. The Lord Provost, preceded by his mace-bearer and sword-bearer, led in Lady Burdett-Coutts, who was welcomed with hearty cheering. She wore the badge and other decorations of the Turners' Company of London. The Lord Provost took the chair, having on his right hand Lady Burdett-Coutts, and beyond her Mrs. Brown, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Countess of Rothes, the Hon. Waldegrave Leslie, Mr. Alexander Sinclair, Mrs. W. Chambers, Dr. William Chambers, and Bailie Methven. On the left hand of the Provost were the Right Hon. Dr. Lyon Playfair, Postmaster-General; Mr. Harris, interim Town Clerk; Bailies Cousin and Tawse, Dean of Guild Craig, Treasurer Colston, Convener Robertson, and Councillor Falshaw. The Duke of Argyll had intended to be present, but was prevented by indisposition. The proceedings were simply conducted in the ordinary form. The Lord Provost first addressed the company, reminding them of former occasions upon which the honours of the city had been conferred upon famous persons—Ben Jonson, when he visited Drummond at Hawthornden; more recently, Sir Walter Scott, Mr. Disraeli, Mr. Bright, Sir James Simpson, Lord Napier of Magdala, Charles Dickens, Lord Macaulay, Dr. Livingstone, and the artist, David Roberts. He observed that the same compliment was bestowed on Mr. Thomas Coutts, the London banker, her Ladyship's grandfather, in 1813; and he described her own claims to public esteem, commending her exemplary beneficence and zeal for the relief of human suffering; while her efforts to prevent cruelty to dumb animals were likewise not forgotten. The Town Clerk read the burgess ticket, with the minutes of the Town Council voting her the freedom of the city. This was presented to her Ladyship by the Lord Provost with some further appropriate observations. Lady Burdett-Coutts made a graceful, modest, and decided little speech in reply, expressing her sincere thanks. The Lord Provost then called upon the whole company to stand up and to give "three cheers for the youngest burgess of Edinburgh." After the performance of two more anthems on the organ the meeting separated. In the evening the Lord Provost, magistrates, and town councillors were entertained by Lady Burdett-Coutts with a banquet at the Palace Hotel.

GREAT FIRE AT LEITH.

A fire broke out, in the evening of yesterday week, in the extensive flour-mills at Leith belonging to Messrs. Alexander and Robert Tod. The flames raged with intense fury, and shortly after midnight the extensive range of buildings was completely destroyed. The damage is estimated at from £200,000 to £250,000. The greater part of it is covered by insurance. In consequence of the destruction of the mills nearly 400 men have been thrown out of work. A sketch of the scene presented by the conflagration is reproduced in our Engraving.

Warwick was, on Monday, enlivened by a foxchase, Reynard leading the pack through the streets of the venerable city.

The annual meeting and annual dinner of the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce were held on Monday—under the presidency of the Earl of Morley. The proceedings abounded with congratulations at the increasing prosperity of the port, especially at the return of the Cape mail-steamer to Plymouth. Mr. W. Morrison, M.P., urged the formation of a commercial insurance association in connection with chambers of commerce for the protection and prosecution of offenders, especially of fraudulent bankrupts.

A new Atlantic cable is to be completed during the year, with appliances which are the results of experiments made by Mr. Highton, the eminent electrician, on whom the Society of Arts has conferred a special medal for discoveries in telegraphy. The use of light cables for submarine telegraphs has been advocated by Mr. Varley and other great authorities in scientific circles; and the new cable will weigh only 1½ cwt. per nautical mile in water, will sustain twenty miles of its own length, and will be covered only with prepared manilla, which (unlike iron wire and hemp) is practically indestructible in salt water. The electric current will be so concentrated at the point of indication by the use of magnetic batteries that distinct rapid and powerful signals can be obtained by one tenth of the electric force now in use, while the immense saving in construction, laying, and maintenance will reduce the price of Atlantic messages to one fourth of present rates.

THE REREDOS AT EXETER.

Reports have lately appeared of the litigation between the Dean and Chapter of Exeter Cathedral, on the one hand, and the Bishop of Exeter on the other, upon the legality and propriety of their erection of a new reredos, designed by Sir Gilbert Scott, the architect of the cathedral restorations. Our illustration shows the design of this work of art, which has been executed by Messrs. Farmer and Brindley, sculptors, of Westminster Bridge-road, London. The expense is borne by two individual donors—namely, Dr. Blackall and the Rev. Chancellor Harington, who has already given £6000 to the cathedral restorations. The summit of the reredos rises to a height of 22 ft. above the floor of the choir, the materials used in its construction consisting of marble and Derbyshire alabaster, with precious stones. The central compartment is occupied by a sculptured group in alabaster representing the Ascension, the figure of the Saviour being 3½ ft. in height. The figure of St. Peter, to whom the cathedral is dedicated, has a prominent position; on each side of the Saviour appear angels. The Transfiguration and the Descent of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost are also represented. The reredos occupies about a third of the space at the east end of the choir. The central compartment alone cost £900, and the estimate of £1625 for the whole work will be considerably exceeded. The restoration of the edifice is progressing satisfactorily, the cost, independent of the reredos and other special works, being set down at £40,000.

Sir Samuel Baker was entertained at a banquet in the Pavilion by the municipality of Brighton on Monday evening—The Mayor presiding. In responding to the toast of his health, Sir Samuel Baker gave an elaborate account of the objects and progress of his expedition up the Nile. There was a brilliant assembly, and Sir Samuel's reception was in the highest degree flattering.

REGATTA AT VIGO.

During the stay of the Channel Squadron at Vigo, on the last day of the old year and the first three days of the new, its officers and crews had their customary regatta, which has become a favourite institution of the fleet. The first day was occupied by the rowing-matches, the second by the sailing-matches, and the third day was appointed for the general sailing competition for a prize cup given by Rear-Admiral Hornby. The money subscribed and expended for prizes was nearly £100. All the arrangements were planned and carried out by an able and zealous committee; but the great sailing-race of the third day, Friday, the 2nd inst., proved a nullity from the wind falling off in the afternoon, so that it had to be resumed on the next day. Forty-five boats of all sizes, from the dingy with its boys to the launch with its crew of experienced sailors, engaged in the competition. The weather was fine on the first day, and the start, at ten o'clock in the morning, was favoured by a gentle breeze. The course was twelve miles, with a time allowance for difference of size and rig. Unfortunately, as we have observed, the wind failed towards evening, and the race was necessarily given up. On the Saturday morning there was a little more wind, but less sunshine, and even some rain. The boats again started well for the race, but another mischance prevented its being concluded. The Rear-Admiral's barge, sailed by Flag-Lieutenant Bunce, was capsized by a sudden puff of wind, at the time when it seemed to be sure of winning. The men in this boat escaped with a ducking; but it was provided by the rules that, in case of any boat capsizing, the race should be stopped. The contest was, therefore, left undecided; and as one ship of the squadron, her Majesty's ship Triumph, had to leave Vigo for Gibraltar that afternoon, it was agreed to postpone the final race till she rejoined her consorts. We have to thank Mr. G. H. Weekes, engineer of H.M.S. Agincourt, for a sketch of the regatta.

NEW BOOKS.

AMONG THE MUSES.

A mournful, wailing note, to which all sympathetic hearts will respond, is struck in what it has seemed good to call the "Overture" to The Disciples, by Harriet Eleanor Hamilton King (Henry S. King and Co.); for a tribute of verse inspired by and intended for Mazzini never reached his living presence: before the book, "which he commanded," could be placed in his hand or laid at his feet, his spirit had fled to the place reserved for all that is immortal of illustrious patriots. He, then, is the master whose disciples are made, in the volume under consideration, the themes of sad, for the most part, but in some respects joyous and triumphant song. Jacopo Ruffini, Ugo Bassi, Agostino Milano, and Baron Giovanni Nicotera are the names of the disciples; and the hour to which the singer's memory chiefly recurs is that proverbially darkest just preceding the dawn—the dawn of liberty for Italy and the Italians. The dates referred to are 1833, 1849, 1856, and 1858, together with some intervening and some subsequent years. The principal characteristics of the writer's muse are intense, passionate feeling and generous instincts, regarding self-sacrifice as the noblest heroism and scorning to give up hope, even when the sacrifice of self is seemingly most hopeless. To properly appreciate the poems a reader must catch something of the writer's own enthusiasm—must become for a while Italianised. Of the external graces, pictorial beauties, attractions which belong to what may be described as the spectacular and instrumental effects of poetry, when, by the magic of poetic power and the cunning manipulation of language, a reader sees and hears, as it were, upon the very page before him, the loveliness or the awfulness of Nature and her scenery, the clash of steel, the thunder of artillery, the shock of armies, the strains of martial music, a burst of triumphant or plaintive melody, and the like, the writer has apparently not been especially ambitious. There are in the longest poem, dedicated to the memory of Ugo Bassi, passages in which fancy and diction have been employed, not unsuccessfully, in the fashion alluded to; but, on the whole, one would say that the writer was too much overwhelmed by the emotional to bestow much pains upon the picturesque, too much lost in contemplation of painful fact to dwell long amidst the airy regions of pleasant fancy, too much oppressed with a sense of the direful to waste much time upon the tuneful. Let it not be imagined, however, that any special fault, in respect of versification, is to be inferred; the smaller poems are noticeable for a bold, free swing, and have a sufficiently melodious rhythm; and the longest poem, though somewhat monotonous and, by reason of detail, tedious, is by no means devoid of harmonious numbers: all that is intended is to give readers due warning that the book requires of them more heart than ear, more soul to be moved than senses to be gratified. It is sad to know that the writer's state of health has caused one poem and the contemplated series of poems to be left incomplete.

Italy and her yearnings and her struggles, whilst her liberation and unification still fell short of fulfilment for lack of the city resting, queenlike, on her seven hills, have likewise furnished the main subject of Rome or Death! by Alfred Austin (William Blackwood and Sons), a poem in which the treatment shows that the greatest possible attention has been paid to just those very points which seem to have been least regarded by the author of "The Disciples." The romantic predominates over the real, the pictorial over the emotional, the material over the spiritual, the heroism of the beau sabreur over the heroism of the gentle martyr, the lusty lay over the plaintive dirge. Moreover, in choice and manipulation of metre and in studious arrangement of diction the author has clearly shown a disposition to leave nothing undone, as regards a musical variety of sound, whereby the reader may be lured and caught as the Siren was fabled to catch the mariner. And in this respect his success is likely to be considerable, even if exceptions should now and then be taken to the occasional clumsiness of the very fashionable but not always acceptable compound epithet. The poem commences with great spirit, which is well sustained throughout; and though the stanzas may appear to many readers to lack a little of that grace and subtle influence which pervaded the whole of "Madonna's Child," yet it is probable that the somewhat higher flight now attempted and the somewhat robust nature of the theme will amply compensate for the smaller measure of those characteristics. In "Rome or Death!" are introduced personages whose first appearance upon any poetical stage is made in "Madonna's Child;" and, therefore, to properly appreciate the former it will be advisable, if not absolutely necessary, to previously take the pleasure, as it certainly cannot fail to be, of becoming acquainted with the latter. That "Rome or Death!" in which the campaign of Mentana is vigorously described, is a fine, stirring composition may be confidently asserted; and, for that very reason, it may be considered the more justifiable to ask a few mild questions suggested by the very first three stanzas. One: Can "rhymes" be correctly said to "resound" with "fire"? Two: If you write, "Muse! help me weak—who helped the strong of yore," do you not commit a little grammatical error, which, presumptuously, transfers to yourself the power intended to be ascribed to the Muse? Three: If you write, "Smile upon me, that erst upon them smiled," ought you not to mean that you smiled upon them, or else to plead guilty of a blunder? These and others like them are small blemishes, but an admirable poem would have been still more admirable without them. Rhyme and rhythm, however, are probably too exacting.

Pretty, dainty, elegant, and airy, but healthy, bright, lively, and a little saucy, such as Catullus might have written in his more refined moods and Lesbia might have read to a sprightly, modest sister, are some of the verses contained in Vignettes in Rhyme, by Austin Dobson (Henry S. King and Co.); whilst others, quite as neat and delicate, are of the pensive, melancholy sort, or, tinged with a suspicion of satire, call to mind the flavour of bitter almonds. Trifles as such productions seem, and easily as they are supposed to have slipped from the pen, the writing of them is a gift—a gift which, it has often been said, is dying out from among us; but that it is not yet dead and gone beyond recall is quite evident from the pleasant little volume hereby recommended to notice. It is by no means the sort of book one would expect to be looked upon with a favourable eye by ladies and gentlemen of uncompromisingly practical views, by intellectual star-gazers, by metaphysicians and persons concerned about nothing more or less than the eternal fitness of things; but by those who do not care to have their minds always on the stretch, who like to see Apollo with his bow unbent entertaining the simple Graces and the sportive Nymphs, who love to mingle the gay with the grave and the playful with the tender, who own that little things may have their own inherent grace, the volume will be received, and deservedly received, with a welcome.

A very grateful sensation, as of having been removed from the hothouse, in which so much modern verse is apparently forced, into the open air, is produced by a few pages of The Shepherd's Garden, by William Dayies (Sampson Low and Co.). It is quite refreshing to find oneself in Arcadia again, among shepherds piping merrily on oaten reeds and stealing kisses from pretty shepherdesses, and anon complaining that, though Celia can find a heart of pity for Cupid, who wounds her deeply, she has none for the faithful swain who would lay down his life for her sake. A good, honest, old-fashioned, cheery song in honour of the plough, too, has an invigorating effect; and many pretty conceits, quite in the ancient style, concerning Love and the behaviour he adopts towards rustics of both sexes, smack of a much-regretted past. Moreover, the writer is perfectly intelligible, which is more than can be said of many a highly-esteemed modern poet.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Boosey and Co. have brought out two volumes that will be widely acceptable to the admirers of classical vocal music. One is a selection of between seventy and eighty of the songs of Robert Schumann, the other a collection of Sacred Songs, Ancient and Modern. Schumann's charming "lieder" are given with the original German words and an English adaptation by M. X. Hayes. The book of sacred pieces contains specimens from the classical composers of the past, many others being contributed by living celebrities, some having been supplied expressly for this publication. Both volumes are in that handy large octavo form adopted by Messrs. Boosey and Co. in their Royal Edition of operas and their collections of national songs, and the price is fixed at a similarly low rate.

Messrs. Boosey and Co. have also issued, in the same convenient octavo size, a neat and inexpensive edition of M. Charles Lecocq's popular comic opera, "La Fille de Madame Angot," with the original text, and an English adaptation by Mr. H. J. Byron. From the same publishers we have also the new songs of Mr. F. H. Cowen, "Night and Morning" and "One Morning, oh! so early," recently sung with such success by Miss Wynne, as already recorded.

The first and second divisions of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" have been published by the house of Lamborn Cock in a neat and cheap large octavo edition, with an English text translated and adapted by Helen F. Johnston, who rendered the same office for Bach's St. Matthew "Passion Music" in its first performance in this country by the London Bach Society. The portions of the "Christmas Oratorio" here given are all that refer to the celebration of that period, the four following parts having reference to subsequent Church festivals. Of the sublimity and beauty of the music we spoke in noticing its performance at a concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society last month.

From Messrs. Ashdown and Parry we have some contributions to pianoforte music by a composer whose works are always interesting and welcome, multitudinous as they are. In Heller's new series (the third) of pieces entitled "Dans les Bois" we find six movements as full of charm and variety as those of the two previous collections. In these new pieces some fanciful allusion to "Der Freischütz" would seem to be intended by the prefix of the names of characters thereof—Max, Agathe, Caspar, Annette—but no evident musical quotations are given from Weber's opera. The grace and charm of Herr Heller's new work are especially remarkable, as it is classed as op. 136, proof being hereby given that productiveness by no means necessarily implies exhaustion.

Messrs. R. Cocks and Co. have issued Mr. Brinley Richards's popular national song, "Let the Hills Resound," in various forms and editions—among others, in a cheap octavo, as a four-part song; as a vocal solo, with pianoforte accompaniment; and also as a solo for that instrument, arranged by the composer. The same firm has recently published some agreeable vocal pieces. Mr. A. S. Gatty's song, "The Open Window" (words by Longfellow), will suit mezzo-soprano voices of moderate range, as will, also, the song entitled "My old Mate and Me," by the lady formerly known as Miss M. Lindsay; "Shadowland," by Signor Ciro Pinsuti; and Mr. Wrighton's song, "Be happy and never despair."

We are always glad to receive fresh productions from that graceful composer, Mr. T. M. Mudie, whose pleasing new pianoforte pieces, "A Maiden's Dream," and "Musing, a Reverie" (published by Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co.), will be very acceptable to teachers and pupils. The same publishers have also issued a transcription for the pianoforte, by Mr. Berthold Tours, of the popular air, "C'est L'Espagne," from Offenbach's "Les Bayards," which is very effectively treated, without presenting any great difficulty to the executant. The name of the amateur composer, the Countess of Charlemont, again appears to a song issued by Messrs. Cramer, entitled "Up-hill," the melody of which is capable of being made the vehicle of much plaintive expression. The consecutive octaves between the voice part and the bass of the accompaniment (end of page 2 and beginning of page 3) are probably a mere oversight, as they might easily have been avoided. "I dream of thee still," song, by C. H. R. Marriott, and "The Wanderer's Return," ballad, by Charlotte C. Gilbert (same publishers), have the merit of clearly-defined, pleasing melody, and both are available for voices of limited range.

Messrs. Duff and Stewart are active and successful providers of novelties for drawing-room vocalists. Among their recent productions are a set of songs by Mr. J. L. Hatton, including "A bird sang in a hawthorn-tree," in which a well-sustained melody is contrasted with a bright accompaniment; "Blossoms," a pleasing musical reflection of the anticipations of spring; "Sing, nor let one note of sadness," a pretty melody, very gracefully accompanied; "The Stream—a Reverie," in which a feeling of calm repose is well expressed; and "Rippling Waves," highly suggestive of a gently flowing current. All these pieces are favourable specimens of Mr. Hatton's well-known powers as a vocal writer. In "The Child and the Skylark" Mr. Lindsay Sloper has produced a very effective song, with a flute obligato added to the pianoforte accompaniment, a combination that cannot fail to please. From Messrs. Duff and Stewart we have also a brilliant "Tarantella di Bravura" for the pianoforte, by Mr. Charles Bradley, who has succeeded in giving interest to a much-worn dance form. It is well written for the instrument, and will afford pleasant and profitable practice.

As the dancing season is not yet (query, is it ever?) exhausted, we may here point to the supplies of music furnished, among others, by the well-known firm of Messrs. Hammond and Co. (formerly Julien's). From the former we have a continuation of the long series of waltzes by the renowned Viennese, Josef Gungl, who recently visited us and conducted his music at M. Rivière's promenade concerts. The pieces now referred to are "Marietta" (polka), "Hochzeitsregen," and "Tanz Metronome," the last being classed as op. 273—a sufficient sign of the composer's productiveness. Each of these has the true dance character in the marked distinctness of the several rhythms. Another name famous for dance-music is that of Johann Strauss, a large number of whose compositions have been published by Messrs. Hammond and Co., one of the latest being a capital gallop, entitled "Indigo." Other names less known are those of J. Kohler and Gustav Michaelis; a galop, "The Jubilee," by the former, and one, "Berlin," by the latter, are effective dance-pieces.

Messrs. Hammond and Co. have also issued two very graceful pianoforte pieces—"Treue Liebe" and "Stille Liebe," by Gustave Lange. Each is somewhat in the nocturno style, with graceful elaborations and ornamental passages surrounding the principal theme, the execution being much facilitated by the copious fingering supplied. "Serenade Tyrolienne," by F. Bendel (same publishers), will be welcome to teachers and pupils, as a pleasing piece in which the leading fingering is supplied.

From the house of Joseph Williams we have several pianoforte pieces, among which are, by Mr. Harold Thomas, a paraphrase of detached themes from Mendelsohn's "Hymn of Praise," effective fantasias on subjects from Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor," and Rossini's "Mosé." Mr. Smallwood's "Novara," "Rochelle," "Italian arietta" ("Non mi voglio Maritar"), and his transcription of the ballads "She wore a wreath of roses" and "Sweet Home," will be found very useful as well as pleasing to young pupils.

"Twilight Bells," "Sunlit Spray," "Merry Measures" (caprice à la danse), "Merry Christmas," and "Marionette" are the titles of a series of pianoforte pieces by Edouard Dorn, published by Messrs. Augener and Co. These movements possess much grace and character, and are written with considerable skill in the art of producing a brilliant effect without severely taxing the executive powers of the player. They are all capital teaching pieces.

From Messrs. Augener we have also a "Pilgrim's March," by Mr. Scotson Clark, which has been so well received as to cause its publication in the various forms of piano solo, piano duet, for harmonium and piano, and for organ. The same publishers have also issued three very pleasing songs by Mr. J. L. Hatton, entitled, respectively, "Hope," "Fancy," the "Snow Flakes." A limited compass of voice and moderate powers of execution will suffice for all these songs, expression being the chief requisite for their interpretation.

Mr. Berthold Tours's songs, "The Maiden and the Sunbeam" and "Gone Before," published by Messrs. Evans and Co., will both be welcome to drawing-room vocalists—the first as an effective piece of musical declamation, the other as an agreeable, flowing melody, neither of them requiring a voice of more than average compass. Mr. Tours's three pianoforte pieces, "Alla Gavotte," "Alla Bourrée," and "Menuetto" (issued by the same publishers), are very clever imitations of the older forms of dance-music implied by the titles, the quaint, antique grace of which is very successfully realised.

Messrs. Enoch and Son have been contributing largely of late, both to vocal and to instrumental music. Among pieces of the former class are several songs that will doubtless find large acceptance. Franz Abt's song, "I never speak thy name aloud," although the sixth number of his op. 418, may compare with many of his previous pieces in melodious expressiveness. "Good-by," by Henry Smart, has a well-defined and coherent melody, supported by an accompaniment which, although not elaborate or difficult, shows the hand of the skilled musician. "A thousand pretty things," by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, is another proof that a genuine artist can give value and importance even to the smaller forms of his art. "A Forsaken Grave," by Madame Sainton-Dolby, is a serious ballad of that kind to which this lady used to give such effect by her expressive singing, and of which she has herself produced several successful examples. To pianoforte music Messrs. Enoch have contributed an impromptu, entitled "Atalanta," by Sir Julius Benedict, which is not only highly pleasing in itself, but is especially valuable as a study for the attainment of fluent continuity of passage-playing by the right hand.

From the house of H. Klein we have various agreeable pieces, vocal and instrumental. Among the former are Sir J. Benedict's effective song, "The Sailor's Bride;" Miss Virginia Gabriel's clever setting of words by Miss Procter, "What lack the valleys and mountains" ("A Shadow"); Mr. W. Ganz's pretty ballads, "Camellia and Rose" and "A damsel fair" (the latter of which has been sung by Mlle. Carlotta Patti)—all of which lie within a moderate compass of voice. Mr. Klein's issues of pianoforte music include "Petits Souvenirs, deux Morceaux de Genre," by Gustave Erlanger, which will be found both pleasant and improving in practice; a spirited "Grand Valse" by that powerful pianist the Chevalier de Kontaki; a graceful little fantasia, entitled "Mlle. Sophie Flora Heilbronn's own Musical Box," in which that skilful young pianist has interwoven the themes of the Mermaid's Song from "Oberon," the Fisherman's Chorus from "Mazaniello," and "Home, sweet Home."

The official declaration of the poll at Newcastle (made too late to be announced in our early edition last week) shows that 7356 electors voted for Mr. Joseph Cowen, the Liberal candidate, and 6353 for Mr. Hamond, who came forward as a Conservative.

"The Professor's Pocket-Book" for 1874 (published by Messrs. Rudall, Carte, and Rose). This manual was originated in 1871, several years after the commencement of the useful "Musical Directory," issued by the same publishers. The new numbers of both these publications again supply valuable information to the professional or amateur musician, in a comprehensive form and at a small cost. The Pocket-Book is edited by Sir Julius Benedict and Mr. Charles Mackeson, and contains, besides the usual miscellaneous matter, much that is exclusively suited to its special purpose.

As president of the Society for the Promotion of Scientific Industry, which has been founded at Manchester within the past few months, Lord Derby, yesterday week, delivered his opening address to the members. The meeting was held in the Townhall, which was filled with an influential gathering of the capitalists and manufacturers of Lancashire and Yorkshire. Among those who took an active part in the proceedings were Sir John Pakington, the Bishop of Manchester, Mr. Hugh Mason (chairman of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce), the Bishop of Salford, and the Mayors of Manchester and Salford. Incidentally, his Lordship remarked that, though England is, in a certain sense, a rich country, the average of individual income ranges very low—£30 a year for each person, or £150 for a family, being the highest estimate he had ever heard; while probably that was a good deal above the truth. He traced the peculiar circumstances of the growth of its wealth, ascribing much to the exclusive trade which Britain originally enjoyed with her colonies. He scouted the idea of foreign competition being counteracted by protective expedients. The true remedies he showed to be the development of mechanical appliances and the proper utilisation of waste power. Adverting to the apprehensions of the political economists who raise an alarm about the speedy exhaustion of our coal supply, he declared that the industrial question was not how to find motive power, but how to apply it. With this qualification, the resources that nature offered were illimitable.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE COUNTESS OF PORTARLINGTON.

The Right Honourable Alexandrina Octavia, Countess of Portarlington, who died at Emo Park on the 15th inst., was born in 1823, the second daughter of Charles William, third Marquis of Londonderry, K.G., by Frances Anne, his wife, only daughter and heiress of Sir Harry Vane Tempest, Bart. Her Ladyship married, Sept. 2, 1847, Henry John Reuben, present Earl of Portarlington, but had no issue. Her death has caused widespread sorrow, for her benevolence was extensive and her high and amiable character universally appreciated.

LORD BLAYNEY.

The Right Hon. Cadwallader-Davis, twelfth Baron Blayney, of Monaghan, in the Peerage of Ireland, died on the 18th inst. His Lordship was born Feb. 21, 1803, the only son of Andrew Thomas, eleventh Lord Blayney, by Mabella, his wife, daughter of James, first Earl of Caledon, and was the descendant of a very ancient Welsh family, derived from Brochwel Yseithrog, the Cambrian

Prince of Powys. Before his accession to the Peerage, at the death of his father, in 1834, he sat in the House of Commons as member for the county of Monaghan; and in a few years after, in 1841, was elected a representative peer. His Lordship was never married. His only surviving sister is the Hon. Mrs. Gordon, of Bath, the widow of Admiral Charles Gordon, C.B. By the death of Lord Blayney his peerage expires, and it is the third extinction (the other two being Strangford and Moira) since the creation of Lord Rathdonnell. The Crown will consequently have the right, at the end of a year, to create another Irish peer, unless some legislative measure is, meanwhile, passed to place the Irish Peerage on a better footing than it holds at present.

SIR E. S. WALKER.

Sir Edward Samuel Walker, of Berry Hill, Notts, J.P. and D.L., Mayor of Chester in 1838 and 1848, and High Sheriff of Nottinghamshire 1866-7, died at his seat, near Mansfield, on the 15th inst. He was born in 1799, the youngest son of Joseph Walker, Esq., of Eastwood, in the county of York, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of Samuel Need, Esq., of Nottingham, and was grandson of Samuel Walker, the principal founder of the great ironworks at Masborough, near Rotherham. Sir Edward was educated at Rugby, and at St. John's College, Cambridge. He received the honour of knighthood in 1841.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated Dec. 30, 1867, of the Right Hon. Hester Dowager Baroness King, of Brooklands, Weybridge, Surrey, who died on Dec. 17 last, was proved on the 14th inst., the personal estate being sworn under £16,000. The testatrix exercises powers of appointment, conferred upon her by the settlement made on her marriage with the late Lord King and under his will, and the whole of her estate is bequeathed to members of her Ladyship's family. The Hon. Peter John Locke King, the testatrix's son, is the sole executor and residuary legatee.

The will of the late Mr. Henry Selfe Page Winterbotham, M.P., Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, was proved on the 12th inst. by Lindsey William Winterbotham and William Howard Winterbotham, the brothers of the deceased, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £4000. The testator gives all his real and personal estate to his said brothers, upon trust, for the benefit of his sister, Ellen Mary Weedon, and her issue. The will is all in the testator's own handwriting, and is dated Jan. 30, 1867.

The will and codicil—dated respectively Nov. 6, 1868, and Feb. 3, 1870—of Miss Mary Alicia Wingfield, late of Windsor, who died on Nov. 8 last, were proved on the 18th ult. by Miss Mary Ann Humphreys, the Rev. Robert John Gould, and George Moultrie Salt, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. Among the numerous legacies we note that the testatrix has bequeathed to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts and the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge £600 each; to the Oxford Infirmary, £200; and to the Clergy Orphan School, St. John's-wood, the Fund for Widows and Orphans of the Clergy in the Archdeaconry of Salop and Diocese of Lichfield, the Fund for Widows and Orphans of the Clergy in the Archdeaconry of Salop and Diocese of Hereford, the Salop Infirmary, and the Shrewsbury Dispensary, £100 each.

The will, with two codicils—dated respectively Nov. 11, 1863, July 14, 1866, and Sept. 22, 1873—of Richard Meredyth Richards, late of Caernarvon, near Dolgelly, Merionethshire, who died Nov. 4 last, was proved on the 31st ult. by Rowland Jones Bateman and Edward Vaughan Richards, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. Testator's wife, Mrs. Louisa Janet Anne Richards, takes all the real and the residue of the personalty for life; and at her death, after providing portions for his younger children, such real and personal property is settled upon his eldest son.

The will, dated Oct. 2, 1870, of General Sir Patrick Edmondstone Craigie, K.C.B., who died at St. Leonards-on-Sea on December 13 last, was proved on the 3rd inst. by Thomas Maxwell, M.D., and Captain Doveton Downes Greentree, the deceased's son-in-law, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £35,000. Testator leaves all his property to his son, John Harry Smith Craigie, and his daughters, the son to take a double share.

The will and two codicils—dated March 28, 1871, Jan. 13, 1873, and Aug. 9, 1873—of Henry George Bromilow, late of Merton Bank, Southport, Lancashire, who died on Sept. 2 last, at Loughbrigg Brow, Ambleside, were proved on the 9th inst. by Ann Bromilow, the relict, and Henry John Bromilow, the son, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £50,000. Subject to an annuity to an old servant and an immediate legacy to his wife, the wife takes a life interest in all testator's property, and at her death it goes to his children in equal shares absolutely.

The will, with three codicils—dated Jan. 30, May 1, June 7, and Aug. 23, 1873—of Mrs. Ann Fry, formerly of Barston, in the parish of Hayes, Kent, but late of No. 70, Marina, St. Leonards-on-Sea, who died on Nov. 12 last, was proved on the 15th ult. by her two sons, James William Fry and Charles Robert Fry, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £45,000. The dispositions of the will and codicils are entirely in favour of testatrix's children and grandchildren.

Most players prefer checking to retreating the Kt, the latter being a loss of time in this situation.

Here White follow the example of their adversaries and throw away a move.

It was tempting to advance this Pawn; but they would have played better, we believe, in moving the Bishop to Q 3rd.

Very cleverly played. After this ingenious move Black have no chance of retrieving themselves.

MR. HENRY GLASSFORD BELL.

To those who had the honour and pleasure of his acquaintance it is well known that the late Sheriff Bell, whose death is now the cause of so much grief in Scotland, was a most accomplished chessplayer, and had been for very many years the President of the Glasgow Chess Club. Speaking of him in this light the Glasgow Herald observes:—"We cannot permit the demise of the late honorary president of the Glasgow Chess Club to pass without placing on record the many and valuable services rendered to it by him during the last quarter of a century. In 1850 the chess club then established—including among its number not a few leading citizens—having, for some reason or other, began sensibly to decrease, it was considered necessary by those who had the interests of the club and the game at heart to take some step by which the former might be resuscitated and infused with new life. In view of this object it was suggested that Sheriff Bell (who was known to be both fond of and highly skilled in the game) should be invited to be president of the club. When waited upon for this purpose, the Sheriff expressed himself highly gratified, and readily consented to the request. Fortunately for the club, the name of the Sheriff appeared to be one to conjure with. In the course of a fortnight the number of members rose from forty to 150. New rules were submitted for consideration, and all passed readily under the auspices of the learned gentleman. A new club-room was opened in the Royal Exchange and a special attention was given to the club. At this time the club was in a highly prosperous and satisfactory state, and there can be no doubt that its renewed vigour was principally attributable to the prestige and active interest taken in it by Sheriff Bell. Mr. Staunton, the then champion of the world, was invited to Glasgow, and, after a brilliant display of his chess abilities, was honoured with a grand dinner, at which the Sheriff presided with that bonhomie, pleasant geniality, and wit and humour which distinguished him. During his presidency he presented the club with a splendid chess-board, which was highly appreciated at the time, but will now be more carefully cherished in grateful remembrance of the donor. He continued to take a lively interest in chess till the close of his career. While, however, no one was fonder of the game than he was in leisure hours, he never suffered it to interfere in the remotest degree with the business of life; and in a very interesting and erudite lecture on chess which he delivered on Nov. 22, 1864, in St. Mary's Hall, Glasgow, he concluded with the following excellent advice:—"Chess," he said, "aimed at teaching coolness, foresight, well-arranged and well-digested habits of action. Whilst, however, they took an interest in Chess, it was only their leisure hours which should be devoted to it, for, although it afforded mental occupation of an intellectual character, it left nothing behind it, communicated nothing to others. Keep Chess, therefore, he concluded, within its proper limits; it is the highest and most scientific of all games, but it is only a game, after all." The name of the lamented Judge, orator and poet will always be remembered with affection by the members of the Glasgow Chess Club; and the loss of the kindly interest he ever took in, and the hearty encouragement he bestowed on, the culture and practice of the "peerless game," will be sensibly felt by chessplayers throughout Scotland."

CURIOUS WILLS.

THE WILL OF PAUL DUHALDE.

We might head this paper "Why Paul Duhalde made his Will;" for certainly no idea could be much more original than that on which its principal, and disputed, clause was founded.

A brief sketch of the history of Paul Duhalde cannot fail to interest our readers, and will best explain the peculiarity of this testamentary document.

This individual was born at Paris, in 1691; he was the son of a dealer in diamonds, and lost his father at the age of sixteen years, when he was sent to Spain by his mother to learn the arcanes of the business. The lad had no success, and returned. He was then placed with a merchant at Rouen, but did not get on, and subsequently passed to America, but his restless disposition soon sent him back to France. This brought him to the year 1717, and he was now twenty-six years of age. He remained some months with his mother, and then, having contracted a partnership with two jewel merchants, set off a second time to Madrid; this enterprise was, however, not more successful than those preceding it, and he came back to Paris, in the month of February, 1719, profoundly discouraged, and not without reason.

Here the melancholy reflections consequent on his repeated and persistent failures suggested to him a very singular notion, that of contracting a partnership with God. He proceeded to enter seriously into this bizarre contract, and drew up an act in regular and technical form, which he transcribed into his day-book on Sept. 24, 1719, in the following terms:—"I have resolved to enter into a partnership with God, promising and undertaking to fulfil all the within-mentioned articles; and I enjoin my heirs, whoever they may be, to carry out these my intentions in case I should die before accomplishing them myself."

He then proceeds to declare that this association, the object of which is to deal in precious stones, shall hold good for five years, reckoning from Oct. 2, 1719. He fixes his capital at 3000 Spanish piasters (£600), being all that remained to him of his patrimony. He binds himself not to enter into any other partnership during the five years, unless with a woman, by marriage. As soon as the five years shall have elapsed he proposes to balance his accounts, to begin by withdrawing from the partnership the 3000 piasters with which he started; secondly, to take from it the dowry that his wife may have brought him; thirdly, any sum or sums that may have fallen in to him by succession or otherwise during the time; after which he adds, "And the surplus shall be equally divided between God and myself."

This unique partnership having been thus determined, Duhalde starts a third time for Spain, but the outset of this new attempt does not augur well for the partners. Two years after, however (1721), the project of a double marriage between the Courts of France and Spain gives a new impetus to the branch of commerce in which he is engaged, and he resolves to improve the opportunity. At last Fortune seems to smile upon his endeavours, and the ultimate results exceed his fondest hopes. He now returns to Paris, resolving to settle himself finally there.

In 1722 he married the daughter of De Hansy, a well-known bookseller, who brought him 30,000 livres, and from his mother, who died in September of the same year, he inherited 70,226 livres. On May 20, 1723, a son was born to him.

Meantime Duhalde never loses sight of the obligations he has taken upon himself towards God. He draws, from time to time, from the common fund, sums which he distributes, in the name of God, to the poor, and inscribes these with regularity and precision in his registers.

On Oct. 1, 1724, the partnership expires. Duhalde strikes a balance of his accounts, and finds from the aggregate of the entries that he has already paid to the poor 13,684 livres; but this is not all. In the statement of account drawn up he has considered three classes of stones as constituting a portion of the profits: one of these lots is at Amsterdam, one at Madrid, and one at Paris: these he shares equally, inscribing on the packets which contain them, "Half for the poor;" and at the foot of the statement of account he writes:—"Misfortune and malediction upon my heirs, whoever they may be, if, under any pretext whatever, they should fail to distribute to the poor the half of whatever proceeds may come from the jewels now in my possession, if so be God should call me away before I shall have been able to satisfy their claims myself. Further, if by any extraordinary event it should appear at my death that no other amounts are forthcoming but those goods or sums which are virtually the property of the poor, let not a sacrilegious hand be laid upon them; they constitute a deposit which can under no circumstances be diverted from its just course."

In addition to this precaution, and in order to secure to the poor the amounts he regarded as strictly their due, Duhalde drew up in the month of January, 1725, eight bills of 1000 livres each, payable to order from year to year, comprising the years 1725 to 1732, and placed these bills in the hands of the Vicar of St. Germain l'Auxerrois.

On Jan. 14, 1725, he fell ill and made his will, by which he declares that:—"In the books which contain the minutes of his affairs there are several articles touching matters that concern the poor; he begs his executor to examine these articles with the greatest accuracy, and to see they are carried out with the strictest attention."

Two months after, Duhalde dies, leaving a young widow, a minor, and an infant two years old. The schedule of property is called over, the administrators of the Hôpital Général are invited to attend. Among the effects of the deceased are found packets of precious stones, labelled "Half for the poor;" their portion is estimated at 18,188 livres. The administrators claim it, but offer to compromise for the sum of 15,900*fr.* The young widow protests; the guardian contends that the will should be set aside on the ground that no sane men ever get into a partnership with God. The parties appeal to law, and, after a spirited altercation, a judgment is obtained, April 3, 1726, on the decision of D'Aguesseau (Avocat-Général), ordering that "The will of Duhalde and the acts and codicils dependent thereon shall be fulfilled according to the desire of the testator; he consequently condemns the guardian of the widow and her son to hand over to the administrators of the hospital-funds the jewels constituting the legacy made by the testator to the poor, but leaving him the choice of paying the sum in money value, as estimated by experts to be provided by the Court; the course adopted by the said guardian to be decided on within a fortnight."

THE MARRIAGE OF THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH: ARRIVAL OF THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES AT ST. PETERSBURG.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

Let it be said to the honour of the Parliament summarily dismissed that it succeeded in fairly accomplishing the work which it was chosen to perform, and that, in respect of most of the great measures which were placed upon the statute-book, it well and wisely interpreted the general consensus of public opinion. In the disestablishment of the Irish Church, in the removal of most of the grievances inflicted upon Irish husbandry by the system of land tenure which there obtained, in the construction of a vast machinery for the education of the people, in the abolition of purchase in the Army and in the restoration of that service from private to public control, in the adoption of the ballot, in the constitution of a high court of judicature in which common law s equitable jurisdiction are to be blended; and even in the financial retrenchments which, during the most critical European conjuncture, it succeeded in effecting; it placed its name and fame at the highest place on the historical scroll on which are inscribed the triumphs of legislative genius and industry. The part it has played will long be remembered. The policy it has pursued will be recognised as of the grandest order. Posterity may find reason to doubt the political reason of some things it has done, but will assuredly recognise in its career an inspiring example of disinterested and lofty aims compassed by admirable self-denial and indefatigable labour.

Of the Parliament to come we can only express ourselves in the language of hope. That it will show many personal changes in its constituent members is certain. That it will with equal adequacy give effect to the will of the nation is highly to be desired, although this, as yet, is extremely problematical. The main influences brought to bear upon the constituencies by the projected programme of the Ministers, are financial in their character, and, hence, are ill-calculated to elicit the highest order of political and patriotic motive. The abolition of the income tax and the further relaxation of indirect taxation, conjointly with an adjustment of local to imperial burdens, will, no doubt, give an immense impulse to the action of the great majority of electors, and will stamp with its own impression no small proportion of the elected. Whether, when that impulse has exhausted itself and that stamp has been effaced, the Legislative conceptions and aptitudes of the House of Commons will fairly answer the demands of public opinion in relation to other and even higher questions of political interest, remains to be seen. We can only hope that they may; but, from the data at present available for the formation of our judgment, such hope is considerably streaked with apprehension.

One conclusion, we think, is tolerably clear. There is no very wide difference between the professed objects of the two great political parties. What Mr. Gladstone proposes to do Mr. Disraeli is not, in the abstract, unwilling should be done. The main question between them is by which party it may be most safely and successfully effected. The country is about to settle that point, and will settle it, we cannot but hope, with its usual instinctive sagacity.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, continues at Osborne House. The Duke of Cambridge and the Lord Chancellor arrived on Thursday week and dined with her Majesty. On the following day the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove through West Cowes and Newport to view the decorations in honour of the Royal marriage at St. Petersburg. Prince Leopold and the Duke of Cambridge walked through the towns. The Prince of Leiningen, Count and Countess Gleichen, and Countess Feodore Gleichen arrived at Osborne. The Queen received telegrams from the Emperor of Russia and the Duke of Edinburgh announcing the celebration of the marriage. Her Majesty's ships Zealous and Royal Alfred, which were anchored in Osborne Bay under the command of Captain Cochran, fired Royal salutes. In the evening Royal salutes were again fired, and the ships, together with her Majesty's yacht Alberta, were illuminated, and discharged fireworks. The Queen's dinner party consisted of Prince Leopold, Princess Beatrice, the Duke of Cambridge, the Prince of Leiningen, Count and Countess Gleichen, the Marchioness of Ely, the Countess of Caledon, Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas and the Hon. Lady Biddulph, Major-General and the Hon. Mrs. H. Ponsonby, the Hon. Harriet Phipps, the Hon. Emily Cathcart, and Captain Edmond Mildmay. There was a ball in the servants' hall for the servants and tenants on the Osborne estate, the Queen and the Royal family being present part of the time. On Saturday last the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Leopold, and the Prince of Leiningen left Osborne. On Sunday the Queen, Princess Beatrice, Count and Countess Gleichen, and Countess Feodore Gleichen attended Divine service at Whippingham church. The Rev. George Prothero and the Rev. George Connor, Vicar of Newport, officiated. On Monday the Queen held a Council, at which were present the Lord President of the Council, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and the Earl of Kimberley. At the Council Parliament was dissolved. Sir Arthur Helps, K.C.B., was clerk of the Council. Lord Aberdare, Mr. Gladstone, and the Earl of Kimberley had audiences of her Majesty. Mr. Richard Amphlett received the honour of knighthood. Count and Countess Gleichen and Countess Feodore Gleichen left Osborne. The Queen and Princess Beatrice have taken frequent drives to Ryde and other towns in the island. The Duchess of Roxburghe has succeeded the Countess of Caledon as Lady in Waiting on the Queen.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE.

The marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh and the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, only daughter of the Emperor and Empress of Russia, was solemnised, yesterday (Friday) week, at the Winter Palace, St. Petersburg, with the utmost pomp, and in accordance with the rites of the Orthodox and Anglican Churches respectively. Those who had been invited to be present assembled at half-past twelve o'clock at the palace. There were members of the Holy Synod, and of the high clergy; members of the Council of the Empire; senators and Ambassadors; the members of the Corps Diplomatique, with the ladies of their families; general officers, officers of the guard, of the army and navy, and eminent Russian and foreign merchants of the first two guilds. The ladies wore the national costume; the men were in full uniform. The Queen of England was represented by Viscount Sydney and Lady Augusta Stanley. Shortly after one o'clock the marriage procession passed through the Salle des Armoiries, the bride leaning on the arm of the Duke of Edinburgh. On their arrival at the church the Duke and Grand Duchess took their places in front of the altar, where were standing the Metropolitan of St. Petersburg and the chief priests, attired in magnificent vestments. The Emperor and Empress were on the right of the altar, the Prince of Wales and the Russian Grand Dukes standing opposite. The most interesting parts of the ceremony were the handing of the rings to the bride and bridegroom, the crowning of the Royal couple, and the procession of the newly-wedded pair, with the Metropolitan and clergy, Prince Arthur, and the Grand Dukes, round the analogon or lectern, the bride and bridegroom carrying lighted candles in their left hands. On the conclusion of the ceremony the bride and bridegroom were saluted by the Emperor and Empress most affectionately, and immediately all proceeded to the Salle d'Alexandre, where the Protestant marriage was performed by the Very Rev. Dean Stanley, assisted by the Rev. A. Thompson and the Rev. Mr. Kingsford. The bride was given away by the Emperor, Prince Arthur being the best man. The Duke and the Grand Duchess used prayer-books which had been sent them by Queen Victoria, and the Grand Duchess carried a bouquet of myrtle sent also by the Queen from Osborne. Dean Stanley read a special prayer, composed by himself for the occasion. The singing of the Russian choir was magnificent. No instrumental music was performed at either service, in accord with the rules of the Greek Church. After this ceremony the Emperor and Empress again saluted the bride and bridegroom. The bride wore a silver embroidered robe and an Imperial mantle of crimson velvet, lined with ermine; a diamond crown and diamond collar, and rich lace veil, adorned with orange flowers. The Empress wore a gold robe and a Russian head-dress of diamonds. The Princess of Wales was attired in a dress of white and silver moire antique, with flowers, covered with magnificent Brussels lace and bordered with rose-coloured velvet. Train of rose-coloured velvet, bordered with an embossed garland of roses, shamrocks, and thistles, detached bouquets of which also filled up the centre; also a necklace and pendants of pearls and diamonds, and tiara of diamonds with feathers and veil. Her Royal Highness also wore the orders of Victoria and Albert, the order of Catherine of Russia, and that of the Danish Royal family. The Czarevna wore a dress of gold and white, with a train of blue velvet and diamond head-dress. The Crown Princess of Germany wore a train of crimson velvet and ermine. The Duke of Edinburgh was in the uniform of a Russian naval officer, with the ribbon and collar of St. Andrew. The Emperor was in a General's dress, with the collar of St. Andrew. Prince Arthur in that of the English Rifle Brigade, and the ribbon and collar of St. Vladimir. The Czarevitch wore the uniform of a Russian General, and the Prince of Wales that of an English General. The service was concluded at three o'clock, when the event was announced to the capital by a salute of 101 guns from the fortress, and to the inhabitants of Moscow by special telegram. The marriage register was signed by the Dean of Westminster, the Emperor and Empress, the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince Arthur, the Imperial Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany, and by several of the Imperial family.

At half-past four all the Imperial and Royal personages were present at the banquet in the Salle Nicholas. Four toasts were drunk. The first was "The healths of the Emperor, the Empress, and Queen Victoria," which was followed by a salute of fifty-one guns; next came "The health of the Bride and Bridegroom," with a salute of fifty-one guns; next, "The health of the Imperial Family of Russia," followed by a salute of thirty-one guns. Lastly, came "The Clergy and all the Faithful Subjects of the Czar," with again a salute of thirty-one guns. A concert of vocal and instrumental music was performed during the banquet.

At a quarter to nine the Imperial Court proceeded to St. George's Hall, where were assembled the marriage guests, the Czar leading the Duchess of Edinburgh. The dresses were the same as those worn in the morning, except that the bride was divested of her mantle of velvet and ermine. The polonaise (which is a march of the Court, two and two, in an intricate form to and fro the ball-room, each lady changing her partner at the top of the room) was commenced from the throne, the bride in turn being escorted through the maze of guests by the bridegroom, the Czar, and by several of the Princes and Grand Dukes. The trains of the ladies were borne, as before, by chamberlains. The polonaise lasted an hour, previous to which time the bride and bridegroom had retired from the ball-room.

At eleven o'clock the Emperor accompanied the Duke and Grand Duchess, who were attended by Lady Emma Osborne, Mlle. Miliutin, Lieutenant Haig, General Gogel, and General Popoff, to the railway station, whence they left St. Petersburg by special train for Tsarskoe-Selo, where the deputation of the townspeople at the station presented the bride and bridegroom with bread and salt on a silver dish. The Duke and Grand Duchess drove to the Alexander Palace amid the enthusiastic greetings of the people—the road, like the city of St. Petersburg, being brilliantly illuminated and decorated.

On the following day the Duke and Grand Duchess drove in the park and also visited the Grand Palace and the arsenal. The marriage festivities were continued at St. Petersburg. The Emperor, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Arthur, and other visitors, with the Grand Dukes, went on a hunting excursion to Gatchina. The bag consisted of one bear and thirteen wolves, besides hares. The Imperial and Royal party dined at Gatchina, and on the return journey the Emperor left the train at Tsarskoe-Selo, and visited the Duke and Grand Duchess at the Alexander Palace.

On Sunday the bride and bridegroom attended Divine service in the Great Palace, and afterwards received the members of their suite at breakfast. Later in the day the Duke and Grand Duchess drove in a sledge to Pawloak. The Dean of Westminster preached at the English church at St. Petersburg in aid of the relief fund for Samara province. The English Royal visitors were present. Subsequently the Emperor and the Imperial family, with the Prince of Wales and other Imperial and Royal personages, were present at the parade of officers which is held on Sundays in the Michael Manège. After the ceremony the commanding officers of the different corps were presented to the foreign Princes by the Czar. In the evening the Grand Duchess Marie of Leuchtenberg gave a concert of sacred music, at which all the Princes were present.

On Monday the Duke and Grand Duchess walked before breakfast in the private garden of the palace, and afterwards skated upon the ice. Their Imperial and Royal Highnesses received the members of their suite at dinner. At St. Petersburg a grand parade of about 30,000 troops of all arms was held before the Winter Palace in honour of the Prince of Wales and the other foreign Princes. The Emperor, with a numerous Staff, and the Princes rode along the lines, the troops cheering and the bands playing the several national hymns, after which the troops marched past in front of the Alexander Column. The Princesses witnessed the spectacle from the windows of the Winter Palace. Subsequently the Czar entertained the foreign visitors, with their respective suites, at luncheon in the palace. All the foreign Princes and Princesses were also present at the family dinner at the Winter Palace.

On Tuesday the Duke and Grand Duchess returned to St. Petersburg from Tsarskoe-Selo. Their Imperial and Royal Highnesses received at the Winter Palace the Diplomatic Body, the foreign Princes and Princesses, and the ladies attached to the Russian Court.

On Wednesday the bride and bridegroom received the superior clergy, the Imperial Council, senators, officers of the Imperial and Grand Ducal households, and superior officers of the army and navy. In the evening there was a state performance at the Opera, at which all the Imperial and Royal personages were present.

On Thursday a ball was given in the Nicholas Hall of the Winter Palace, and yesterday (Friday) a ball was also given at the palace of the Czarevitch. To-day (Saturday) the nobility of St. Petersburg will give a ball at their club. On Monday next a ball will be given at the palace of the elder Grand Duke Nicholas, and on Tuesday one by the British Ambassador.

The Russian Court will leave for Moscow next Wednesday, and on the following day the Imperial and Royal personages will visit the Moscow Cathedral, after which the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh will receive congratulatory visits. There will be a dinner in the Alexander Hall, and in the evening a performance at the Great Moscow Theatre.

On Friday the Moscow nobles will give a ball at their club, and on Saturday a ball will take place at the Governor-General's residence. The Court will return to St. Petersburg on Sunday week.

In a proclamation announcing the marriage of his daughter the Czar invites the prayers of the faithful for a blessing on the union. The occasion has been commemorated by a large distribution of honours and promotions.

The merchants of St. Petersburg are to present the Grand Duchess with a costly piece of plate. The English colony will give a life-boat to the Russian Life-Boat Society in honour of the marriage, presenting a silver model of the boat to her Imperial Highness.

The gold medal which the Prince of Wales annually gives for proficiency in the highest branches of education to a pupil of Dr. White, at the Lynn Grammar School, has been gained by Mr. H. Leeper, son of the Vicar of All Saints', South Lynn.

The Duke of Cambridge has appointed Edmond St. John Mildmay, Esq., now extra Equerry to his Royal Highness, to be Equerry, vice Major-General Henry Clifton, resigned; and Major-General Henry Clifton to be extra Equerry to his Royal Highness.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S PARLIAMENTS.

The Parliament which has just passed away into the region of history is the eighth Parliament which has been assembled under the reign of her Majesty, and the tenth since the passing of the first Reform Bill. The Parliament which was sitting at the death of William IV., in June, 1837, came to an end in the following month by the demise of the Crown, and the new Parliament elected in the August, which met in the November of that year, was dissolved in June, 1841, having lasted four years. Her Majesty's second Parliament, elected in August, 1841, was dissolved in July, 1847, having lasted nearly six years. Her third Parliament, which met in the November of the same year, was dissolved in July, 1852, having lasted about four years and three quarters. The fourth Parliament of her Majesty met in November, 1852, and was dissolved in March, 1857, having lasted four years and a half. The fifth Parliament of her Majesty was the briefest in its duration, having met in April, 1857, and having been dissolved in the spring of 1859, after a life of little more than two years' duration. The next Parliament, which assembled in April, 1859, lasted six years, being dissolved early in 1865; and her Majesty's seventh Parliament, the immediate predecessor of the present one, lasted from the spring of 1865 to the autumn of 1868, about three years and a half. The present, which will hereafter be known as Mr. Gladstone's Parliament, was elected in November and December, 1868, and hence has enjoyed an existence of a little over five years. Consequently it has lived longer than any of its predecessors, except those of 1841-7 and 1859-65.—Times.

At a conference of the Nonconformist Committee of London, Birmingham, Manchester, and Liverpool, held, on Tuesday, at Crewe, resolutions were passed expressing deep dissatisfaction and disappointment at discovering that Mr. Gladstone adheres to the general principles of the educational policy pursued by the Government during the last four years, and declaring that it is the immediate duty of all who desire to restore union and vigour to the Liberal party to insist that all candidates for their support shall declare themselves opposed to the further development of the denominational system, and pledge themselves to vote for the abolition of the twenty-fifth clause of the Elementary Education Act of 1870.

The Extra Supplement.

"HIGH LIFE."

The late Sir Edwin Landseer's unapproachable genius for the pictorial representation of dog life and character is admirably shown in the pair of companion pictures, "High Life" and "Low Life," belonging to the Vernon Collection at the South Kensington Museum. In the former, which is copied for our Engraving, we see one of the most gentlemanly beasts, so to speak, that the animal creation has to show—namely, the rough-haired or Scottish greyhound, of a pure breed, the worthy retainer of a noble Earl's household in some fine old castle of North Britain. The painter knew such dogs and their masters, and the game they pursued, with the intimate acquaintance of a lifetime passed in constantly enjoying, observing, and depicting their gallant behaviour. These handsome figures, and the sports connected with them, are highly characteristic of our country; they smack of the manners, tastes, and habits of this nation. It is to be hoped that the love of a good hound, and of a good horse, will ever be characteristic of an English or Scottish gentleman. Nor can we yet desire that the breed of red deer in the Highlands, or the various races of smaller game, four-footed or winged, should become extinct, where room may still be found for them without impeding the cultivation of the land. "High Life," at any rate, must be allowed its due claim upon our regard, for the sake of its stately grace and beauty.

THE APPEAL TO THE COUNTRY.

On Saturday last the London daily papers published Mr. Gladstone's address to the electors of Greenwich, announcing that the Queen had been advised by her Ministers to dissolve Parliament, and promising certain legislative measures and remissions of taxation should a "fresh access of strength" accrue to the Liberal party at the forthcoming general election. The defeat of the Government on the Irish Universities Bill and the Tory victories at many of the elections of the past year are alleged as the causes of the appeal to the country. A hope is expressed, with regard to the Ashantee war, that "we are about to emerge at an early date, and on good terms, from the conflict." Mr. Gladstone is of opinion that we have not yet had sufficient experience of the working of the Education Act to reconsider any clauses of it. Reconstruction of the Judicial Establishments of Scotland and Ireland will claim the attention of Parliament. So will the Local Government of London; and the yet further extension to the public of the benefits of Oxford and Cambridge Universities. Assimilation of the county with the borough franchise; "the laws respecting the transfer, the descent, and the occupation of land; the laws respecting game, the laws respecting the sale of spirituous liquors, the laws affecting the relations between employer and employed, the laws of rating and of local government, are among the subjects likely to come in turn under the notice of the new Parliament."

Upon a review of the finance of the last five years we are enabled to state that, notwithstanding the purchase of the telegraphs for a sum exceeding £9,000,000, the aggregate amount of the national debt has been reduced by more than £20,000,000; that taxes have been lowered or abolished (over and above any amount imposed) to the extent of £12,500,000; that during the present year the Alabama indemnity has been paid, and the charge of the Ashantee war will be met out of revenue; and that in estimating, as we can now venture to do, the income of the coming year (and, for the moment, assuming the general scale of charge to continue as it was fixed during the last Session), we do not fear to anticipate as the probable balance a surplus exceeding rather than falling short of £5,000,000. Mr. Gladstone proposes, with his surplus and certain "judicious adjustments," to repeal the income tax and at the same time to relieve the "general consumer," and to undertake the "relief coupled with reform of local taxation."

The reply of Mr. Disraeli to Mr. Gladstone's address promptly appeared in the shape of an address to his constituents, published on Monday morning. Its points are sufficiently summarised in our article on the Dissolution elsewhere in this Number, as are the smart counter-hits dealt to the leader of the Opposition by Mr. Lowe.

Mr. Gladstone (accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Gladstone) received a hearty welcome from a meeting of some ten thousand of his constituents on Blackheath on Wednesday afternoon. Having been introduced in a few apt words by Mr. W. F. Rock, the chairman of his election committee, Mr. Gladstone made a vigorous speech, which lasted over an hour. He was very ironical in criticising Mr. Disraeli's allusion to the Straits of Malacca. He may almost be said to have belaboured the Tory leader with a Malacca cane; and, to quote Mr. Gladstone's own words, happily recalling the "plundering and blundering" letter of Mr. Disraeli, he left "the leader of the Opposition for the present floundering and foundering in the Straits of Malacca." Mr. Gladstone then argued that the remission of taxes which he proposed was a much more bona fide and statesman-like arrangement than anything the Conservatives could accomplish for them. It was to be accompanied by economy, which Conservative administrations of recent times, said the Premier, had departed from. They might abolish the income tax, but they would not lower the sugar duty or give relief to articles of "general and universal consumption." In dilating on the issues of the election, he declared that against "Conservative Reaction" he promulgated another watchword, that of "Liberal Union." The address was frequently cheered, and at its close a vote of confidence in Mr. Gladstone was moved by Dr. Purvis, seconded by Dr. W. C. Bennett, and carried with enthusiasm. The election for Greenwich is to take place next Tuesday.

Parliament was formally dissolved by Royal proclamation on Monday, and the date for the meeting of the new Parliament was fixed for March 5. The writs were issued on Tuesday night, and it is expected that the elections for both boroughs and counties will be over by St. Valentine's Day.

Dr. Rohlf, the African explorer, reports to Dr. Petermann that his expedition has reached the centre of the oasis of Facafreh, in the Desert of Libya. At this point he is only thirty-five miles from the Nile.

A Singapore telegram says Sir Andrew Clarke has returned there from Perak, having disarmed the belligerent Chinese, destroyed their stockades, and restored the captured women and children to their homes. Sir Andrew Clarke has also suppressed all piracy on the seaboard and rivers of Laroot.

Professor Palmieri wishes it to be announced, in answer to numerous inquiries he is receiving from all parts of Europe, that the present condition of Vesuvius betokens volcanic disturbance in distant countries as well as in Italy. Its internal activity is gradually increasing.

RUSSIAN SOCIETY FOR AID TO THE SHIPWRECKED.

At the present moment, when the auspicious union of our Sailor Prince, the Duke of Edinburgh, with the only daughter of the Czar of Russia has just been consummated, the two illustrations which we give of a scene particularly Russian will doubtless be found of particular interest. They are taken from authentic photographs, and, while they convey a vivid impression of the peculiar dangers attendant on travelling where the frozen surface of the sea is the great highway, they also exhibit the means provided to rescue the hapless wayfarers who, on the breaking up of the river ice or its partial thaw, would otherwise be likely to perish.

The scene represented in one illustration is that of a party of country people going to market, who, having become isolated on a detached floe of ice, are in great danger. The other shows a perilous situation under different circumstances. Here, from the occurrence of soft places in the ice, where, it may be, some luckless wight has before fallen through, the traveller is suddenly immersed, and, if no help be at hand, may speedily perish. In this way, it not unfrequently happens that horses and vehicles, with the men who accompany them, are swallowed up and drowned. But, as in this country we have our National Life-Boat Institution and our Humane Society to afford succour to the shipwrecked and other drowning persons, so likewise in Russia there is now organised and established an official agency for help in these dangers. Boats are at hand, which, by the addition of side or bilge keels, can be readily converted into sledges for transport on the ice, their crews being also furnished with life-belts, similar to those of our own life-boat men, and with lines and planks to enable them to effect their humane object.

It will be interesting to our readers to know that these boats are provided by a Russian society recently started, which has its head-quarters at St. Petersburg. This society has been organised, to some extent, after the example of our Royal National Life-Boat Institution, whose model of life-boats it has adopted for service on the seacoasts of Russia; and some life-boats have been built for Russia by Messrs. Forrest and Son, of Limehouse, the well-known builders for our institution, under the superintendence of its officers here.

The Russian society, which is entitled the Society for Aid to the Shipwrecked, has for its patroness her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Czarевна, and for its president Vice-Admiral Possiott, with several other distinguished men on its managing committee. It combines the functions of life-boat work on the coast with those of our Humane Society on the rivers and other frozen waters of Russia. As a proof of the interest taken in the society by her Imperial Highness its patroness, we may observe that it was especially brought by her under the notice of the Prince and Princess of Wales, on their recent visit to the Russian capital. They have, at their own request, been enrolled amongst the honorary members of the Russian society.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Jan. 29.

"The Septennat," as French politicians have christened Marshal MacMahon's seven years' lease of power, which we were told was to restore public confidence, stimulate commerce and industry, and crush for ever the hateful hydra of anarchy, has hitherto only been productive of general discontent. The Legitimists are already showing their alarm lest the Marshal should take in earnest what they intended only for a joke, and the Union and the Gazette de France are busy explaining to their readers that the Assembly can any day cancel the vote by which it conferred supreme power on the Duc de Magenta for seven years. The Ministerial organs assert, however, that the vote of Nov. 19 is irrevocable, and that the Marshal does not intend to relinquish the helm of the State on any pretence whatever.

This announcement has especially incensed the Extreme Right, who have always looked upon the "Septennat" as a stepping-stone for the re-establishment of the Monarchy; and M. Ferdinand Boyer has just disclosed that, on the eve of the voting of the prorogation law, M. de Broglie entered into a convention with the adherents of Henri V., by the terms of which Marshal MacMahon was to utilise his power to effect the restoration of the Bourbons. The Royalists now perceive that they have been duped by the Prime Minister, and, with the view of avenging themselves, have contracted an alliance with the Republicans, the result of which will possibly be not merely the overthrow of the Cabinet, but the forced resignation of Marshal MacMahon and the abrupt conclusion of the Septennat.

The Duc de Broglie, who is usually remarkably reticent, has issued a veritable political manifesto this week, in the form of a circular to the prefects, explaining the object of the law on the nomination of mayors, the new state of things which it creates, and the manner in which its provisions are to be executed. The Duke says that the municipal officers should support the authority of Marshal MacMahon, which, during the seven years of his presidency, is beyond all dispute. This circular, besides provoking the wrath of the Extreme Right, has, moreover, elicited an interpellation from M. Gambetta and Challengé Lacour, and other members of the Radical party, who moved, on Monday, for permission to question the Government concerning it. The Assembly rejected an Orleanist proposition in favour of adjourning the interpellation for three months, and it was eventually decided to discuss it immediately after the debate on the new taxes.

The sittings of the Assembly have been rather monotonous of late. On Monday, however, they were varied by an eloquent address from Bishop Dupanloup in favour of the bill for the appointment of army chaplains; and an animated debate arose on Tuesday apropos of the recent election of M. Marcou in the Aude. M. de Gavardie opposed the validation of the election on the ground that M. Marcou, who is a journalist, had frequently attacked religion and public morality in his writings. On M. Gambetta exclaiming that the assertion was inexact, the warlike clerical deputy retorted by a stinging phrase, to the effect that the ex-dictator had talked so much while he was in power that the only right he enjoyed to-day was that of keeping his mouth closed. M. de Gavardie was at once called to order by the president, and, after a short speech from M. Marcou, that deputy's election was eventually approved.

The Constitutional Committee of Thirty, which continues its labours in a desultory fashion, has held another meeting this week, at which it was decided, after a protracted discussion, that three years' residence in the same locality will be requisite for acquiring a right to vote. It has already been settled that an elector must be twenty-five years of age; and these two clauses, the chief basis of the new bill, having been voted in committee, the measure will now soon be ready for submission to the Assembly.

Prince Napoleon seems again anxious to bring himself before the notice of the public. The Bonapartist organs have been busy this week describing a recent quarrel between him and M. Galloni d'Istria, deputy for Corsica, in its minutest details; while the Prince himself has addressed a political manifesto to a provincial journal in which he describes himself as a Democratic Republican, and, as such, makes a bid for power in opposition to the Comte de Chambord. The latter, by-the-way, has recently sent an affectionate and unimportant letter to the editor of the Union on the occasion of his birthday, and the Legitimists are in vain endeavouring to discover in it some hidden political allusion.

The French police have eventually succeeded in arresting the perpetrators of the horrible murders in the vicinity of Limours and Rambouillet, which were described in a recent letter. A rural postman named Désiré was found, a few days ago, in a pine-wood, near the hamlet of Vaugrigneuse, strangled with his own pocket-handkerchief, having evidently committed suicide. His letter-bag was found by his side, containing, besides the letters he had to deliver, a written statement declaring his personal innocence of the crimes in question, and giving the names of the actual murderers, five in number, who have since been captured by the police. It is generally thought that Désiré was seriously compromised in the murders, and that he committed suicide from feelings of remorse.

The Academy, which received M. Saint René Taillandier as one of its members a few days ago, has been busy preparing for the election of new Immortals. Among the candidates are M. Weiss, Taine, Dumas fils, Charles Blanc, Edmond About, and Paul Feval. The contest has excited unusual interest in literary circles. M. Caro, de Mézières, and Alexander Dumas fils have been elected to-day.

The sale of the Opinion Nationale has been interdicted in the streets, in consequence of its having asserted that the Cabinet had suspended the Univers in obedience to the orders of Prince Bismarck, and for having violently upbraided the Government for its cowardice in not resisting foreign pressure.

Marshal MacMahon, who was entertained at dinner at the British Embassy a few evenings ago, gave a second grand ball at the Elysée Palace on Tuesday night. It had been originally intended that the fête, for which 8500 invitations were issued, should take place on Wednesday, but it was suddenly recollected that this was the anniversary of the capitulation of Paris. As it was, however, the guests did not separate until an early hour of the morning of the day which witnessed the close of the memorable struggle of 1870.

A Supplementary Convention to the Treaty of Commerce was signed by Lord Lyons and the Duc Decazes on Saturday.

A congratulatory address, signed by 400 English residents here, was sent to the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh on their marriage. The Duke and Duchess replied by telegraph, expressing their thanks.

SPAIN.

Fresh operations against the Carlists are being pursued by General Moriones in the north, and by General Lopez Dominguez in the province of Valencia. The tidings that a demand of 2,000,000 pesetas has been made on Santander by the Carlists, as the condition of their not besieging the place, were brought to Bayonne yesterday. It is said that the threatened municipality is endeavouring to raise the money. Portuguese, near Bilbao, fell into the hands of the Carlists on Thursday week, when a battalion of the Segovia regiment, a detachment of artillerymen, a detachment of engineers, and all the volunteers and mobiles defending the place were taken prisoners. The arms captured are 1200 Remington carbines, 400 minié rifles, and two guns.

A "public adjudication," alias a forced loan, of 25,000,000 pesetas is decreed at Madrid. It is guaranteed by the revenue from the stamp tax.

HOLLAND.

An official despatch has been received from Acheen by the Government announcing that its troops there have captured the Kraton, and that the place when entered was found to be abandoned. This operation is considered to decide the war.

GERMANY.

By the decisive majority of 284 against 95 votes the Prussian Chamber of Deputies has finally adopted the Civil Marriage Bill. The minority consisted of the clerical and Polish deputies.

The second contest for the representation of the sixth electoral district of Berlin in the German Parliament has resulted in the return of Herr Schultze-Delitzsch by 9285 votes, his opponent, Herr Hasenklever (Social Democrat) receiving 6042 votes. Two important elections for the Diet have been decided in Rhenish Prussia. At Solingen, a manufacturing town, Herr Kloeppel, a Progressist, has defeated the clerical candidate by nearly 4000 votes. At Elberfeld, a National Liberal and a Social Democrat have had a very close contest. It resulted in the return of the Social Democrat by a few hundreds of a majority.

DENMARK.

After a long debate in the Folkething, an order of the day, with preamble, was adopted on Wednesday, by 57 votes against 31, condemning the publication by the Ministry of the autograph letter written by the King on Jan. 2, in reply to the address passed by the Folkething in December. The resolution protests against the course taken by the Ministry, on the ground that the King is thereby drawn into party conflicts.

The Socialist leader, Pihl, who sought to force the King to grant an audience by assembling a multitude in front of the Palace, has been condemned to eight months' hard labour.

This work has been published by the Trinitarian Bible Society in London.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

At the time of writing, the acceptances for the Lincolnshire Handicap, though due, have not appeared, but there can be little doubt that they will be very satisfactory, as the handicap is unquestionably a remarkably good one. Wenlock (9 st. 4 lb.) has been rather harshly treated, as he has never run since he won the St. Leger of 1872, on which occasion he beat a very moderate field, for Prince Charlie was out of his distance, and Vanderdecken had scarcely run himself into form. Andred (8 st. 5 lb.) appears the most likely of all the heavy weights, as he has a fine turn of speed, and, from his conformation, is admirably adapted for the flat mile at Lincoln. Hochstapler (7 st. 10 lb.) has generally performed miserably; but, could he show a little of the form that enabled him to cut down The Colonel last season, what chance could a three-year-old, even of Newry's (7 st. 7 lb.) class, possess? Indeed, we think the last-named, though much fancied, is by no means certain to beat Lily Agnes (7 st. 1 lb.). The Australian champion, Glendove (7 st. 2 lb.), though considered good enough to be entered for the Ascot Cup, has escaped very easily; and perhaps Salvano's (7 st. 4 lb.) is the pick of the entire entry. The handicap for the Bristol Royal Steeplechase must also be pronounced a success, as there are only thirty non contents out of the seventy-eight. Ryshworth (12 st. 7 lb.), Cramoisi (11 st. 5 lb.), Footman (11 st. 5 lb.), Harvester (11 st. 3 lb.), Casse Tête (10 st. 11 lb.), St. Aubyn (10 st. 11 lb.), Clifton (10 st. 8 lb.), and Royalist (10 st. 7 lb.) have all been left in; while Eurotus (12 st.) and Congress (11 st. 10 lb.) are the best performers of those that have paid forfeit.

There has been a little more betting of late, and a large outlay on Eccosais for the Two Thousand has made him such a favourite that 5 to 2 is now the best offer against him. He is said to be going on very well, and has only to come to the post in good condition to be backed at odds against the field.

A report was widely current on Saturday last that Maidment, the "lucky" jockey, had died from the effects of injuries received by a fall while hunting near Blandford. We are happy to say that this was much exaggerated, and that Maidment is now pronounced to be out of danger and going on very favourably; for while opinions differ materially as to his merits as a horseman, the turf could ill afford to lose a man of such unblemished integrity and honour.

While on the subject of accidents in the hunting-field, we may mention that Earl Darnley has fractured his collarbone whilst buck-hunting in Cobham Park; and that Mr. W. L. Gilmour received a nasty fall with the Quorn and dislocated his right shoulder. Earl Fitzwilliam was out again last week with his hounds and enjoyed one or two capital runs, though his left arm is still in a sling.

The North of England Club Meeting was the principal coursing fixture of last week. An entry of thirty-two all-aged greyhounds was obtained for the Ministeracres Cup, which fell to Mr. Dunn's old favourite Britain Yet, by Willie Wylie—Bravery, who beat Gipey Queen, by Tempest—Betty, in the final course. The Manor House Stakes for puppies was divided between Beneficial, by Sam—No Idea, and Monarch, by Mediation—Moorland.

There has been a good deal of betting on the Waterloo Cup, of late; and Mr. Hemming's nomination is decidedly first favourite, so that there can be little doubt, as we stated would be the case last week, that Peasant Boy will represent his owner. We hear that the famous "runner up" is very fit and well, and has given every satisfaction in a trial. The ballot for the choice of a judge at the forthcoming Waterloo meeting has resulted in the election of Mr. Hedley. We believe that Mr. Warwick, who has filled this important post for thirteen years succession, came next on the list.

THE TICHBORNE TRIAL.

"The Beginning of the End" is a significant proverbial title, which aptly fits the scene on Thursday in the Court of Queen's Bench at Westminster, when the Lord Chief Justice, Sir Alexander Cockburn, began his summing up of the evidence in the protracted trial of the famous Claimant, there indicted for perjury, committed in his late suit for the estates of the lost Sir Roger Tichborne. During this extraordinary trial, which has lasted a hundred and seventy days, the Lord Chief Justice, with Mr. Justice Mellor and Mr. Justice Lush, has found it necessary, upon several occasions, to check the violent or impertinent behaviour of persons concerned for the defendant's interest; and it is a matter for general congratulation that the Court will now be rid of such a disagreeable case.

On Wednesday Mr. Hawkins, Q.C., finished his reply on the part of the prosecution, which he had commenced on Thursday week. He commented on the evidence about the tattoo marks on Roger Tichborne's arms. He next dealt with the "Pittendreich letters"—that is, the correspondence between the defendant and the wife of one of the clerks of the family attorney. He pointed out that the defendant had tried to bribe her to betray the secrets of her husband's employers and to give him private information as to the case on the other side, especially as to the defendant's identity with Orton, and he urged that this was a sign of the consciousness of fraud. He appealed to the conduct and demeanour of the defendant in court during the trial, and especially during the speeches of his own counsel, Dr. Kenealy, as affording the strongest proofs that he could not be Roger Tichborne. For, said Mr. Hawkins, he has sat silent and unmoved while his own father has been reviled in the grossest terms, while his most revered preceptors and dearest friends were vilified as perjured wretches, and while he himself was described as a miserable and degraded sot, plunged in the grossest debauchery and guilty of the most infamous baseness and wickedness. "Can this," he exclaimed, "be Roger Tichborne?"

Mr. Hawkins commented on that part of the case which related to the mother's recognition of him, first showing, from the letters of Roger himself and his father, that she was animated with the most insane hatred of his family. He proved by the evidence of numerous witnesses—some of them her own brothers and sisters, and one of them her own attorney—that she was possessed by an insane delusion that her son was living in Australia, and that she had made up her mind to acknowledge the man who pretended to be her son, no matter whether she recognised him or not, and no matter how wild and false were his statements. He remarked how this confirmed the uncontradicted evidence of her servant as to the circumstances of the pretended "recognition" of the defendant in Paris, when she sent for him three times over in vain to come to her, and his attorney went to her and had an interview with her, and she then went to see him; and while he lay with his face to the wall, without seeing his features, she acknowledged him as her son. He reminded the jury how she had avoided showing him to any of her relatives or friends, and even to her private attorney; how the moment Chatillon (Roger's old tutor) saw him he assured her it was not her son; and how every one of the family and friends, as soon as they saw him, with scarcely a single exception, declared him to be an impostor. The learned counsel went on to deal with the story of the seduction and the sealed packet. He reminded the jury that the defendant's counsel at the last trial made it a "crucial test" of his client's identity, and staked his cause upon the truth of his story, and how his counsel at the present trial had shrunk from the test, and actually complained of its application. He proved from Roger's letters that the paper given to Mr. Gosford in January, 1852, related to the pledge to build a church if he married his cousin, and that a duplicate of it was given to his cousin herself in June, 1852, on his last visit to Tichborne. He observed that the defendant—who had never so much as mentioned the sealed packet until, in June, 1867, he was challenged with it by Mr. Gosford—confessed then that he "could not remember the contents." He showed how, two months afterwards, when the defendant found that the original had been destroyed (after the news of Roger's death), he then, in ignorance of the existence of a duplicate, gave the version of the paper which connected it with the story of his seduction of his cousin, "in July or August, 1852, at the mill in Cheriton (close to Tichborne), while he was staying at the house." Mr. Hawkins then showed, by the evidence of seven credible witnesses, confirmed by Roger's letters, that the whole story was false, and that Roger never was at Tichborne at all after June, 1852, when he was there for three days only, in a house full of company. He remarked that not an atom of evidence had been adduced to prove the truth of the defendant's story, which rested entirely on his own oath. He dismissed with contemptuous notice the evidence of the witnesses called to give some sort of colour to the story, and showed that not a single witness had spoken to a solitary act of impropriety, or even of familiarity, between the cousins during the brief periods they were together at Tichborne. He dealt in a spirit of indignant contempt with the story of the pretended "grotto," and the deceptive photograph of it which had been prepared under the auspices of Mr. Onslow, and produced in court, to back up the evidence about it. Mr. Hawkins here indignantly denounced Mr. Onslow for having, on account of some "dirty pecuniary interest" he had acquired in the case, "lent himself to an unworthy trick to destroy the honour of an English lady." He then, in a strain of impassioned eloquence, repudiated the suggestion of the defendant's counsel that the jury should find no verdict upon this part of the case between Lady Radcliffe and the defendant. They would thus, he said, brand Lady Radcliffe with perjury or leave upon her character the stigma of having been seduced by him. The learned counsel here solemnly declared that he feared no such result, but felt that her honour and character were safe in their hands. Mr. Hawkins concluded his speech by leaving the case with confidence in the hands of the jury. Next morning (Thursday) the Lord Chief Justice began his summing up.

It was mentioned last week that the Lord Chief Justice had summoned Mr. George Hammond Whalley, M.P. for Peterborough, a zealous partisan of the Claimant, to answer for the offence of contempt of court. This offence had been committed in the writing of a letter reflecting upon the case, which was published in the Peterborough Times and in the Daily News. The letter was occasioned by the statements of Jean Luie, one of defendant's witnesses, about Mr. Whalley's active part in getting up the defendant's case. Yesterday (Friday) week Mr. Whalley appeared in court. His counsel, Mr. Morgan Lloyd, Q.C., was instructed to offer the fullest apology, and an affidavit was put in stating that Mr. Whalley had only given the letter for publication to the editor of the Peterborough Times, who, on his own authority, had sent it to the London papers. The hon. gentleman protested that his sole object was to vindicate himself with his constituents. After Mr. Lloyd's address, which was frequently interrupted by ejaculations of dissent on the part of his client, the Court sentenced Mr. Whalley to pay a fine of £250, and be imprisoned until the amount was paid. Immediately afterwards the penalty of imprisonment was withdrawn

"in consideration of Mr. Whalley's position;" but, Mr. Whalley having declared his intention to decline payment, the Lord Chief Justice intimated that the imprisonment clause would remain in force. After the hon. gentleman had been refused leave to make a supplementary speech, he withdrew in company of the tipstaff of the Court. During the day the fine was paid for him by his sister, and Mr. Whalley, after passing the Friday night in the City prison at Holloway, was released on the Saturday morning.

The case of Jean Luie, or Lundgren, was again before Sir Thomas Henry, at Bow-street, on Saturday. Mr. E. Lewis, in a long speech on behalf of the accused, said that Luie was the son of a wealthy shipowner now dead, and had occupied the position of a gentleman; he had conversed with him in three modern languages and had found him proficient in mathematics. The learned gentleman examined Charles Jones, and said he had eleven other witnesses to call for the defence, who were not then ready. There was consequently a further adjournment till Thursday. On that day, the case was again before the magistrate, and Mr. Whalley was examined at some length, giving an account of his interviews and correspondence with Luie, and of his visit to America for the purpose of collecting evidence to help the Claimant. The case of Luie was once more adjourned, to give time for his other witnesses to attend.

LAW AND POLICE.

Mr. Amplett, Q.C., the new Baron of the Exchequer, was made a serjeant-at-law last Saturday, and was called within the Bar, prior to his elevation to the Bench. Mr. Baron Amplett has received the honour of knighthood from her Majesty. His predecessor, Mr. Baron Martin, formally took leave of the Court on Monday, and on the following day Mr. Baron Amplett took his seat on the bench.

Mr. D. Maude, one of the magistrates at the Greenwich and Woolwich Police Courts, has sent in his resignation, consequent upon age and infirmity.

The Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices gave judgment, on Monday, on an appeal to them in a suit to try the validity of a bequest to a child who was the issue of marriage with the sister of a deceased wife. By his will, dated July 9, 1868, the testator, James Occleston, left an interest in his estate to his "reputed children," Catherine Occleston and Edith Occleston, and all other children who might thereafter be born. Another child, certified as Margaret Occleston, was born on Jan. 6, 1869. The mother having died in January, 1869, and the testator in 1870, the question arose whether the third child was entitled to share in the bequest. The late Vice-Chancellor Wickens decided that question in the negative. The Lord Chancellor, on Monday, expressed his concurrence in this decision; but the Lords Justices thought Margaret was entitled to share equally with her sisters. The result is that the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor is reversed.

The investigation of the charge of conspiracy against Mr. Halliday and other trades unionists was resumed by the Burnley magistrates on Saturday. One of the witnesses stated that the highest wages obtained by Cornish men in one week were £4 0s. 5d.; the highest wages obtained by workmen not Cornish men in one week were £7 15s. 10d. The average wages of Cornish miners were £2 to £2 10s. per man. The Bench decided that there was no case against three of the defendants, and therefore discharged them. Mr. Halliday and six other defendants were committed for trial at the ensuing Manchester Assizes on the charge of conspiracy. Bail was accepted.

The Irish Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment on Saturday in the action for libel brought by Mr. Walter Trevor Stannus, formerly agent to the Marquis of Hertford, against the proprietor of the Belfast Northern Whig. The jury, at the trial in December, 1872, awarded Mr. Stannus £100 damages. The defendant now sought to set aside the verdict; but the Court unanimously declined to allow an appeal.

The first division of the Scotch Court of Session gave judgment, yesterday week, in the case at the instance of Mr. Henry Padwick against Sir Archibald Douglas Stewart, Bart., of Murthly and Grandtully, Perthshire, with regard to the validity of the entail of these estates. In 1871 an agreement was entered into between Mr. Padwick and Sir William Stewart, who was then proprietor of Murthly, to sell the estates, at Sir William's death, to Mr. Padwick for the sum of £350,000. Sir William died in April, 1871, and Mr. Padwick brought this action to have it found that the agreement for the sale of the estates was an effectual one. Sir Archibald Douglas, Sir William's brother, who was the next heir of entail, maintained that the entail of the estates was a valid one, and barred any sale. The Court decided against Mr. Padwick, and the case will now in all probability be carried to the House of Lords.

The Comtesse de Bar, also calling herself the Comtesse de Civry, was charged at Marlborough-street, on Tuesday, with obtaining goods by fraudulent means. She said that family reasons prevented her from making a public statement. She was entitled to both titles, as her husband was the Comte de Civry and her father the Comte de Bar. Mr. Knox said that he should require bail in the sum of £500, and remanded her.

Lawrence Archdeacon, a clerk in the service of the Exchange Telegraph Company, who is charged with stealing American bonds to the value of £5000, was again brought up at the Mansion House on Saturday, and committed for trial.

Pleading guilty to what was described by Mr. Wontner, solicitor to the Great Northern Railway, as a "mean and paltry fraud," but urging haste as his excuse, Dr. E. Symes Thompson paid a fine of forty shillings and costs, imposed by the magistrate of the Clerkenwell Police Court, who considered the charge of attempting to avoid payment of fare fully proved.

George Preston, cattle-dealer, of Halesworth, in Suffolk, who, in the judgment of Sir Robert Carden, "is evidently in the habit of buying unsound animals, and sending them to the London market," has been stopped, for two months, from continuance in that practice, by being sent to gaol.

At Bow-street Wilhelm Brandes, a native of Brunswick, has been committed under the extradition treaty with Germany on a charge of poisoning by arsenic.

George Derby, who combines the professions of welsher and cardsharper with the recreation of burglary, was charged, yesterday week, at the Middlesex Sessions with a series of housebreakings. A policeman, who "knew him as well as he knew his own child," testified to his being a ticket-of-leave man. He was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude and seven years' supervision. Thief and receiver, in the case of a robbery from the glass warehouse of Mr. Philip Palmer, in St. Martin's-lane, were sentenced on Wednesday—the former to nine, and the latter, as being the more guilty, to twelve months' imprisonment.

Yesterday week the punishment of the lash was inflicted upon three convicts in the gaol of Newgate for robberies accompanied with violence.

THE TICHBORNE TRIAL: "THE BEGINNING OF THE END."

BY THE WAY.

Amid the sudden excitement of political crisis the tidings of the death of Livingstone bids men pause for a moment from the strife of tongues and take note that a great man has passed "where beyond these voices there is peace." There was a natural effort to believe that again we had heard false news, but there can be no longer any doubt. Some time about the middle of the year Dr. Livingstone, in making one of the most remarkable efforts which even his adventures record, was smitten down by disease. His remains were on their way to Zanzibar. There were no fitness, now, in seeking to dwell upon his heroism, or to place in conventional words the expression of what all must feel. There will be time hereafter to honour the dead. We suggest that the great missionary societies—and why not the Bible Society?—laying aside all differences, should unite to raise a monument to one who fearlessly and persistently laboured in the missionary cause. Science, no doubt, will do her part; but Livingstone would never have rendered to Science the services for which she has to show herself grateful, but for his devotion to a still loftier calling, that of spreading Christianity.

The dissolution is upon us, and all things else are wellnigh forgotten. Even the Tichborne case will be concluded amidst comparative inattention. The Ministerial secret was so well kept that it is clear that it was in the keeping of but a few, and perhaps they were not possessed of it very long. On Saturday the news leaped out, panther fashion. Now, the country is stirred to its most remote nooks, and perhaps never have been returns counted with such eagerness as will be the elections concluded for the first time under the ballot. This column does not deal with politics in any direct fashion; but even Diogenes rolled his tub rather than seem to take no interest in that which was exciting his fellow-citizens, and we cannot let the great crisis pass by us without recognition. We may say that it is with some gratification that we observe in the lists of candidates very few indeed whom it would be disgraceful in a constituency to return. The names of such men are not entirely absent, but it speaks well for the belief in public character that so few have ventured to appeal to the electors. Which way the majority is to go is a speculation outside the business of these paragraphs; but we believe that, even if the new Parliament be not, in Mr. Lowe's words about the last, so "excessively solvent" that it will have no sympathy for anybody who does not pay twenty shillings in the pound, it will include a scant number of the class that used to be fond of Parliamentary privilege for the sake of its immunities. The new House may not be so baldheaded as the old one, but it will be highly respectable.

"Leicester square will probably be improved and beautified ere long." We wrote this two or three weeks back, but were not then at liberty to state our reasons for believing in such a renovation. Now everybody knows that Mr. Albert Grant has bought the property from Mr. Tulk, and intends to lay it out like a French place, with fountains, flowers, seats, and busts, and to present it to London. The proposed operations have commenced; the hoardings have been cleared of all the glaring brutalities of the theatrical and other placards, and men are at work with spades and barrows. Mr. Grant hopes, some time in June, to sign, in the square itself, the deed of gift to the metropolis. The idea of erecting busts of those eminent men whose names are most associated with the square is a very happy one, and four fitter men could not have been selected. Newton, Reynolds, Hogarth, lived close by, and for years the most interesting passages in Johnson's life were connected with his friend Reynolds's house. The author of "London" will merit all honour she can do him, though he dealt her out somewhat rough justice.

Here malice, rapine, accident conspire,
And now a rabble rages, now a fire;
Their ambush here relentless ruffians lay,
And here the fell attorney prowls for prey;
Here falling houses thunder on your head,
And there a female atheist talks you dead.

We have somewhat improved since those lines were penned, yet an illustration of each of the evils complained of will occur to most readers, which those who have literary memories will remember how wonderfully Lord Macaulay availed himself of the finishing couplet at the time of the catastrophe in Tottenham-court-road. But we may have more to say about Leicester-square as the works advance; in the mean time it is but justice to record the liberal act by which Mr. Grant will so signally improve away a nuisance that had become a proverb.

With no ordinary satisfaction we note that the Attorney-General has been pronounced to have been duly elected for Taunton, and that the petitioners against him have utterly failed, and have been mulcted in their costs. It is true that Sir Henry James is already out of his seat, and the whole business runs excellent chance of being forgotten amid the din of the general election. But none the less let it be set down as matter for reference hereafter that it was sought, upon most inadequate grounds, to deprive one of the most honest and most able of the younger servants of the Crown of the position he had won by straightforward means, by independence, industry, and courage. We hope that the electors will recollect all this on the day of ballot, and, by replacing Sir Henry in his seat, will make him some amends for the attacks to which he was unwarrantably exposed.

The dissolution came in to do a great number of things, and, among them, to dispose of a question that might have arisen, had Mr. Whalley persevered in his resolution not to pay the second and larger fine that was imposed upon him for contempt of court. We might have had privilege debates, and a fiery but constitutional battle like that in the days when the boot was on the other leg, and the House of Commons Voted the elderly Sheriffs to quod.

Mr. Whalley was fined £250 yesterday week. He declared that he would not pay. The precise form of the denial seems doubtful, but it was said to have been as emphatic as it was well possible to make it. His counsel, in answer to the Lord Chief Justice's "What is that?" said that Mr. Whalley would pay—meaning, of course, that, on representation of the circumstances, he would come to a sense of the proprieties. But the Lord Chief Justice considered that Mr. Whalley himself was most likely to know his intentions. In the end the ex-member for Peterborough, being denied leave to make a speech, went to Holloway Prison. One night there was enough, though we doubt not that he was made very comfortable. Before the next night he was released; but so, practically, was the Parliament of which he was a fraction. However, we suppose that the electors of Peterborough are "bound to hear" a good deal on the subject; and perhaps those of Guildford may not be allowed to go to the ballot without some illumination on the Tichborne case. Both Messrs. Onslow and Whalley were fined for contempt in January last year, and have, we think, purchased the right to make the most of their martyrdom.

BOOKS OF TRAVEL.

In these days of the Ashantee war, while Captain W. F. Butler, again on the staff of his former commander, Sir Garnet Wolseley, is doing good service on the banks of the Prah, and on the road to barbarian Coomassie, we receive with pleasure the second book he has written about his North American travels. In his first volume, The Great Lone Land, which proved very interesting to a great many readers, this clever and active officer told us of the journey undertaken by him, after the military expedition to the Red River in 1870, up the course of the river Saskatchewan to the Rocky Mountains. In the autumn of 1872 Captain Butler was again at the Red River settlement, now called the province of Manitoba, intent upon a more arduous journey that way in the harder season, and upon a sojourn of several winter months in the cold region of Lake Athabasca. This purpose he achieved with success, and in March of the next year passed through the Peace River opening in the Rocky mountains to British Columbia, where he descended the Fraser River, in June, to the Pacific shore. His present narrative of these experiences, related not less agreeably than in the former instance, forms a new book called The Wild North Land (Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle). He met two friends, about the end of October, at the North Forks of the Saskatchewan, whose companionship helped to cheer a part of the time, but minds and bodies of less fortitude would have felt it a severe ordeal. A famous Esquimaux dog, named Cerf Vola, which had belonged to Captain Butler when he was before in that part of the world, now followed the same English master once more, besides two other dogs, and a small but faithful retinue of Indians or half-breeds. There were horses, but the road was mostly travelled on foot, with some long distances by canoe voyages on the rivers. Of the moose and the buffalo, and of the wild tribes of men—Assineboines and Blackfeet, Crees and Chippeways, and Beaver Indians—who roam the Wild North Land, Captain Butler has much to tell us. His descriptions of the mountain scenery of British Columbia are very striking. A map and above a dozen engravings accompany the text.

We have lately read with much interest and satisfaction another book which describes the same region of British North America, now comprised within the Canadian Dominion. It is entitled Ocean to Ocean, by the Rev. George Grant, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, who was travelling secretary to the railway surveying expedition of Mr. Sandford Fleming, chief engineer of the Canadian Government, in the summer and autumn of 1872. The projected Canadian Pacific Railway, to connect the distant provinces of British Columbia and Vancouver Island with those on the Atlantic side of the continent, had been made a condition of their political union. We still hope to witness its realisation, in spite of the financial and Parliamentary scandals that have occurred in this important colonial affair. Mr. Grant's account of the vast unoccupied tracts of fertile open land, along the Saskatchewan, and about the Athabasca and Peace rivers, which would be made accessible by the proposed line of railroad, is a tempting prospect for speculators on the future agricultural resources of the British empire. But we can readily believe that it would be too soon, as yet, for Mr. Joseph Arch and Mr. Clayden just now to lead an emigration of our farm labourers in that direction, a thousand or fifteen hundred miles farther west than the Muskoka district, near Georgian Bay, Lake Superior, which has recently been discussed as a field of English settlement. There can, however, be no doubt of the substantial value and potential richness of the Saskatchewan country, and the testimony we have lately received as to the comparative mildness of its climate is highly encouraging. It ought to be generally known that, owing to some exceptional causes—whether moist warm winds from the Pacific, or a current of warm air under the lee of the Rocky Mountains, or the lower level and gradual slope of the entire land in this part of North America, the climate of Fort Dunvegan, on the Peace river, is scarcely more severe than that of the older provinces of Canada, which are situated in latitudes from six to eleven degrees more south. A very large portion, indeed, of the United States western territories, consisting of elevated table lands and unsheltered prairies, would seem to be less favoured, both in climate and in soil, than the proverbial "fertile belt" of the Canadian Far West. We are also informed, on the best authority, that in the mineral riches of British Columbia, as well as those of the northern shores of Lake Superior, to say nothing of forests and fisheries in the Pacific Ocean provinces of this empire, her Majesty Queen Victoria, with her liege subjects of the Canadian Dominion, possess an undoubted heritage of enormous worth. They need not grudge the American Republic its vast extension in lower latitudes. The future greatness of Canada is already well assured; and we commend the views of Mr. Grant, as of Captain Butler, upon this interesting subject to the attentive reflection of patriotic statesmen. Mr. Grant's book is provided with several maps, and with sixty illustrations, which are executed in a style that resembles etching, and which reproduce the photographs of scenery with very good effect. It is published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co.

We have a pleasant recollection of Mr. Andrew Leith Adams, F.R.S., Staff Surgeon-Major, whose "Wanderings of a Naturalist in India" came under our notice about six years ago. He now invites us to rejoin him in New Brunswick and Eastern Canada, where he was stationed with the 22nd (Cheshire) Regiment from April, 1866, for a period of three years. His book is entitled Field and Forest Rambles (H. S. King and Co.). In those British American Provinces, as in the Western Himalayas and Cashmere, his scientific curiosity is devoted chiefly to the animals of the country—the beasts, birds, reptiles, and fishes; but he is also a geologist, and he takes note of climate and weather; so that his book is a pretty complete account of the natural features and conditions of that peninsula, including Nova Scotia, which extends into the Atlantic south of the great St. Lawrence inlet. It is a country of such ready and speedy access from the British islands, and so firmly attached to the old connection, that we trust it will hereafter be more intimately known to the majority of English people. Though New Brunswick still remains, for the most part, in the state of a forest wilderness, and its population is very scanty, with few signs of pomp or fashion in its wood-built cities of St. John and Fredericton, it seems to be a very respectable colonial province. Mr. Adams does not conceal from us the less advantageous circumstances, the austerity of the climate, the hard and heavy labours of husbandry, and the slowness of its profit returns; he does not recommend New Brunswick, on the whole, for the intending agriculturist from Old England who wishes to lead a comfortable life. It is, however, a country to be visited by the sportsman, and by the tourist who is curious in the knowledge of natural species or varieties, but more especially by the lover of birds. Their habits in North America, with regard in particular to their yearly migrations, appear to form an interesting object of study. The beautiful little ruby-throated humming-bird, which arrives in Eastern Canada about the end of May, is found at various times everywhere from Brazil to Labrador along that side of the Continent. Mr. Adams enters fully into the discussion of these topics of local ornithology and its relations to different physical conditions. His notices of the fishes, both those of the sea and those which invite the skill of our anglers in the rivers and lakes of North-East America, will likewise prove acceptable to a certain number of his readers.

The adventures and explorations of Dr. Livingstone, the success of Mr. H. M. Stanley in finding him on the shores of Lake Tanganyika, and the diplomatic victory of Sir Bartle Frere in persuading the Sultan of Zanzibar to stop the slave trade on that coast, have divided public attention with Sir Samuel Baker's discoveries and Egyptian conquests on the Upper Nile. The Rev. Charles New, who was connected for a short time, in March, 1872, with the abortive expedition under Lieutenants Dawson and Henn, sent out from England to search for Dr. Livingstone and to supply his wants, has lived nearly ten years at several missionary stations. He resided in Suahili and Unika, in the country of the Gallas, which is to the north of these, and in other districts lying between the shores of the Indian Ocean and Lake Victoria Nyanza, or lower down, within the third or fourth degree of south latitude. His narrative of Life, Wanderings, and Labours in Eastern Africa (Hodder and Stoughton) is probably superior to most other books recently published upon this topic, as an authority on some material points of geography and ethnology, seeing that the author has had greater opportunities of procuring the most correct information than could have been obtained by a passing traveller. The region, however, which Mr. New describes, in this series of narrative sketches, is not the same that has been made known by the travels of Speke, Grant, and Burton, and is distant several hundred miles from the route of Mr. Stanley to Lake Tanganyika. It is reached by the seaport of Mombasa, in lat. 4 deg. S., near which place, at Ribe, a Christian mission was established by Dr. Krapf, about thirty years ago, and this was taken up, in 1861, by the United Methodist Free Churches of England. Mr. New's appointment to a share in its labours has produced, among other fruits, the present useful contribution to our knowledge of Africa, with some effectual testimony against the cruelties and iniquities of slave-dealing recently practised at Zanzibar, and the hunting and kidnapping of defenceless people among the inland tribes. It will be to the lasting disgrace of the British Government and nation if this atrocious system, which has now been solemnly denounced, should be continued under any pretext whatever. Mr. New gives a favourable account of Mombasa, the most convenient port on the mainland, which at one time belonged to the Portuguese. No real advance in civilisation is possible under the corrupt Arab Government, but it is important to secure the right application of such influence as our own national representatives may be enabled to use in that quarter. The narrative of a visit to Chaga, and a survey of the grand mountain, Kilima Njaro, perhaps the highest in all Africa—its summit being covered, of course, with perpetual snow—is a chapter of particular interest. Mr. New's sketch of this mountain was lent to us for an engraving, which appeared in our pages before his return to England. Several other illustrations, besides a map and a portrait of the author, are contained in the volume now before us.

A fish torpedo, one of the latest inventions for attacking ships under water, exploded at Woolwich Arsenal on Saturday. Under the direction of Mr. T. Miller, of the Royal Navy, six men were oiling the bearings and turning a screw to make the machinery work more freely, when the air chamber exploded with a loud report. Edward Baker was killed on the spot; another man was so seriously hurt in the chest that he is not expected to live. Only one of the six men escaped serious injury.

Mr. Justice Groves, on Monday, gave judgment on the petition against the return of the Attorney-General for Taunton. He decided that Sir Henry James was duly elected, and ordered the petitioners to pay the costs. Sir Henry James met his supporters at the Castle Hall, Taunton, on Saturday evening, and was enthusiastically received.—The Exeter Election Petition has fallen to the ground in consequence of the dissolution of Parliament.—The municipal election inquiry at Nottingham ended, last Saturday, in the petitions being dismissed as regards two of the disputed wards, but sustained as to the third—St. Ann's. In this ward bribery and treating were proved against the Liberal candidates, Messrs. Sylvester and Hartshorn. Costs were given against the former but not against Mr. Hartshorn.

Last Saturday evening the Rev. Henry Allon, D.D., of Union Chapel, Islington, was presented by the church and congregation with an address commemorating the completion of thirty years of ministry to one people in one place. The address was accompanied with a purse containing over £1200, which sum was collected during Dr. Allon's absence of less than a week in the country.

At a special meeting of the Court of Common Council held on Monday—the Lord Mayor presiding—it was unanimously resolved to present to the Queen an address of congratulation on the marriage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh with her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna. It was also determined that similar congratulations should be offered to the Duke and Duchess on their arrival in this country.

The Lady Mayoress gave a juvenile ball at the Mansion House on Thursday week; and on Tuesday evening the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress entertained the members of the Courts of Aldermen and Common Council for the wards of Aldersgate, Aldgate, Bassishaw, Billingsgate, Bishopsgate, Bread-street, Bridge, Broad-street, and Candlewick, at dinner at the Mansion House, which was served in the Egyptian Hall. The Lady Mayoress's receptions began on Tuesday, and will continue every Tuesday at three o'clock until further notice.

Lady Gilbert Kennedy presented the prizes to the successful members of the 20th Middlesex Rifles, yesterday week, in the general meeting-room at Euston station. The annual distribution of prizes to the successful competitors in the 46th Middlesex (London and Westminster) took place, on Saturday last, in Westminster Hall. On the same evening, in Guildhall, the Lady Mayoress distributed the annual prizes to the members of the 2nd City of London. Captain Holloway and the officers and members of the second company of the St. George's gave their annual dinner, on Tuesday evening, in the banqueting-room of the Criterion.

Last week 2358 births and 1492 deaths were registered in London, the former being 141 above and the latter 322 below the average. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the five preceding weeks had steadily decreased from 1112 to 554, further declined to 514 last week, and were 137 below the average: 239 resulted from bronchitis, 139 from phthisis, and 81 from pneumonia. There were 74 deaths from measles, which, although showing a further decline of 13 from those returned in recent weeks, exceeded the corrected average weekly number by 38. There were 4 deaths from smallpox, 22 from scarlet fever, 2 from diphtheria, 50 from whooping-cough, 20 from different forms of fever, and 14 from diarrhoea. The 20 deaths referred to fever, of which 11 were certified as enteric or typhoid, 7 as typhus, and 2 as simple continued fever, were 38 below the average number. The mean temperature was 43.6 deg., or 6.3 deg. above the average.

Amongst the rewards voted at the quarterly general court of the Society for Preservation of Life from Fire—Alderman Finnis, treasurer, presiding—were testimonials to three members of the Chichester Volunteer Fire Brigade for exertions in rescuing a servant-girl from an attic window by means of the escape at a fire at East-street in that town; testimonial (first class) and £2 to Fireman Buckland, of the metropolitan brigade, for saving the life of Ellen White at a fire in Welbeck-street, Cavendish-square, in September last; testimonial and 30s. to Henry Woolcott, rigger in her Majesty's dockyard, for saving three lives at a fire at Stonehouse; the silver medal, with £5, to Fireman William Murphy; and silver medal to P. S. Faulkner, C division, for preservation of life at a fire in Great Windmill-street, Haymarket, on Oct. 20 last; a testimonial, on vellum (first class), with £2, was also awarded in this case to Joseph Deegan, who was saved by the escape. This man was the first to discover the fire, and, after arousing his wife, ran down to alarm the sleeping inmates on the first floor, and with some difficulty made them sensible of their danger. The fire by this time had made much progress, and Deegan only had just time to pass the door of the first-floor front room when the flames burst out. He, however, regained the room where he had left his wife, from which they were saved by the escape.

The long-announced public meeting to express sympathy with the Emperor of Germany in his quarrel with the Pope was held, on Tuesday, at St. James's Hall. The chair was taken by Sir John Murray, of Philiphaugh, who was supported by the Dean of Canterbury, Sir Robert Peel, Mr. C. N. Newdegate, Mr. A. Kinnaird, Sir T. Chambers, Lord A. Churchill, &c. The chairman delivered a message from Earl Russell, who was to have presided, expressing regret at his absence in consequence of the state of his health, and his entire sympathy with the object of the meeting, his Lordship adding that the letter of the Emperor of Germany of September last had sounded a note of timely warning to the British nation. A resolution speaking with admiration of the Emperor's letter was carried by acclamation; and the chairman was requested to communicate to his Majesty that resolution, and another of a similar character. An evening meeting of the same kind took place at Exeter Hall. Quite a contrary spirit was manifested at a Roman Catholic meeting held in the Townhall, Birmingham, on Tuesday night. Monsignor Capel presided, and Dr. Ullathorne was present. An address was voted to the Archbishop of Cologne expressing cordial sympathy with him in his sufferings from the unjust and tyrannical laws passed in Germany against the Catholics, bishops, clergy, and priests of that empire.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism states that the total number of paupers last week was 107,425, of whom 37,059 were in workhouses and 70,366 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 4240, 17,045, and 54,997 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved was 574, of whom 445 were men, 101 women, and 28 children.

At the London School Board meeting, on Wednesday, a financial report was submitted, showing that £149,861 would be required to meet current liabilities to March 25, 1875. On objection being raised by Canon Cromwell, explanations were entered into by Mr. Freeman. The report was referred back to the finance committee. The debate on the statistics of the late board was again proceeded with, and adjourned.

On Monday the annual festival of the Caledonian Society of London, in commemoration of the birthday of Burns, took place at the Freemasons' Tavern. The company numbered close upon 300 ladies and gentlemen. Mr. Aeneas J. McIntyre, Q.C., presided. In the course of the evening Mr. W. J. Morrison, the retiring president, was presented with a gold medal. The memory of Burns was drunk in solemn silence. A ball followed the dinner.

The revisers of the authorised version of the New Testament met on Tuesday and revised the fifth chapter of the Epistle of St. James and part of the first chapter of the First Epistle of St. Peter.—The twenty-first meeting of the Old Testament company of revisers was concluded yesterday week. The company finished their first revision of the Book of Psalms.

The Bishop of St. Asaph has refused to consecrate a new church at Denbigh, which was to have been opened this week. His Lordship's reason is that the rearedos has a tendency towards Ritualism, there being amongst the altar carving a figure of the Saviour hanging on a cross and a group of figures prostrate before him. Until this is removed his Lordship will not allow the church to be opened.

The Church of St. Michael, Kirby-le-Soken, Essex, was recently reopened, after a complete restoration, by the Bishop of Rochester. Mr. Richard Blanshard contributed the entire cost of the restoration (£2000). The church now consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, west tower, organ chamber, and north porch. Open timber roofs take the place of the old flat roof, and the entire building has been benched throughout. The nave arcades are conspicuous features, being richly moulded. The architect was Mr. Henry Stone, of London; and the builder Mr. Joseph Grimes, of Colchester.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. E. D. Anderson-Morehead, of New, Oxford, has been elected Winchester Fellow at that society. The election at Corpus to four open classical, and one open mathematical, scholarships, worth about £100 per annum, in addition to rooms rent-free during residence, has ended as follows:—Classical: F. T. Daiton, Highgate School; A. S. Haigh, Leeds Grammar School; J. H. W. Lee, Marlborough College; C. M. Powell, Uppingham School. Mathematical: A. B. Walkley, Balliol.

The Rev. Charles M'Dowall, M.A., of University College, Oxford, has been elected to the head mastership of Highgate School as successor to the Rev. Dr. Dyne, who retires at Easter. Mr. M'Dowall was placed in the First-Class Moderations, 1858, and in the First Class "in Literis Humanioribus," 1859. He has for the last nine years held the second mastership of Malvern College.

Mr. Herbert J. R. Marston, a blind gentleman, has matriculated in the University of Durham and gained a scholarship of £50 a year. Mr. Marston was educated in the college for blind sons of gentlemen at Worcester.

The Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland held his first levée for the season at Dublin Castle on Tuesday. Alderman James Mackey, ex-Lord Mayor of Dublin, was knighted.

A terrible railway accident occurred on Tuesday morning, on the North British Railway, between Edinburgh and Glasgow, and has cost sixteen lives. The cause was of a kind so familiar as to have become traditional—an express-train ran into a mineral-train that was shunting.

Fourteen troop horses were burnt to death, on Monday morning, by a fire that occurred in the wooden stables of the 11th Hussars at Shorncliffe Camp; and one of the animals that got free from the flames galloped in its fright down the slope and broke its neck.

The first ironclad built in Hull was launched from Earle's shipbuilding and engineering company's yard yesterday week. She was christened by Madame Goni, wife of Admiral Goni, the Almirante Cochrane. The vessel belongs to the class of sea-going ironclads, and has been designed by Mr. E. J. Reed, C.B., for the Chilean Government. She is armour-plated, and armed with six 12½-ton Armstrong guns. The engines are by Messrs. Penn, Liverpool, and will work up to 3000-horse power.

A shocking wife murder occurred at Plymouth on Wednesday. A young man, named Sylvanus Sweet, of independent means, quarrelled with his wife about the use of a pomatum pot, and in a fit of anger seized an old cutlass which was hanging on the wall, and struck his wife several times with it on the head. The woman died immediately, and the husband then sent for a cab, went in it to the police station, and there gave himself up.

THE FAMINE IN BENGAL.

"Six hours' soaking rain" at Calcutta last Sunday was reported by telegraph; the quantity that fell is estimated at one inch in Bengal, but in Behar somewhat less. This is said to be "good for water supply and ploughing, but bad for other than food crops." The meaning of such reports is not easily understood here. There are four principal harvests in Bengal, viz.:—1. The Aus (rice), sown in April and reaped in August or September. 2. The Aman (rice), sown in April to June, reaped November or December. This is the principal harvest. 3. The Boro (rice), sown in October, reaped in March. 4. The Rabi (peas, pulses, and green crops), sown in October, reaped in February. The relative importance of these four harvests differ from place to place according to local circumstances, and this, of course, causes the importance of rain or drought in particular seasons and at different places to vary. Again, the means of transport from place to place differ widely in different parts of the country. Some districts are as easily accessible in all their parts as an English county. Others are exposed (says Dr. W. W. Hunter) to the calamity of "that local isolation which in 1866 reduced Orissa to the state of a dismantled ship at sea without provisions." So, too, "several districts can only obtain supplies from without before the setting in of the monsoon; others are practically cut off during the rains; while in many the rainy months greatly multiply the channels of transit." Besides this the normal prices of food vary considerably in different parts of the country. A rise of price in one district after the winter harvest may have an entirely different meaning from the very same rise in a neighbouring district. Lastly, the population of the different districts varies widely in its character. Some of the classes of whom it is composed are far more liable to starvation than others. Some even thrive in famine years—as, for instance, the fishermen.

We are now informed by the Calcutta telegrams that fifteen districts of Bengal and the neighbouring provinces, containing 25,000,000 people, are recognised to be in a distressed condition; but eleven of these districts, with a population of 14,000,000, are said to be partially affected. The relief works to be undertaken at once by Government consist chiefly of roads, but village works are to be commenced later. A grant has been made for emigration to Burmah. Sir George Campbell recommends the prohibition of exports of rice from Bengal.

The sketch of a Bengal village, which we present as an illustration of this painful topic, was made by our far-travelled Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson. We have this week received from the publishers (Messrs. Longman) a narrative of his recent journey round the world, through China, Japan, and North America, in a volume entitled "Meeting the Sun." We expect to find it a very interesting book, for the author has fair skill with the pen, as well as with the pencil; and he is a zealous student of all Oriental antiquities, while he is an acute observer of all those novelties which the West has lately introduced to the East. The volume is beautifully printed on the finest paper, and is bound in a brilliant cover of yellow and red (the Imperial and the nuptial colours of China), with symbolic figures of the like mystical import, to remind us that Mr. Simpson went to Peking for the young Emperor's marriage in October, 1872. About fifty of his sketches, including those of the opening of the Suez Canal, and those of the Modoc war in Oregon or California, are here reproduced from the Illustrated London News, by the heliotype process. We feel sure that his readers and ours will be glad to see them again in this new form of presentation.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

We give several illustrations supplied by the sketches of our Special Artist on the Gold Coast. One of them is a view of the camp at Addah, near the mouth of the Volta, seventy miles east of Cape Coast Castle. This camp was formed by Captain Glover's force of Houssas and other native auxiliaries. It is described by Mr. Henty, correspondent of the Standard, in a letter of Dec. 20, from which some particulars may be cited. The English officers with this force were Captain Glover, R.N., special commissioner; Mr. Goldsworthy, assistant commissioner; Captain R. Sartorius, Bengal cavalry, assistant commissioner; Lieutenant Cameron, 19th Regiment; Lieutenant Barnard, 19th Regiment, signal officer; Commander Larcom, R.N., naval operations and landing stores; Lieutenant Moore, R.N.; Mr. Blissett, Control officer; Dr. Rowe, principal medical officer; and Dr. Baile, R.N. The expedition possessed one steamer, the Lady of the Lake, capable of ascending the river and of carrying troops, and three armed steam-launches. It had two Gatling guns, four 7lb. steel guns, and two 4½-inch howitzers. In addition to these it had rocket-tubes, and the launches were fitted with tubes carrying large-sized rockets. These, with a supply of muskets, accoutrements, and ammunition, were the British contribution to the expedition. The native contribution consisted of men. At Janketty, up near the Ashantee frontier, there was a purely native force assembled, consisting at present of about 11,000 men. Of these King Ansa, of Aquapim, brought 3000 men; King Atta, of Akim, 8000. These kings stipulated for pay neither for themselves nor their troops. They offered to put their whole disposable force in the field, and asked only for a few hundred muskets to complete their armament, some powder, and lead. These have been supplied, and the services of other tribes were paid for at a fixed rate. The kings receive £10 per month for every thousand men they can bring into the field; the chiefs receive 5s. a day. Fighting men receive 3d. per day for subsistence, but no pay whatever, while carriers receive 1s. per diem. It was confidently expected that a strong native army would follow Captain Glover. At Addah, and upon the march between that place and Agravie, were 1500 Addahs, 4000 Accras, and 600 Houssas and Yorubas. At Agravie, fifteen miles up the river, were 1000 Accras; and at Blappa, twenty miles farther, were 600 Houssas and Yorubas, 3000 Aquapims, 1000 Creppes, and 1000 Croboes and Shias. It was in the latter part of October that Captain Glover left Accra, accompanied by his Houssas and Yorubas, and by Kings Tanné and Solomon of Accra, the former being the sovereign potentate over the whole tribes of the Eastern Protectorate. The kings promised that their warriors should follow immediately; for in this country it is the custom for the king always to start first with his body-guard, and for the fighting men to come out to them at their first encampment. Upon the present occasion the example of their chiefs did not excite the people to action; and Captain Glover's Houssa force, having been prevented from executing the proposed operations on the Volta, is to join that of Sir Garnet Wolseley, beyond the Prah. In our view of the camp at Addah several conical mounds of earth, nearly six feet high, will be remarked in the foreground. These are the ant-hills, of which naturalists have often spoken as common in West Africa and other tropical regions.

The illustration of "Fresh Arrivals" outside the north gate of Cape Coast Castle needs but a word of explanation. These black fellows loling on the bench, with the muskets laid before them with which they are to be armed, are the Kossos allies of Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition. An English officer, with the interpreter at his right hand, is making out a list of the native soldiery, and, perhaps, giving them orders. Our Artist remarks, with scrupulous moderation, "They are expected to be of great service and use in this war, but they scarcely look what one would expect of fighting men."

AN ELDER OF THE PEOPLE AND A WARRIOR.

FANTEE SERVANT-BOY.

The subjects of his other sketches presented this week are some figures and incidents characteristic of the West African negro races, both at Sierra Leone and on the Gold Coast. Our Artist has made an offering, for this purpose, of his own Fantee servant-boy, standing in an attitude of attention, and seemingly much amazed, while his portrait is drawn by his master's clever pencil. The scene of household muddle inside a native cottage is not pleasant to look at; but some domestic interiors in the British Islands are almost as bad in dirt and disorder, with the additional miseries of cold and hunger, which the negro family are spared by the bounteous tropical climate. The fetish tree, in a village only a mile from Cape Coast Castle, is an institution worthy of note. These poor heathen make a fetish or second-rate god of anything that is at all out of the common—a rock, a stream, a serpent, or a plant of singular growth. Their priests have inclosed the tree with a palisade of sticks. The devout worshippers come up with bottles of rum, which they empty into the hollow space around the trunk of the tree. After giving their deity in this way a good strong dose of their favourite intoxicating drink, they cast in the bottles and say their prayers over the spilt liquor and broken glass. This religious observance will certainly do them more good, body and soul, than to drink the rum themselves, which is the ritual of our English heathen. But when our Artist suggested that some of the Fantees might, perhaps, taste a drop before helping the tree-god to the contents of the bottle, they were very much offended, and thought him a wicked infidel. Once a year, we are told by Dr. Gordon, the inhabitants of every village meet, with sticks and staves, with beating of tom-toms and blowing of horns, to perform the desirable feat of "driving out the devil." They chase him from all corners and through all passages, visiting every house, till they are sure he has gone away. But he very soon comes back, and the affairs of the village are as bad as ever.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUIFRA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Footboards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found distinct of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by bowing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

RECOMMENDED BY ALL THE PROFESSORS. THE DIGITORIUM (a small Dumb Piano-Patent). This remarkable invention materially assists any person to play and become perfect on the Pianoforte, Organ, or Harmonium, by strengthening and rendering the fingers independent in an incredibly short time; and can now be had (price 12s.; or, with ivory keys, 15s.) of the sole Manufacturers, CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE LATE DR. LIVINGSTONE.

MARRIAGE FESTIVITIES FOR THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH: ILLUMINATION OF THE OLD TOWN, EDINBURGH.

DEATH OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.

We all feel a sincere regret for the loss of this brave and benevolent lonely adventurer in the noble enterprise of finding a way for Christian civilisation and European science through the unknown wilderness of Central Africa. The mournful news of his death reached London on Monday, by a message from the agent of the Eastern Telegraph Company at Aden:—"Livingstone died of dysentery, while travelling from Lake Bembe to Unyanyembe. Body embalmed and preserved in salt by his Niasick boys, who are conveying it to Zanzibar, en route for England."

The usual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society was held on Monday evening. Sir Bartle Frere, the President, spoke of this report. He said that it had occupied the thoughts of the council that day, and had caused them great pain for some time. But he added that several members, who had every right to speak with authority, had come to the unanimous conclusion that something more than a doubt was thrown upon the accuracy of this report. An hour or two later, after the business of the meeting, which was the reading of Lieutenant Julian Baker's account of Sir Samuel Baker's late expedition up the Nile, the President introduced Dr. John Kirk, her Majesty's Consul-General at Zanzibar and on the East Coast of Africa. Dr. Kirk said that when he left Zanzibar, on Sept. 13, rumours similar to that which had now been published in London were current in the bazaar of that place. He had while there attempted to sift those rumours, but did not think them worthy to be repeated. They amounted to this—that an Arab trader had received a message from one of his slaves that Livingstone's body had been carried into Unyanyembe, but the negro said that he had not himself seen the body. Knowing how rumours grew in Africa, the additions now made to the story were only what might be expected. Captain Prédoux, the British political agent at Zanzibar, would have been sure to forward at once any trustworthy statement. Lieutenant Cameron, too, of the Livingstone Search and Relief Expedition, must have received the information, if it were true. He could have come down to Zanzibar in less than a month, and would undoubtedly have done so if there had been any news of such importance as this. Dr. Kirk, therefore, believed the rumour to be only the same which he had heard before leaving Zanzibar, though it was now brought by a steamer which left after his departure.

This opinion, having been accepted by the Royal Geographical Society, was received on Tuesday morning, when it appeared in the newspapers, with lively satisfaction. It was, however, in the course of that day unhappily negated by the bad news which came in an official shape, as follows, from her Majesty's Acting Consul-General at Zanzibar:—

"The report of Livingstone's death is confirmed by letters received from Cameron, dated Unyanyembe, Oct. 20. He died of dysentery, after a fortnight's illness, shortly after leaving Lake Bembe for eastward. He had attempted to cross the lake from the north, and, failing in this, had doubled back and rounded the lake, crossing the Chambeze and the other rivers flowing from it; had then crossed the Luapula, and died in Lobisa, after having crossed a marshy country, with the water for three hours at a time above the waist. Ten of his men had died, and the remainder, consisting of seventy-nine men, were marching to Unyanyembe. They had disembowelled the body and had filled it with salt, and had put brandy into the mouth to preserve it. His servant, Chumias, went on ahead to procure provisions, as the party was destitute, and gave intelligence to Cameron, who expected the body in a few days. Cameron and his party had suffered greatly from fever and ophthalmia, but hoped to push on to Ujiji. Livingstone's body may be expected at Zanzibar in February. Please telegraph orders as to disposal. No leaden shells procurable here."

The following despatch is dated from Aden on Tuesday last:—"Dr. Livingstone died at the end of May or beginning of June, between Lake Bembe and Lake Tanganyika, of dysentery, caused by wading through water for several days. His body has been preserved in salt by his servants. When Lieutenant Cameron wrote, on Oct. 22, from Unyanyembe, the body was expected to arrive in four days. Lieutenant Cameron was suffering from temporary blindness. He intended to proceed at once to Ujiji, to get Dr. Livingstone's papers."

Confirmation of the intelligence has also been received by Dr. Petermann, of Gotha, from Herr Brenner, the African traveller, now at Zanzibar. The death of Dr. Livingstone took place, it is stated, on Aug. 15.

It is remembered how, in the spring of 1867, a letter from Dr. Kirk related the particulars of a statement made at Zanzibar by some men of the Johanna island, giving a circumstantial account of the murder of Dr. Livingstone by the savages of the Mafite tribe, on the western shore of Lake Nyassa. The late Sir Roderick Murchison, then president of the Royal Geographical Society, refused to believe this story, and he proved to be in the right. An expedition to search for Dr. Livingstone, and to find his whereabouts, was sent out in the same year, under Mr. E. D. Young and Mr. H. Faulkner. They soon obtained evidence that Dr. Livingstone was alive and still travelling at a much later date than the time of his alleged murder, and that the Johanna men had run away from him, and had since invented the false account of his death. But Dr. Livingstone had been seen by no white man since he started from Zanzibar in March, 1866. It was known that he went inland up the course of the Rovuma, and that he was on the shores of Lake Nyassa some months afterwards. But it was not then known that he left those parts at the beginning of 1867 for the region of Lake Tanganyika. Three or four years more rolled on, and there was no intelligence of his movements. A second expedition was fitted out from England, under the command of Lieutenant Llewellyn Dawson and Lieutenant Henn, accompanied by Mr. W. Oswald Livingstone, son of the missionary explorer. They arrived at Zanzibar in the early part of 1872, and landed on the neighbouring coast at Bagamoyo to pursue their journey in search of Dr. Livingstone. But here they were met, on May 7, by Mr. H. M. Stanley, the special correspondent of the New York Herald, who had left the object of their solicitude, in good health, at Unyanyembe, some fifty days' march from the coast. He had found Dr. Livingstone on Nov. 3 of the preceding year, 1871, at Ujiji, on the east shore of Lake Tanganyika. They had lived together during the winter, exploring the northern coasts of that great lake, and Dr. Livingstone had returned with him as far as Unyanyembe, half way between the lake and the seacoast. It was in March, 1872, that Mr. Stanley and Dr. Livingstone took leave of each other. At that time it was Dr. Livingstone's intention to go back to Ujiji, which, in fact, he did, for letters have since been received from him; and thence to cross over, or go round the southern end of Lake Tanganyika, to finish his explorations of the more westerly chain of lakes and rivers which he had discovered flowing northward from the Chambeze and Lake Bangweolo. The geographical problem which he desired to solve was clearly explained in an article we published on Aug. 24, 1872, with a map designed from the information supplied by Dr. Livingstone's most recent letters. Mr. Stanley's book, "How I Found Livingstone," which appeared in November of that year, added much to our knowledge of the country and native tribes between the seacoast and Lake Tanganyika, but we have gained no more knowledge, since that date, of the later experiences of Dr. Livingstone in the remote interior. We have not yet heard what became of him, or where he actually went, upon his leaving Ujiji, some time after his return thither from his parting with Mr. Stanley at Unyanyembe, in March, 1872. The last letters from him, if we mistake not, were written about midsummer of that year. Eighteen months have therefore passed without any positive news of Dr. Livingstone, till we get the sad news of this week.

There can be no doubt, after this, of the fact which we deplore; and our Portrait of Dr. Livingstone, who has been absent from his native country since 1858, will be regarded with affectionate pride by a multitude of English and Scottish readers, who will naturally sorrow for his death. David Livingstone was born in 1817, at East Kilbride, in Lanarkshire; his father was a small teadealer. As a boy he worked in the Blantyre cotton-mills, but studied, as the Scottish boys often do, and contrived to get his learning at the University of Glasgow. He resolved to become a missionary of the Christian religion to the heathen, and intended at first to go to China. As a preparation for this work he acquired a complete knowledge of medicine and surgery, and was admitted a licentiate of that faculty. Having also gone through a theological course, he was appointed one of the agents of the London Missionary Society. The destined field of his activity was not China, but South Africa, whither he went in 1840. He there met the venerable Robert Moffat, and married his daughter. Livingstone remained in South Africa sixteen years, dwelling far inland with the Bechuana tribes, whom he instructed in the faith, the morals, and the useful arts of Christian Europe. In company with Mr. Oswald, he explored the interior, discovering Lake Ngami; and afterwards, between 1850 and 1854, ascended the Upper Zambesi, traced the courses of its tributary streams, and crossed the entire continent to the west coast, at St. Paul de Loanda. From that port, in September, 1854, he returned by another journey across the continent to the east coast, at Quilimane, where he arrived in the spring of 1856. Dr. Livingstone was in England in 1857, and received many well-deserved tokens of public esteem. Early in the next year he went back to Africa, with a Consular appointment from the British Government. He led an expedition up the Zambesi and Shire rivers, where a Church Missionary station was founded by Bishops Mackenzie and Tozer; but this had a disastrous result. The Lakes Nyassa and Shirwa were also explored by Dr. Livingstone and those associated with him before the end of 1864. He has during the last eight years preferred to go alone, so far as the personal aid and companionship of Europeans is concerned. We shall probably find another opportunity of commenting upon the life and character of this illustrious man, and upon the value of his achievements, which we have often before acknowledged.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE AT ST. PETERSBURG.

Our readers are well aware that the marriage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh to the Grand Duchess Marie, only daughter of the Emperor of Russia, was solemnised yesterday week, at St. Petersburg, with a superb ceremonial and courtly festivities, befitting the occasion. Illustrations of these proceedings will be given next week, from the sketches made there by Mr. Proctor, the Special Artist who was sent by the proprietors of this Journal to the Russian metropolis for that purpose. In the mean time we present an illustration of the arrival of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales at St. Petersburg, on Thursday, the 15th inst.; and one of the grand yearly ceremony of blessing the waters of the Neva. This was performed on Sunday, the 18th, in presence of the Emperor Alexander II., the Prince of Wales, and Prince Arthur; the Duke of Edinburgh was confined indoors that day by a cold.

The Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Arthur, who had left Berlin by the railway train at eleven on the Tuesday night, travelling by way of Warsaw into Russia, arrived at St. Petersburg on the Thursday afternoon, at half-past two o'clock. Their Royal Highnesses were received at the frontier by Russian officers of high rank deputed by the Emperor, with whom was the British Military Attaché to the Embassy. The Princes and Princess were greeted at a station beyond Luga, more than eighty-five miles from St. Petersburg, by the Czarewitch and Czarevna, who had left the capital early in the morning by special train. The Emperor Alexander II., accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, the Grand Dukes Nicholas, Vladimir, and Constantine, and others of the Imperial family of Russia, with the Ministers and high functionaries of the Empire, received the English Princes and Princess on the platform of the Warsaw railway-station. His Majesty and the Prince of Wales and Prince Arthur exchanged the Royal kiss. The band of the Ismailovki Regiment played "God Save the Queen" and "God Bless the Prince of Wales." After greetings and introductions the Imperial and Royal party drove from the station to the Anitchkoff Palace in a number of close carriages and sleighs. The broad streets were lined with people, and, although there was not a London crowd, there was a very good imitation of an English cheer as the first carriage drove away, containing only the Czar and the Prince of Wales sitting side by side. The other Princes and Princesses were in the carriages that followed.

The ceremony of the benediction of the Neva was performed by Monsignor Bashanoff, the Archbishop Metropolitan of St. Petersburg, at eleven o'clock on the Sunday morning. There was first a service in the Imperial chapel of the Winter Palace, at which the Metropolitans of Novgorod, St. Petersburg, and Moscow officiated. The Czar, the Imperial family, and the foreign Princes were present; and the diplomatic circle, the Ministers of State, and the nobles and officers of the Russian army and navy, to the number of about 2000, filled the chapel and the saloon and corridors of the Winter Palace. The service indoors lasted an hour, and was solemn and splendid. The fine singing and recitative of the Russian ritual, the rich robes of the dignitaries, the pomp of silken embroidered banners, of golden crosses and jewelled cuffs, the long curling hair and dignified countenances of the Metropolitans and Bishops, of the priests and choristers, made the ecclesiastical part of the ceremony very gorgeous and impressive. To this was added the magnificence of a thousand uniforms. A better opportunity for witnessing the lavish splendour of the ceremonies at the Winter Palace could not have been had than the passage of the Emperor, the Imperial family, the foreign Princes, the clergy, and the Court, out of the palace to the riverside. The mass and colour of the great procession as it descended the grand staircase and traversed the corridors between lines of soldiery presenting arms was magnificent. The clergy walked first, with the choir of the Imperial chapel, carrying candles and censors and singing verses. After the Metropolitans and their cross-bearers and attendants there was a break in the line, and then followed the Czar, the Prince of Wales, Prince Arthur, the Grand Dukes, and all the Court, walking bareheaded. Lastly came the flags of the regiments, carried by soldiers. The procession passed out of the river entrance of the palace, across the quay, to a pavilion built at the edge of the frozen Neva. There the cross was dipped into the water where the ice had been broken, and the river received the benediction of the Metropolitan to the thunder of the guns of the fortresses of St. Peter and St. Paul. Then followed a service of singing and chanting, and next the colours of the regiments were blessed. The Czar, the Grand Duke, and others kissed the hand of the Metropolitan, and the procession returned to the palace as it came, the Prince of Wales and the Czarewitch walking near the Czar. A space was kept clear on the quay, but the crowd pressed close, the women holding their children up to see the Emperor. His Majesty paused before entering the palace, bowing and looking towards the surging bareheaded masses of his people. The Emperor and the Court having returned to the great dining-room, the colours of the regiments were presented, hands playing the regimental air as each flag was brought. The passages, stairways, and saloons were kept by the splendid troops, cuirassiers and infantry of the Guard, and sailors were drawn up in squadrons and companies on the parquet floors. The Emperor and Princess walked rapidly round the lines, the Imperial salutation of "Health to you!" being returned by the troops speaking all together, according to the Russian military form. The ceremony was followed by a déjeuner, tables in several grand saloons being spread with the splendid profusion for which the Winter Palace is famous.

The Duke of Edinburgh's wedding-day was made the occasion of public festivities in most provincial towns of Great Britain. In London there was not so much done; Royal salutes were fired at one o'clock in St. James's Park and at the Tower; Lord Granville gave a grand dinner; there was a special religious service at the Russian chapel in Welbeck-street, and at night the Russian Embassy in Chesham-place was brightly illuminated; so were the clubs and shops of leading West-End tradesmen. Our three illustrations are from Windsor, Edinburgh and Liverpool.

At Windsor the bells of St. George's Chapel and the parish church rang merry peals during the day, the town was decked with flags, and the Royal standard floated from the flagstaff on the Townhall. Royal salutes were fired in the Long Walk by the Royal Bombardier, and at Fort Belvedere and at Virginia Water. At St. George's Chapel, in the afternoon, a special anthem, composed by Sir George Elvey, was sung in commemoration of the Royal wedding. On relieving the castle guard in the morning, the band of the Grenadier Guards played the march, "Haste to the Wedding," and afterwards the Russian national air. In the evening Prince and Princess Christian had a dinner party and musical entertainment at Cumberland Lodge.

At Liverpool the principal public buildings and places of amusement, together with the ships in the river and the docks, were decorated with flags and bunting. The bells of the parish churches also rang merrily and salutes were fired at noon and at night from the guard ship Caledonia. There was also a display of lime lights and rockets from the Caledonia during the night. The Mayor of Liverpool, with his characteristic munificence, chose to celebrate this joyful occasion in the good old English fashion, by giving a dinner to the poor. His Worship is Mr. A. B. Walker, whose portrait we lately engraved; this gentleman having undertaken, at the commencement of his mayoralty, to build a fine-art gallery for the town, at the cost of £20,000. He now invited about three thousand of the deserving poor of Liverpool to dine at the St. George's Hall. The hall, spacious at it is, was not large enough to entertain all the guests on one evening, and therefore the Mayor divided them into two parties, about 1300 poor men and women (over sixty) being assembled on Friday evening and the same number on Saturday evening. The fare consisted of roast beef, plum-pudding, with beer, tea, fruit and cakes; the old folks, to the majority of whom, no doubt, a full meal of choice and wholesome food was a rare luxury, appeared to enjoy themselves thoroughly. The evening was filled up with speeches, glees, performances by Mr. Best on the grand organ, and instrumental performances by the local police band. Mr. Clarke Aspinall (Borough Coroner), who ably and most zealously seconded the Mayor in the arrangements for the banquets, read an extract from the Queen's published work, describing her Majesty's interviews and kindly relations with the old women in the neighbourhood of Balmoral. The reading appeared greatly to interest the female guests. The Mayor invited a considerable number of the leading residents of the town to witness the entertainments.

At Edinburgh there was a noonday banquet, or luncheon, in the Council Chambers. The Lord Provost entertained the company, amongst whom were the Duke of Buccleuch, Lady Burdett Coutts, the Earl of Perth, and other persons of rank. A telegram, to congratulate his Royal Highness, was sent to the illustrious bridegroom at St. Petersburg. A meeting was held in the Corn Exchange, and resolutions to the same effect were passed. The evening of that day saw a most beautiful sight, like that which was displayed at the marriage of the Prince of Wales. Edinburgh Castle and the tall houses of the Old Town, along Castle Hill, the Lawnmarket, the High-street, and Canongate, crowning the lofty ridge, a mile in length, that stretches from the Castle down to Holyrood, were splendidly illuminated on the side overlooking the valley of the Princess-street Gardens, the Mound, the North Bridge, and the Waverley railway station. The city corporation had granted a sum of money towards the expense of this brilliant show. It could scarcely have been exhibited to such advantage in any other city. Viewed from a central point in Princes-street, the Castle was seen with its various batteries and buildings illuminated in perfect outline, while coloured fires burned at intervals, and two effective displays of rockets and bombs from the Esplanade lent variety to the scene. The sloping bank and gardens lying under the Castle had their walks and terraces also laid with lamps, the same mode of illumination being carried eastward as far as the North Bridge, lighting up the valley and the railway station. On the pier parapets of the North Bridge lamps were also placed, and a series of tall posts bearing their cross arms were raised on the bridge, from which flared similar burning lights. The buildings forming the northern face of the Old Town were brilliantly illuminated from the castle to the North Bridge. The prominent buildings on the slope were specially illuminated. The towering mass of the Bank of Scotland, recently completed, stood out prominent by its rich and elaborate ornamentation. The architectural features of the building were picked out in white lamps, while each window showed lamps arranged in geometric figures. The adjoining masses of building, the Savings-bank on the one side and the new buildings in St. Giles-street on the other, were brilliantly lighted up. The square of the municipal offices, showing ten stories to Princes-street, was illuminated by candles placed so thickly in each window that the whole building seemed one mass of flame. Across the valley, on the Prince's-street side, the new General Post Office bore a double row of burners along its summit, while the street fronts were lighted with rows of coloured light and brilliant transparencies. The pediments of Waterloo-place were similarly illuminated; and the vista in that direction was terminated by Nelson's Monument brightly lighted. The Registers House bore a beautiful series of crystal transparencies. In the line of Prince's-street one of the most beautiful objects was the Royal Institution, outlined by several hundred opal lamps. In George-street the vistas east and west were closed by St. George's Church and Melville's Monument. The facade, dome, and lantern of the one and the stately pillar of the other were hung with white lamps. At an early hour in the evening a bonfire, consisting of fifteen tons of railway sleepers soaked in tar, was lit on the summit of Arthur's Seat, and told the district for fifty miles round that Edinburgh was rejoicing. On the brow of Salisbury Crags coloured fires burnt at intervals. Within the city the same mode of intermittent illumination was here and there adopted with much effect. The streets continued crowded until a very late hour, but the evening happily passed without accident.

THE DISSOLUTION.

Seldom, if ever, has the word surprise been multiplied on a nation's lips as it was on that day of eccentric memory, Saturday, Jan. 24, 1874. On that morning unconscious England woke and found itself in the throes of a dissolution of a Parliament which it had been anticipated would have died peacefully in the penultimate year of its so-called natural life. In general Mr. Gladstone has a knack of defying prediction and putting the camps of the political prophets to confusion, but in this instance he has outdone himself. We have the testimony of one subordinate member of the Ministry that there was not a more astonished man in the country than himself on that eventful morning, and it has leaked out that two heads of departments went to Downing-street to the Cabinet Council with their portfolios full of special measures of their own, unwitting of what was to occur. In imagination an amusing picture might be drawn of that Cabinet interior when suddenly the Prime Minister—doubtless in an imperative, perhaps imperious, manner—gave to two thirds of his colleagues, innocent of what was coming, the alternative of dissolution or resignation. There was no choice between unanimity and dispersion as a Government, and of course they were unanimous. Then, perhaps, were distributed amongst them copies of that manifesto which was addressed, with a sort of comical incongruity, to the electors of Greenwich—an experiment upon a not very distinguished body—which proclaimed a policy, and contained at least one election cry. The late Parliament was chosen on the cry of "Gladstone and the abolition of the Irish Church!" Now it is "Gladstone and the abolition of the income tax!" Always abolition! It is apparent, from that "prolix narrative" which was to go through Greenwich to the rest of the country, that the Prime Minister has never recovered the check he received last year on the Irish University Bill; he chafed at finding that he was not ever to go forth conquering and to conquer; and that, in his estimation, his party in the House of Commons had become no better than a "rabble rout." There is but one way to deal with Parliamentary rebels, and that is to make them undergo the quenching process of a dissolution; and it remains to be seen what taming effect will be the result on those who return to the House after passing through that ordeal. If Mr. Gladstone gets a compliant and ductile majority, there is scarcely a subject on which he will not lay his reforming hands. Local taxation, education, home rule, county franchise, Universities, land laws, game laws, liquor laws; and, when all these and more have been dealt with, perhaps an attempt will be made to solve that problem which has hitherto defied all efforts—squaring the circle.

Probably it would be as easy to move the sculptured Sphinx as to startle Mr. Disraeli; but even he may have uttered what people used paradoxically to call a mental ejaculation, when he heard the news of the Ministerial coup-d'état. The manifesto of the Prime Minister followed immediately after the appeal of the leader of the Opposition to his friends to be in their places on the day of the meeting of Parliament, and an air of ridicule was thus cast on the proceeding, for he had practically addressed a non-existent body. But the unkindest cut of all was that the pre-session dinners of the leaders of the Opposition, which had been ordered, had to be stayed almost at the moment of gastronomic projection. The climax of aggravation being thus attained, Mr. Disraeli had to produce his manifesto, and he did so, evidently with all the bitterness of his whole heart and spirit. His address to the electors of Buckinghamshire, saving the absence of diffuseness, might be taken for a report of one of his speeches. Personality, phrase-making, epigram, sarcasm, underlain with quiet humour and audacity, are its characteristics. Every word is "Gladstone," just as it is told of a celebrated speech of the first Pitt, that "every word was Murray." He assumes that Mr. Gladstone's primary motive for dissolving is his dread of incurring pains and penalties for a fresh violation of Constitutional law in retaining for several months a seat in Parliament to which he was no longer entitled. As to the greater part of the declaration of Ministerial policy, it is in a manner said to be another instance of that which Mr. Disraeli himself once described as a political party finding their opponents bathing and stealing their clothes, for it is exactly that which the Conservatives have always professed, and which therefore could have been carried out by them as well as by Mr. Gladstone. Awfully ominous is he on "adjustment of taxation," which, in his view, means "increase;" but, perhaps, in no part of his prolixity is he more severe on the enormities of the Ministry than on their having committed an act of ignorance or folly in relinquishing a treaty which secured to England the freedom of the Strait of Malacca. Probably this is not known to the country generally, but now it will doubtless be used with tremendous effect during the elections, and perhaps the Conservatives could have no more thrilling cry than the "freedom of the Strait of Malacca." Having stigmatised the Prime Minister's state paper as a "prolix narrative," the leader of the Opposition indorses that illustration by being contemptuously brief in his own; but it is a concentrated sneer and a direct defiance.

It may be that Mr. Disraeli did not consider that Mr. Lowe had not published his address to his constituents of the University of London; but probably he will not be astonished or very much discomposed by the fact that that document is a determinate rejoinder to his reply to the Prime Minister. The Home Secretary has put forth his power of retort without sparing, and in a style which is curiously coincident with his mode of speaking; he, in a few incisive sentences, tells the history of Mr. Disraeli's political career; and as regards his solemn assertions in his address, adroitly manages—to use a Castlereaghian phrase—to make him turn his back upon himself. The acme of sarcasm is reached when Mr. Lowe treats of Mr. Disraeli as a finance minister; and the sneer is supreme when he talks of that gentleman's "never having indulged in the luxury of a considerable surplus of his own"—is perfectly welcome to an imaginary appropriation of the accumulation of others. Looking at the matter of Mr. Lowe's statement generally, it is not improbable that Mr. Disraeli may be chuckling over the idea that his enemy has written an address; and when that review of the Ministerial position in the House, which is inevitable, comes, he will not forget that Mr. Lowe has always been his favourite hôte noir, and act accordingly. Especially it may be opined that he will revel in comment on that mysterious sentence with which Mr. Lowe concludes his address, and demand to know what occult meaning is hid in the words "The night comes upon all, but we will not draw the curtain while it is yet day."

As regards the general ruck of memberdom, there was in the first days of the crisis confusion, and doubtless a great deal of astonishment and perhaps some irritation. The "fiery cross" which ran through the country found most of them in a state of unpreparedness; many were far from the places of their representation; others were slowly wending their homeward way, proposing to be just in time for the 5th of February; and intending candidates found themselves in a state of half-organisation. It must be said that, on the whole, the emergency has been energetically met. Between Saturday morning and Monday night an amount of electioneering business was done that was marvellous, and very much was known about who was going to stand and who was going to retire. Hardly ever, if at all, was an election so suddenly entered upon; and in the contracted space of fifteen or sixteen days the operation of creating anew a branch of the Legislature will have to be performed. It will be a great feat, though many will be the chances and "flukes," and it is not unlikely that there will be numerous "scratch" returns.

MUSIC.

Some important performances, adverted to last week, took place too near the close thereof to admit of notice until now.

On Thursday evening the British Orchestral Society opened its second season with a programme of strong interest in the instrumental selection, which included Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's overture, "Les Naiades," that by Cherubini to his opera, "Les Deux Journées," a new saltarello (for orchestra) by Mr. J. Hamilton Clarke, and Mozart's concerto for two pianofortes, performed by Miss Linda Scates and Mr. Walter Macfarren. The fine band of seventy-five performers—including Mr. Carrodus as principal violin, and many other of our best instrumentalists, conducted by Mr. George Mount—gave good effect to the orchestral music. Mr. Clarke's new piece is skilfully scored, and possesses the animation proper to the character implied by its title. It was greatly applauded, and the composer was called on at the conclusion. Miss Scates, in the leading part of the double concerto, displayed that neatness of mechanism and refinement of style which have before been commented on in noticing her public performances. This young lady is one of the many excellent pianists who have benefited by the advantages offered by the Royal Academy of Music under its present Principal, Sir W. S. Bennett. The vocal pieces at the concert referred to were Mendelssohn's scena, "Infelice," finely sung by Miss Edith Wynne; the air (with recitative), "I dreamt I was in heaven," from Sir M. Costa's "Naaman;" and the cavatina, "Fac ut portem," from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," expressively given by Miss Augusta Roche. Previous to the concert the orchestra played the National Anthem and the Russian Hymn, in compliment to the Duke of Edinburgh, who is the patron of the society.

On Friday evening (last week) an interesting revival took place—Dr. Crotch's "Palestine" having then been performed by the Sacred Harmonic Society. The composer attained high eminence in his day, and justified it by his special and general acquirements, practical and theoretical, and by some music which has too long been ignored, among which the oratorio "Palestine" is the most important. Dr. Crotch was born in 1775, and attracted public attention as a juvenile prodigy when only four years old. He took his degree of Doctor of Music at Oxford in 1799, and subsequently became known as a lecturer on music at the Royal Institution. On the establishment of the Royal Academy of Music, in 1822, Dr. Crotch was appointed principal. His oratorio "Palestine" was produced in 1812, the text having been selected by himself from Bishop Heber's poem. As an ardent admirer of Handel, it is not surprising to find frequent reflections of that composer in Dr. Crotch's oratorio. These, however, are rather indications of the chief source of his studies than plagiarisms—power and individuality being sufficiently manifested to render the oratorio a work of permanent interest. Grandeur, science, and beauty are alternately displayed in the choral writing, a great impression having been produced by the movements entitled "Rest of thy sons," "O, happy once," "Let Sinai tell," "Hence all his might," "When the harp awoke," "Nor vain their hope," "Daughter of Zion," and the concluding "Hallelujah." Of the soprano solos (sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington) the principal are the airs "Triumphant race," "In frantic converse" (with chorus), "E'en they who dragged," and "No more your thirsty rocks." The tenor airs were given with much effect by Mr. Cummings, especially "But now thy sons" (with chorus), "Did Israel shrink," and "Vengeance, thy fiery wing." Some of the most important solo pieces are for bass (originally sung by the celebrated Bartleman), and these were very finely given by Signor Agnesi, particularly the airs, "For thee his ivory load" and "But who is he." The beautiful quartet "Lo star-led chiefs" (which was long a favourite extract from the oratorio) again pleased, as it always must, by its melodious grace. Two other quartets, "Be peace on earth" and "Then on your tops," are also noticeable, as likewise is an effective sextet, "Lo! cherub bands" (in which Mr. Carter was a serviceable second tenor); the remaining concerted piece for solo voices being a well-written duet, "Such the faint echo," for the principal soprano and tenor. Miss Ellen Horne, as second soprano, and Miss Julia Elton, as contralto, rendered efficient aid in various portions of the solo music. For an English work of its date the orchestral writing is very full and elaborate, the brass instruments being used, indeed, in occasional excess. Probably in this latter respect the score has been "improved" for the recent performance, which was conducted by Sir Michael Costa, Mr. Willing having presided at the organ, as usual. The oratorio was preceded by the National Anthem. "Elijah" is to be given by the society on Feb. 6.

Simultaneously with the concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society at Exeter Hall, the Wagner Society was giving the third concert of its second season at St. James's Hall. The programme on this occasion presented, for the first time, the specialty of choral extracts from three of Wagner's operas—"Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," "Tannhäuser," and "Der Fliegende Holländer." From the first the extracts were the two chorales (from acts i. and ii.), the second of which was encored; the selections from "Tannhäuser" having been the Shepherd's Song (sung by Mdlle. Gaetano) and Chorus of Pilgrims, the chorus at the end of the third act, and the Reception of the Guests and grand march from the second act. The last-named opera furnished six specimens—the overture, the Pilot's Song (sung by Mr. Bernard Lane), with chorus, Senta's legendary ballad, "The Phantom Ship" (by Mdlle. Gaetano), the "Spinning Chorus," the duet between Senta and the Flying Dutchman (Mdlle. Gaetano and Signor Gustave Garcia), and the Chorus of Sailors. The newly-associated choir sang with good effect in some instances, and will, no doubt, be still more efficient when better acquainted with a difficult style of music that is probably new to many of the choristers. The Wagner selection was preceded by Schubert's "Ungarischer Marsch" and "Reiter Marsch," instrumented by Liszt. Mr. Dannreuther conducted as usual. The next concert will take place on Feb. 13, when a copious selection—orchestral, solo, and choral—will be given from Wagner's "Lohengrin," besides pieces by other composers.

Last week's Saturday Concert at the Crystal Palace brought forward a symphony of Haydn's, which had not previously been given there, and a concerto for the organ (with orchestral accompaniments) performed for the first time. The former (in the key of E minor) is a comparatively early work (about 1770), with much of the grace and power which distinguish the composer's later productions of the kind, and containing a masterly minuet in canon. The concerto is a new work by Mr. Henry Gadsby, several of whose orchestral pieces have been successfully produced at these concerts. In the fresh essay now referred to Mr. Gadsby has been equally successful. It is written with good command of general effect; and special, practical knowledge of the solo instrument. It was finely played by Dr. Stainer and greatly applauded, the composer having been called on. Another novelty at Saturday's concert was a movement from a string quartet by Veit, some clever variations on the Russian national hymn, admirably played by all the stringed instruments of the orchestra. Weber's "Jubilee" overture and Beethoven's third "Leonora" overture completed the instrumental selection, vocal pieces having been contributed by Madame Otto-Alvsleben and Signor Agnesi.

The seventh subscription concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, on Thursday week, consisted of performances of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" ("Lobgesang") and Rossini's "Stabat Mater," an association offering a strong contrast between works belonging to very opposite schools, and each a masterpiece. The choruses were finely sung by the gigantic choir, the solo vocalists of the evening having been Madame Corani, Misses Sterling and Weale, Mr. Cummings, and Signor Agnesi. Mr. Barnby conducted and Dr. Stainer presided at the organ.

This week's Monday Popular Concert included the performance, for the first time, of a pianoforte quartet by Brahms, op. 25, in G minor, a work that immediately preceded that in A major, which has several times been given at these concerts, with which it may fully compare in merit, with the advantage of somewhat less diffuseness. Mr. Hallé, who was the pianist, was also heard in unaccompanied solos and in a sonata of Bach, for piano and violin, with the co-operation of Madame Norman-Néruda, who was the leading violinist in the quartet. Miss Jessie Jones and Mdlle. Reimer were the vocalists, and Mr. Zerbini was the accompanist.

The Manchester papers report the complete success of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's oratorio "St. John the Baptist," which was performed there on Thursday week, conducted by Mr. Charles Hallé, as at the original production of the work at last year's Bristol festival, and with the same solo-singers—Messdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley. As already mentioned, the oratorio is to be given in London during the present season of the Sacred Harmonic Society.

The Royal Albert Hall Orchestral Society is to give the first private concert of its new season this (Saturday) evening, when the selection will comprise Mozart's symphony in E flat and the overtures to "Masaniello," "Fidelio," and "Haydée."

The death of Madame Parepa-Rosa—which took place on the morning of Thursday week—puts an end to the scheme of the English opera performances announced to commence at Drury Lane Theatre, on March 2, under the direction of the lady's husband, Mr. Carl Rosa; the co-operation of the deceased singer, as prima-donna, having been an all-important feature in the undertaking, which included the production of Wagner's "Lohengrin," with Madame Parepa-Rosa as Elsa. The premature death of this highly-accomplished and versatile artist is a real loss to the musical public, as well as a grief to the large circle of relatives and friends by whom she was loved and esteemed. We intend to give a portrait of Madame Parepa-Rosa next week, until when we reserve some particulars of her career.

THEATRES.

The managements of the present day are indefatigable, and in their endeavours to force business anticipate the usual period of changes, and vary their bills in a most unexpected manner.

The Olympic revived, on Monday, Morton's pleasant drama of "All that Glitters is Not Gold." Miss Fowler made the best of her opportunity to perform Martha Gibbs, and gave a most excellent interpretation of the part—so true to nature that art may be said on this occasion completely to have concealed art.

At the Globe also we have had another version of "Le Réveillon," of M.M. Meilhac and Halévy, under the title of "Committed for Trial." This time the work has been done by Mr. Latour Tomline, who has differed from the original in many instances, and if he had done so in as many more would have rendered the result still more acceptable to our conventional public. The whimsicality of the incidents has, however, been preserved, and the audience are thrown into a merry mood which ensures the cordial reception of the play to the end. The performance is remarkable for having introduced Mr. Arthur Cecil to the regular boards. He sustains the character of Jonathan Wagstaffe, the name of the individual who is arrested for taking a policeman's number, an act which initiates all the funny situations which form the main interest of the piece. Notwithstanding the impropriety of many of these, the new version of "Le Réveillon" is likely to become popular. We may mention that the recent performance of the original at the Holborn by the French company has been very successful.

On Saturday the comedy of "John Bull" was again performed at the Gaiety, with Mr. Phelps in the part of Job Thornbury and Mr. Toole as Brulgruddery. The part of the Hon. Tom Shuffleton, however, had not the advantage of Mr. Charles Mathews, but the character was excellently well sustained by Mr. H. J. Montague, the much-esteemed lessee of the Globe. Mr. Hermann Vezin achieves distinction in Peregrine, and Mr. Lionel Brough is great in the small part of Dan. The important rôle of Mary Thornbury was admirably filled by Miss Carlisle; Miss Leigh made a capital Mrs. Brulgruddery; and Miss Eleanor Bufton, as Lady Braymore, played with appropriate vivacity and dash.

The Swiney Prize of the Society of Arts, consisting of a silver goblet, value £100, containing gold coin to the same amount, has been awarded to the Right Hon. Sir Robert J. Phillimore, Judge of the Court of Admiralty, for his work entitled "Commentaries on International Law." The prize is given under a bequest of the late Dr. Swiney, and is awarded every fifth anniversary of his death to the author of the best published treatise on jurisprudence.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

RESEMBLANCE OF ANCIENT AND MODERN LIFE.

Professor P. Martin Duncan devoted his second lecture on Palæontology, on Thursday week, the 22nd inst., to explaining how resemblance in form and anatomical details between extinct and existing animals is suggestive of life under similar external conditions. Palæontology made but slight progress until geology and comparative anatomy rose to the dignity of inductive sciences. This was promoted greatly by Hutton's system of geological reasoning, which insisted upon uniformity and continuity in the operations of Nature, past and present, and which excluded all causes not supposed to belong to the present order of things from arguments respecting the past. By this the study of the organic remains of the olden time was much enlightened, and William Smith, the author of our first geological survey, showed how certain strata may be recognised by the organic remains found in them. Cuvier also, as a comparative anatomist, did not hesitate to ascribe the same method of life and external conditions to fossil forms and to those they most resemble in existing nature. After illustrating this opinion by the history of an opossum-like animal found by Cuvier in the gypsum of Paris, Professor Duncan commented on the bearings upon the question afforded by the great fauna (so characteristic of the Africo-Indian province) found by Falconer and Cantley in the sub-Himalayas. Keeping in view the opinions respecting the relations of resemblance in form and structure, and the surrounding conditions of life, the physical geography of the chloritic or green-sand series and the white chalk was worked out by the discussion of the nature and peculiarities of modern and ancient simple or deep-sea corals and compound or reef corals. It was shown that in the chloritic age there were reefs with all the necessary conditions of temperature and sea in the area of the West Indies, Southern India, North Africa, the south-east of France, and even in the high latitude of Salzburg. The subsidence of these localities, and the encroachment or overlap of the deep-sea deposits, were explained, as well as the manner in which deep-sea corals flourished in water of low temperature over the buried reef corals. The illustrations comprised diagrams and specimens.

DISCOVERY OF PERFECTLY PARALLEL MOTION.

Professor Sylvester, M.A., F.R.S., at the Friday evening meeting on the 23rd inst., gave a discourse on some recent discoveries in the mechanical conversion of motion. In his introductory remarks he explained that in all previous parallel motions, including Watt's, the head of the piston-rod of a steam-engine describes a figure of eight, and not a straight line; and he stated that several of the most eminent mathematicians had tried hard, and failed in the endeavour, to invent an arrangement of linkwork connecting the piston-rod with the beam of the steam-engine, so that the former should move at each point of its path strictly in the direction of its own length, which cannot occur unless every point in it describes an accurate straight line. A French engineer, M. Peaucellier, however, has solved the problem, by many deemed impossible, and some time ago made a discovery of very great importance in practical mechanics, which, till the present time, has not received the attention it merits. Diagrams and apparatus were exhibited illustrating this invention: first, a four-sided figure, a jointed rhomb or diamond, to two angles of which a pair of equal links jointed on to each other (termed the connectors) were attached. This combination (termed a cell) consisted in all of six links, four belonging to the diamond and two to the connectors; and the Professor showed that, in whatever way the links of the cell were moved and the angles varied, the point of union of the last-named pair of links (named the fulcrum) always remained in a straight line with two opposite points or poles of the diamond. Our limited space prevents us following Professor Sylvester in his demonstrations; but he showed that when the fulcrum was fixed, and one of the poles (named the power-point) was made to move in the plane of the cell and in an arc of a circle which would, if completed, pass through the fulcrum, then the other pole (named the weight-point) moved in an absolutely true straight line. The power-point and weight-point were described as driver and follower; and the driver, attached to a fixed point by a rod equal to the radius of the circle on which it moves, constitutes a Peaucellier cell, or Peaucellier's perfect parallel motion. Among the various models exhibited was one demonstrating that, by the addition of extra pairs of links to the cell, any number of rods may be made to move simultaneously in parallel straight lines, thereby creating a perfect compound parallel motion. The Professor explained how this invention may be rendered available in the production of charts, in millwright's work, in calculating-machines, and in many other processes, thereby greatly economising very expensive hand labour; and he stated that this perfect parallel motion had already been employed in making the ventilation machinery for the Houses of Parliament. In concluding, he said that, besides opening out a new field of mathematical inquiry, Peaucellier's principle "constitutes a new vital element of machinery second in importance to none that has been invented since the introduction into mechanism of the Archimedean screw, more than two thousand years ago." George Busk, Esq., F.R.S., the treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

KANT'S CRITICAL PHILOSOPHY.

Professor Croom Robertson began his second lecture on Kant's Critical Philosophy, on Saturday last, with a notice of the philosopher's great work, "The Kritik of Pure Reason," and the very serviceable introduction to it, named "The Prolegomena to any future Metaphysic." Kant did not write out his work till he had thought it out; the mere writing taking only five months, after many years of mental effort. It was a system of philosophical thought, fully and equably developed in all its parts, and described by himself as "the inventory of all our possessions through pure reason, systematically disposed." As reason, it dealt with knowing (the mind's faculty of knowledge), not with being; as pure reason, it dealt with knowledge dependent wholly on the mind, or with the faculty before and apart from all experience; and as the "Kritik of Pure Reason," it was an exhaustively reasoned search for the conditions of such knowledge. The doctrines of sense and thought which Kant evolved he termed "transcendental," because they treated of the conditions of knowledge prior to experience. Among his illustrations Professor Robertson commented on Kant's exposition of the nature of mathematics, especially as geometry as a pure science. In doing this he said that the mind is not only liable to be affected, but is capable of acting in a determinate manner by its own constitution. This action is termed thinking, and how thought must operate to become knowledge is the central question in the whole critical inquiry. Geometrical science, being knowledge, involves thinking, or the spontaneous activity of mind; but, as its judgments are said to be intuitive, and depending upon no generalised experience, the mental action takes place in a peculiar manner, which may be termed an act of productive imagination. Thus, when we think of a line or circle we draw it in thought by a motion which, says Kant, is an act of pure subject. Drawing it, we, in the very act or fact, accomplish a synthesis of the successive stages. In the latter part of the lecture the Professor expounded Kant's view of various forms of sensibility and his doctrine of "transcendental æsthetic," which shows the moulding or transformation that sensations must undergo in order to be of account for knowledge. In concluding, the Professor contrasted Kant's opinions with the doctrines of Mill and other modern philosophers, saying that Kant's theory of space and geometry was now put on its defence, and had a hard task to maintain itself. Yet no theory that may take its place can do so without well regarding all that it involves. Of such importance it can never be robbed.

CHANGES OF THE BLOOD DURING RESPIRATION.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., in his third lecture, on Tuesday last, described the changes in the blood during respiration. In considering the carriage of oxygen from the lungs to the tissues by the pigment of the blood-corpuscles, a full account was given of the structure of the corpuscles and pigment. This substance, termed hemoglobin, has been recently the subject of elaborate investigation by Preyer, and from the chemical formula obtained by him it appears to be the most complex organic substance with which we are acquainted; and, in consequence of the great variety of definite compounds into which it may be decomposed, it will figure in organic chemistry far more prominently than it has hitherto done. The only known pure form of albumen has been obtained by splitting up this blood pigment, and it is probable that ere long the precise composition of albumen will be ascertained. The mode of readily obtaining hemoglobin crystals from blood was described, and the characteristic spectra given by oxidised and reduced hemoglobin were thrown upon a screen. The action of carbonic oxide and other gases upon hemoglobin was considered, and the strong oxidising power possessed by the oxygen in the blood corpuscles was shown by an experiment, in which the resin of guaiacum was oxidised by it. It is on account of this power that it is believed that the corpuscles can transform oxygen into ozone. The carriage of carbonic acid from the tissues to the lungs by the sodium carbonate and the phosphate of the blood was described, and the cause of the interchange of gases in the lung and in the systemic capillaries, as well as the action of gases and other agents upon the colour of the blood, were explained and illustrated by experiment. In the concluding part of the lecture Professor Rutherford described the experiments by which Bernard and others have shown that the blood is cooled as it passes through the lungs. He said that this statement had been challenged, but he considered Bernard's experiments to be the most trustworthy. The following estimates of the amount of gases in blood were referred to by the Professor:—

	Arterial Blood.	Venous Blood.
Oxygen ...	15 per cent by volume	5 per cent.
Carbonic Acid ...	30 "	35 "

Mr. Alfred H. Garrod will give a discourse on the Heart and the Sphygmograph at the Friday evening meeting, Feb. 6.

NEW BOOKS.

An undeservedly vacant niche in the biographical gallery of celebrated men belonging to an important epoch has been lately filled up in a sufficiently satisfactory manner by the publication of two large volumes, entitled The Life of the Right Hon. Spencer Perceval, including his Correspondence with numerous distinguished Persons, by his grandson, Spencer Walpole (Hurst and Blackett). It may appear curious that sixty years should have elapsed without producing anybody who felt called upon to perform so pious a duty towards the dead and so acceptable an attention towards the living. But it is believed that, with the exception of an anonymous memoir, not generally known or generally obtainable, there has hitherto been no attempt to write a life of Perceval. Still, it is not only for lack of a "sacred bard" that Perceval and his deeds have met with the fate of those brave men who preceded Agamemnon. Nor is the oblivion into which both his name and his acts appear to have, for at least a quarter of a century past, completely fallen to be attributed entirely, though to some extent it must be, to the fact that, noble as was his birth and estimable as was his private character, yet, as a public man, he was nothing if not a mere Parliamentary debater and a Minister of the stamp for which moulders of popular opinion and writers of popular literature, influenced by quite a new order of political ideas, feel nowadays no sympathy, even if they do not indorse what Sydney Smith said about his being "faithful to Mrs. Perceval and kind to the Master Percevals," or what a modern historian has written to the effect that "it was reserved for Mr. Perceval to show that Addington was not the weakest possible Minister." All this may have had something to do with the neglect, biographically and memorially, with which Mr. Perceval had hitherto been treated. But it is probable that another and more powerful reason may be traced to the law of action and reaction, which, we are told, are equal and opposite. Now, the melancholy death of Mr. Perceval, who, it may be remembered, even by those who have forgotten all else about him, was assassinated by one Bellingham in the lobby of the House of Commons, elicited so lavish and even disproportionate an expenditure of grief, indignation, pecuniary grants, and monumental workmanship, at the time, that it is no wonder if everything that could be considered to have been done, if exhaustion supervened upon excitement, and if excess of commemoration were followed by long forgetfulness. But it was certainly time for a revival of memory; and Mr. Perceval's biographer must be complimented upon having stopped a biographical gap very successfully. A minor point of interest, as regards Mr. Perceval, becomes a major point of interest, as regards ephemeral topics of our day; for he filled simultaneously two offices and gave rise to a question touching the vacation of seats in Parliament, just as Mr. Gladstone has lately done. It would be well for a reader to begin with a perusal of the "errata" prefixed to the first volume, else somebody may be shocked to find Canning described at p. 345 of the first volume as "the son of a needy and dissolute actor." The expression has given rise to some correspondence in the columns of a daily contemporary; and a horror has been exhibited at the confusion made by Mr. Walpole between "father-in-law" and "stepfather." Similar confusion is by no means uncommon amongst writers of novels, if not of more solid works; and, curiously enough, the same word, beau-père, means, in French—as most likely everybody knows—both father-in-law and stepfather.

The privilege of effecting an introduction between the reader and many notabilities is afforded by Distinguished Persons in Russian Society, translated from the German by F. E. Bunnell (Smith, Elder, and Co.). Let the reader, then, be prepared, regardless whether the personage be still alive or dead and buried, to go through the ceremony of bowing, in regular order, to Grand Duchess Helena, wife of Grand Duke Michael and sister-in-law of Czar Nicholas; to Count Peter Schuvaloff; to Countess Antoinette Bludoff, "the daughter of the most distinguished of all the counsellors who had surrounded the throne of the Emperor Nicholas;" to the two Counts Adlerberg, of whom one "was the shadow and bosom friend of the Emperor Nicholas," and the other is "the shadow and bosom friend of Alexander II.;" to the brothers Milutin, one "Minister of War," and the other, when he was amongst the living, "secretary of State for Poland;" to Prince Gortschakoff, with whom all England has already more than a slight acquaintance; to Count Protassoff, who is said to have "destroyed the united Greek Church of Lithuania and West Russia;" to M. P. A. Waluieff, described as "Gortschakoff's future successor as Chancellor of the Empire;" to General Ignatieff, whose flattering nickname appears to be, in some circles, "the father of lies;" to certain "ministers of education," and to a few "authors and journalists." About each and all of these "distinguished persons" a great deal of information, based partly on "attentive observation" and partly on "reliable sources," is contained in a translation, which is a fair specimen of the art that consists in concealing art.

Some idea of keeping alive the memory of the French Empire probably led to the publication of Sketches of Modern Paris, translated from Herr Ebeling's German by Frances Locock (Provost and Co.). At any rate, the Emperor Napoleon III. and the Empress Eugénie "preside," as a Frenchman might say, over the sketches, which, be it at once acknowledged, are very well worth reading. To have been recommended to so lively and pleasant a collection of pages will, no doubt, be considered a real kindness by anybody who does not know why violets are so much affected by Bonapartists, who is not familiar with Fontainebleau or does not "comprehend the great importance of Barbizon," who has not had enough of "Parisian celebrities," who enjoys quaint little stories, and who is ready to read yet more about the different sentiments with which Parisians and Germans regard Christmas and the Christmas-tree and the new year, and, sooth to say, all things, including the Rhine. The author himself expresses his thanks for the "careful and spirited translation;" and sardonic beings must not consider the compliment, which appears to be well-deserved, materially impaired by the ingeniously-appended confession of "ignorance which prevented me from translating some of my Parisian sketches into the beautiful language of Albion, for the benefit of some of my friends there."

Ben Jonson, Shakspeare, Hooker, Jeremy Taylor, Bunyan, Milton, Hobbes, Dryden, Wycherley, Congreve, Vanbrugh, Farquhar, and Sheridan, to say nothing of others, are vigorously handled in the second volume of the History of English Literature, by H. C. Taine, D.C.L., translated from the French by H. Van Laun, one of the Masters at the Edinburgh Academy (Edinburgh: Edmonston and Douglas). The publishers' part has been performed in a way that invites one to read; and the translator appears to have acquitted himself in a manner calculated to defy detection. As for the author, his name is a sure passport to the favour of the discriminating and will command respectful attention; and if it be said that his remarks are likely, once and again, to rouse the British lion, it must be added that he gives an opportunity for the application of an old saying, fas est et ab hoste doceri.

Whosoever has not already been made sufficiently sick with tales of intolerance and of semi-political, semi-religious oppression, will find a mental and moral emetic, effectually and even palatably, if that be possible, prepared, in The Huguenots in France after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, by Samuel Smiles (Strahan and Co.). To his main narrative the author has added an account of "a visit to the country of the Vaudois," together, of course, with a supplementary sketch of scenes which have made that country mournfully dear to those who cherish the memory of the Reformation. Not that the Vaudians were Reformers; they never needed reform, but were rather the model after which the Church was to be reformed and fashioned. The author commands instant and vehement assent when he says that "it shakes one's faith in history to observe the contradictory statements published with regard to French political or religious facts;" but he may possibly excite dissent when he prefers to derive the name of Vaudians from the valleys they inhabited, rather than from one of their earliest martyrs.

Sir Bernard Burke's Peerage and Baronetage (Harrison) has reached its thirty-sixth edition, and now, in its full maturity, may be considered to have taken deep root in popular favour. It has, in truth, become an institution of the country, and is consulted and pored over wherever the English language is read. At home it is necessary for every-day reference in society, in business, and in legal research; but in the colonies, in distant Australia and India, it serves also as a chronicle of information regarding absent relatives and friends incalculably interesting. All classes of the community love to look into the "Peerage." It is an inherent taste, affording strong proof of that appreciation of constituted rank which is part and parcel of the nature of Englishmen, from the Prince to the peasant. No other country has such an annual record of its nobility as "Burke's Peerage and Baronetage." It is as superior in its general scope and in its completeness and value as England's nobility is confessedly above that of any other kingdom of Europe. Germany depends on the "Almanach de Gotha;" but, useful as that portly little tome undoubtedly is, it embraces only Royal or quasi-Royal potentates. France has an "Annuaire de la Noblesse," a very well-compiled summary; but then, again, the "Annuaire" includes a small portion only of the titled classes. Italy and Spain have nothing of the kind, nor has Russia, as far as we know, any similar annual "Peerage." Glancing over the pages of this famous "Red Book" one is struck by the numerous changes death each year causes. Full twenty Peers passed away in 1873, the most memorable being Lords Lytton, Westbury, Ossington, Zetland, Delawarr, Wolverton, Hardwicke, Howden, Galloway, Hope-toun, Cadogan, Lyveden, Athlumney, Lisburne, Marjoribanks, and Zouche. A like mortality has fallen on the Baronets. Some five-and-twenty died in the same period, the most notable being Sir W. Verner, Sir J. Lethbridge, Sir G. Cartier, Sir T. B. Western, Sir D. Salomons, Sir F. D. Astley, Sir J. Anson, Sir R. Howard, Sir J. Chetwode, Sir W. Eden, and Sir H. Holland. Of all these members of the Upper Ten Thousand memoirs have appeared in our "Obituary." The most dignified marriage in the ranks of the aristocracy in 1873 was that of the Duke of Hamilton and Brandon with the daughter of the Duke of Manchester. The new Peerage creations in 1873 were the baronies of Breadalbane, Marjoribanks, Somerton, Waveney, and Aberdare; and in January, 1874, Coleridge, Emly, Moncrieff, and Lamerton; the extinctions, the baronies of Ossington, Marjoribanks, and Howden, and the dukedom of Inverness. As an instance of the continuous improvement of "Burke's Peerage," we would refer to the carefully-compiled pedigree of Lord Selborne; and, in proof of its utility, to the key to the work, which enables the most unlearned reader to find the information he wants.

The committee of the Earlswood Asylum for Idiots have issued a statement of the operations of that excellent institution, with the object of securing further contributions to carry on the work. There are now 583 inmates, many of whom are in the schools, whilst others are partially or wholly employed in various ways.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE COUNTESS OF LOUDOUN.

The Right Hon. Edith Maud Countess of Loudoun, Baroness Loudoun, Farrinyean and Mauchline in the Peerage of Scotland, and Baroness Botreaux Hungerford de Moleyns and Hastings in the Peerage of England, died at Ventnor on the 23rd inst. Her Ladyship, who was born Dec. 10, 1833, the eldest daughter of George Augustus Francis, second Marquis of Hastings, by his wife Barbara, Baroness Grey de Ruthyn, succeeded, at the death of her brother Henry, fourth Marquis of Hastings, in 1863, to the Scottish earldom of Loudoun, and, in 1871, had the abeyance of four old English baronies, to which she was coheir, terminated in her favour. The Countess married, April 30, 1853, Charles Frederick Clifton, Esq., third son of Thomas Clifton, Esq., of Clifton and Lytham, in the county of Lancaster; and in 1859 assumed, with her husband, the surname and arms of Abney, in compliance with the request of the late Sir Charles Abney-Hastings, Bart., to whose estate of Willesey Hall she succeeded. Of her marriage there is issue four sons and two daughters. Of the former the eldest, Charles Edward, Lord Mauchline, born Jan. 5, 1855, becomes Earl of Loudoun and Baron Botreaux, &c. The grandfather of Lady Loudoun was the popular and distinguished Earl of Moira, afterwards Marquis of Hastings, K.G., G.C.B., Governor-General of India, and her grandmother Flora Muir Campbell, Countess of Loudoun, the descendant of an historic branch of the house of Argyll.

LORD STUART DE DECIES.

The Right Honourable Henry Villiers-Stuart, Lord Stuart de Decies, of Dromana, in the county of Waterford, Lord Lieutenant of that county and Colonel of the Waterford Militia, whose death, at his seat near Cappoquin, is just announced, was eldest son of the late Lord Henry Stuart, by Gertrude Amelia, his wife, daughter and heiress of George Villiers, Earl of Grandison, and grandson of John, first Marquis of Bute, the son of the Prime Minister Bute. Through his mother the deceased Peer represented a distinguished line of the famous family of Villiers, as well as the historic house of FitzGerald of the Decies, descended of the Earls of Desmond. He was born June 8, 1803, and entered Parliament in 1826 as M.P. for Waterford. He sat subsequently for Banbury, and in 1839, during Lord Melbourne's administration, was created a Peer of the United Kingdom as Baron Stuart de Decies. His Lordship married a foreigner, Madame de Olt, and was left a widower Aug. 7, 1867.

SIR MONTAGUE CHOLMELEY, BART.

Sir Montague John Cholmeley, second Baronet, of Easton Hall, Lincolnshire, M.P., died there on the 18th inst. He was born Aug. 6, 1802, the eldest son of Sir Montague Cholmeley, of Easton, M.P. for Grantham, who was created a Baronet March 4, 1806. He inherited from his mother, Elizabeth, daughter and heir of John Harrison, Esq., the estate and seat of Norton Place, near Market Rasen, and succeeded to the baronetcy at the death of his father, in 1831. He had previously (from 1826 to 1830) represented Grantham in Parliament. Subsequently he sat for North Lincolnshire, for which he was first elected in 1847. Sir Montague married, Feb. 10, 1829, Lady Georgiana Beauclerk, fifth daughter of William, eighth Duke of St. Albans, and had by her one surviving son, now Sir Hugh Arthur Henry Cholmeley, third Baronet, M.P. for Grantham, born in 1839; and one daughter, Flora Caroline Elizabeth, who married, 1853, Henry Hussey Vivian, Esq., M.P., of Singleton, Swansea, and died in 1868. The Cholmeleys of Easton are a branch of the great house of Cholmondeley.

MAJOR BENT.

Major John Bent, whose death was recently announced, was born April 26, 1782, at Sandford, Devon, being the second son of the Rev. George Bent, forty-one years incumbent of that parish. Major Bent entered the Army Sept. 23, 1804, as Ensign in the 5th Fusiliers. He served with that regiment in the operations against Buenos Ayres in 1807, and also in the latter part of the campaigns in the Peninsula, including the battles of the Pyrenees, Nivelle, Nive (from the 9th to the 13th December, 1813), passage of the Gave d'Oleron, battle of Orthes, actions of Vic Bigorre and Tarbes, and battle of Toulouse, for which services he received the war medal with five clasps. Major Bent retired from the Army in 1831, and then resided for nearly thirty years at Wexham Lodge, Slough, where he became a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant of the county of Bucks. He was the first Chairman of the Eton Union under the new poor law, and one of the original founders of the Royal South Bucks Agricultural Association. He retained full possession of his vigorous faculties to the very last, when he died almost suddenly, at the great age of nearly ninety two years. He was probably the oldest surviving officer of the Peninsular War.

MR. A. BLACK.

The death of Mr. Adam Black, the well-known Edinburgh publisher, took place on Saturday last. He had nearly completed his ninetieth year. Mr. Black was chosen five years in succession as Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and was a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for that city, which he represented in Parliament from 1856 to 1865. Many years ago Mr. Black published the "Encyclopedia Britannica," and on the failure of Messrs. Constable and Co. the publication of the Edinburgh Review passed into his hands. His portrait, by Sir J. Watson Gordon, adorns the walls of the Council-room at Edinburgh.

The Wollaston gold medal for the present year has been awarded by the council of the Geological Society to Professor Oswald Heer, of Zurich, whose works, especially on fossil insects and plants, are of the highest value. The balance of the proceeds of the Wollaston Donation Fund have been awarded to M. Henri Nyst, the well-known palaeontologist of Brussels. The Murchison medal is awarded to Dr. J. J. Bigsby, F.R.S., in recognition of his valuable researches, particularly upon the fossils of the Silurian and Devonian series; and the balance of the Murchison Geological Fund will go to Mr. Ralph Tate, F.G.S., and Mr. Alfred Bell.

P. FOSCHMAREFF, St. Petersburg.—Your solution of Problem No. 1553 is the true one. DAG BENT and W. W. S.—The interesting and instructive volume of chess problems by the Messrs. Pierce is published by Messrs. Longman and Co., of Paternoster-row. We shall take occasion to notice it shortly.

D. W. CLARKE, Barnaul-Siberia.—Your problem in two moves is rejected, because taking a Pawn in passing cannot be allowed as a first move for White. That of four moves is too easy; that of three shall appear. You will facilitate reference to your compositions by numbering them in future.

W. C. Cheltenham.—Rather heavy; and, in other respects, below your ordinary mark.

B. R. Bath.—No; it had no reference to a second solution in Problem No. 1553, as that composition can only be solved in one way.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, with three codicils, all of which are dated Oct. 19, 1871, of Lord Thomas Cecil, who died Nov. 29 last, at his residence, No. 6, Granville-place, Portman-square, was proved on the 16th inst., by Lady Sophia Georgiana Cecil, the relict, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator gives to his wife all his furniture and a legacy of £12,000 absolutely, and after giving some legacies to his servants, he gives her a life interest in the remainder of his property; at her death testator bequeaths £10,000 to his great-nephew Lord Burghley, and the residue to his nephew the Marquis of Exeter.

The will, dated June 17, 1871, of William Wheelwright, late of Newburyport, Massachusetts, United States, who died on Sept. 26 last, at Gloucester-gate, Regent's Park, London, was proved on the 17th inst., by Robert Codman, the nephew, and Mrs. Martha Gerriah Wheelwright, the relict, the executrix, the personal estate in England being sworn under £140,000. The testator divides his property as follows— one ninth to his widow, two ninths to his daughter, Mrs. Maria Augusta Krell, four ninths to his brothers and sister and nephews and nieces, and the remaining two ninths for the erection and endowment of a scientific college to assist in educating Protestant young men of his native city of Newburyport.

The will, dated May 30 last, of Joseph Salkeld, late of 14, Upper Woburn-place, who died on the 7th ult., has been proved by Augustus Sillem, François Frederick Simond, and the deceased's two daughters, Mary and Amelia, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator leaves to each of his executors, Mr. Sillem and Mr. Simond, £100 each, free of duty, for their trouble, and the rest of his property, upon trust, for his said two daughters.

The will and codicil, dated respectively July 16 and 30, 1868, of Alfred Waterhouse, late of White Knights, near Reading, who died on the 27th ult., were proved on the 9th inst. by Alfred Waterhouse, Theodore Waterhouse, and Edwin Waterhouse, the surviving executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths to his widow, Mrs. Mary Waterhouse, his household furniture and a legacy of £1000 absolutely, and a right of residence or of the rents of the mansion and estate of White Knights for life, in addition to the ample provision she already has under the will of her father, Paul Bevan, and under her marriage settlement. The residue of his property he divides equally between his seven children.

The will, dated March 8, 1873, of Isaac Redwood, late of Cae Wern, Cadroxon juxta Neath, who died on Nov. 19 last, was proved on the 9th inst. by Edward Davies, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. There are various legacies to members of his family, and the residue of his estate he leaves, upon trust, for his niece, Mrs. Mary Ann Davies, for life, and at her death among her children and issue, as she shall by deed or will appoint.

CURIOUS WILLS.

(Contributed by the Author of "Flemish Interiors," &c.)

WILL OF M. HELLOIN, JUGE DE PAIX.

This gentleman, well known as a magistrate, and residing on his own landed property, close to Caen, in Normandy, died in the month of June, 1828. He was of eccentric habits, and of the calmest and most placid disposition. Nothing was ever known to ruffle his equanimity or to disturb the repose and tranquillity of his domestic arrangements. He lived and died unmarried, and passed his life either reclining on a couch or lying in bed. Even when exercising his judicial functions he maintained this recumbent attitude; his bed-room became his audience-chamber, and he gave judgment in a horizontal position, his body lazily stretched out, and his head thrown back on a down pillow. This luxurious life, however, did not suffice to protect him from the inevitable lot of mortals; and M. Helloin, in due time, felt that his end was not far off. Under these circumstances he made his will, apparently with the intention of proving his fidelity to his traditions, for he decreed thereby that "he should be buried at night, in his bed, and in the position in which death should surprise him—viz., with his mattress, sheets, blankets, pillows—and, in short, all that constituted the belongings of a bedstead." As there was some difficulty in carrying out such a clause, an enormous pit was dug, and the deceased was lowered into his last resting-place exactly as he had died, nothing around or about him having been altered. Boards were placed above the bedstead, in order that the earth, when tilled in again, should not trouble the repose of this imperturbable Quietist.

WILL OF DANIEL MARTINETT.

(An Officer in the East India Company's Service.)

Among original wills may certainly be reckoned that of Daniel Martinett. Dying very poor, this singular fellow bequeathed his debts to the Governor of Bengal, who generously accepted the equivocal legacy. We hardly know whether to admire more the sangfroid of the testator or the bonhomie of the legatee. The principal dispositions which constitute the will are as follows:—

"I, the undersigned Daniel Martinett, being perfectly sound in mind though weak in body, declare that I make my will in manner following:—

"1. I recommend my soul to God, and I hope to obtain of Him pardon for all my sins.

"2. As to this miserable body; as it has seen enough of the pomps of this lower world, all that I desire is that it may be put away in an old green chest I have, to avoid all expense; for, having lived the life of a prodigal, I would fain die the death of a niggard.

"3. My burial is to cost nothing: I won the amount of its expenses from the undertaker at a game of billiards we had together, in the presence of Messrs. Thomas Morrice and William Parkes, at the house of the said William Parkes, in February last.

"4. I request that the Rev. Henry Butler will read over my body the prayers usual at burials, and, moreover, that he will preach a sermon on the first Sunday after my death, taking for his text these words of Solomon, 'All is vanity.' In consideration of this service I bequeath to him all my hypocrisy—he needs it to be an honest man, as times go.

"5. I bequeath to the Governor of Bengal, Henry Vansittart, the office of paying any sum or sums which it may be found at my death that I owe to any person in needy circumstances: the whole cannot amount to more than 300 rupees.

"6. I give my bible and prayer-book to the Rev. Henry Butler, and my sabre to Captain Knox, because I sincerely believe he has not only the skill but the courage to use it.

"I have been, during my life, an object of ridicule to a fashionable gentleman, and the butt of his sarcasms. It is possible my conduct may have been somewhat extraordinary; I hope to be able to forgive him.

"As I have nothing to leave to my relations in my native country, neither have I anything to say to them. However, they have not troubled themselves much about me for some time: only I wish them all very good health, and I hope that my brothers and sisters may make a more prosperous journey through life than I have. (Signed) "DANIEL MARTINETT."

interest—none feel obliged to anticipate commercial ruin or social anarchy, or even a political cataclysm as the result? We owe this advantage to the Constitution under which it is our good fortune to live, and to that love of, and loyalty to, constitutional rule which may be considered the richest heritage of our country.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, continues at Osborne House. The Court is expected to return to Windsor Castle next week. On Saturday last General Count Perofski arrived at Osborne from St. Petersburg, being the bearer of an autograph letter from the Emperor of Russia to the Queen announcing the celebration of the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh to the Grand Duchess Marie of Russia. The Earl of Kenmare also arrived. Count Perofski and the Earl of Kenmare dined with her Majesty. On Sunday the Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service, performed at Osborne by the Rev. G. Connor, Vicar of Newport. General Count Perofski had an audience of her Majesty, after which he and the Earl of Kenmare left Osborne. On Monday the Queen held a council for the purpose of pricking the Sheriffs, at which were present the Lord President of the Council, the Earl of Kimberley, and the Right Hon. Robert Lowe. Lord Monson, Treasurer to the Queen's Household, and Sir Samuel Martin were introduced and sworn in members of the Privy Council. Sir Arthur Helps, K.C.B., was Clerk of the Council. Previously to the Council Lord Aberdare had an audience of her Majesty. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, has taken her customary daily out-of-door exercise. Her Majesty has also visited the Viscountess Dowager Gort. The Queen has entertained at dinner Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas and the Hon. Lady Biddulph, the Hon. Mrs. Henry Ponsonby, and Mr. Theodore Martin. The Marchioness of Ely and Mr. Theodore Martin have left Osborne.

The Queen has appointed Charles Wyld, Esq., to be one of the Gentlemen Ushers Quarterly Waiters in Ordinary to her Majesty, in the room of Captain William Ross, deceased.

The Hon. Horatia Stopford has succeeded the Hon. Harriet Phipps as Maid of Honour; and Colonel Du Plat and Major-General Ponsonby have succeeded Colonel Maude and the Earl of Mount Charles as Equerries in Waiting on her Majesty.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

A review of the Fire Brigade on the Champ de Mars and of the Cossack body-guard in the Michael Manège was held on Thursday week, at which all the foreign Princes were present. The Imperial and Royal personages afterwards drove on the islands in sledges drawn by three horses. At a ball given in the evening at the Winter Palace the Duke of Edinburgh wore the uniform of the Yamburg Lancers, the Prince of Wales that of the 16th Hussars; and Prince Arthur the uniform of Colonel of the Kent Yeomanry.

On the following day, at the ball given by the Czarowitch, at the Anitschkow Palace, at which the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and Prince Arthur, with all the Imperial family, were present, the Prince of Wales wore the uniform of the Norfolk Militia, and Prince Arthur that of the Rifle Brigade.

On Saturday last the British Ambassador gave a banquet at the British Embassy to the Imperial Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany, at which Prince Arthur and 400 guests were present. Later the Russian and foreign personages were present at the ball given at the Hall of the Nobles.

On Sunday the Czar and the Czarina, with the Imperial family and the foreign visitors, attended Divine service in their respective churches. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh received a deputation of English residents at St. Petersburg in the Malachite Hall at the Winter Palace. The deputation was presented by the British Ambassador, and a congratulatory address was read by the Rev. Arthur Thompson. In the course of a gracious reply the Duke of Edinburgh stated that the proposed gift of two life-boats would accord with the wishes of himself and the Grand Duchess. In the evening the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince Arthur, and all the other foreign visitors dined at the Winter Palace. Two hundred guests were present. Subsequently a fête was given to the Czar at the British Embassy.

Viscount Sydney and the suites of the English Princes were entertained at dinner, on Wednesday, at the British Embassy. The Imperial Court, with the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and the foreign visitors, have left for Moscow.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

We have received the following letter, with several sketches from Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist, who accompanies Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition to Coomassie.

"Prahau, en route to Coomassie.

Jan. 1, 1874.

"At last I have arrived on the banks of the river Prah. To-morrow I purpose crossing to the other side, and I shall be the second Correspondent who has done so. The Ashantees are reported to have retreated thirty miles towards Coomassie, so there is no fear of a brush with them for some time, particularly as Sir Garnet Wolseley does not intend crossing before the 15th inst., if then.

"I left Cape Coast Castle on the 23rd, as I wanted to travel easy stages, and to stop a day or two at the different stations, to finish my sketches as fast as I made them. But this is difficult, working out here; not being, as in England, in a quiet study, with gas or a good lamp, to work by night or by day; but in a hut under a tropical climate, infested with rats, lizards, ants, immense bees, and all kinds of poisonous and horrid insects and vermin. They crawl over you, up the legs or down the neck and over the paper in swarms, and even get upon the pen with which you are sketching or writing; or they come buzzing round your head, into your ears, and finally settle on your neck. In a tent the sun strikes through so powerfully as to give you the sensation of working in the hottest room of a Turkish bath. At six o'clock the sun has gone, and suddenly total darkness sets in; and I have found it almost impossible to sketch otherwise than before ten in the morning, and at times after dinner with a bad candle stuck in a champagne-bottle. Well, as I before mentioned, I left Cape Coast on Dec. 23, as Sir Garnet was to leave on the 27th, and I wished to keep ahead of him, his staff, and retinue of servants. I left about four p.m., and went direct to Inquabim, which is about seven miles' marching. I slept at Inquabim that night, made a sketch or two next day, and once more slept there in my hammock, which I had arranged across a hut. But, though I had my mosquito-curtain all round me, and my waterproof sheet and coat over the hammock, the dew was so heavy that my Australian blanket, which covered me, was as wet in the morning as if it had been taken out of a river; and my shirt and pyjamas were almost in the same condition. I need not say that my sleep was not very profound.

"At half-past five in the morning my cook brought me a basin of hot chocolate; and at six my four carriers, of whom two were women, with my six hammock-bearers, two other servants, and myself, were on the march towards Assiboo, about four miles distant. This I found to be only a small village, not a station; I therefore only waited here about ten minutes, to have a drink of lime-juice, sugar, and water, which is a very grateful refreshment. Then, leaving the main road and striking off to the left in a westerly direction, pushed forward for Abakrampa. The road all the way was a very narrow path; the bush grew over it so much that it was difficult at times to see the path, and the bush each side going up straight to the height of 10 ft. and 12 ft. and more, prevented a view of the surroundings, except when, at the top of a steep hill, one could get a slight glimpse of the groves of palms, banana, plantains, and pawpaw-trees.

"At last, after a rather severe march, on account of the close bush and narrow pathway, we arrived at a rather wider space, and I then availed myself of my hammock. In a few minutes more we approached what seemed a large village. My men knew the place well, apparently, as they wound in and out among the houses till at last they stopped before one of the best, informing me that it was a missionary house.

"I entered and fully expected to see someone, either to welcome me or otherwise; but my servants and carriers did not hesitate a moment. They placed all my packages in the passage, and my cook, collecting his cooking utensils, started off to the kitchen to prepare my breakfast. Not seeing anyone, I made free to sit on the edge of a large table, swing my legs, and occasionally sip lime-water. In less than half an hour I was deep in the mysteries of my first meal. I had nearly finished when a man, apparently a native, dressed in black frock-coat and trousers, entered the doorway, and, in a most pleasant manner, wished me a 'Good morning' in very good English. We became most chatty on the instant, and I then found that he was pro tem. the missionary for Abakrampa. I explained to him that I had purposely gone out of my way to visit the battle-field there, and that I had already sent a native policeman to inform the chief of my presence and my purpose. I invited him to accompany me. In a very short time, having just lighted my breakfast cigarette, I saw a kind of procession coming towards the house. It turned out to be the newly-made chief, as the old chief had died of smallpox about a fortnight before. First came three or four native police, then the chief, next the smaller chiefs, and lastly his staff of servants, with villagers. He approached, bowed the head, and, through my missionary interpreter, desired the pleasure of shaking hands with me. This we did, and, having been told the object of my visit, he started off with me.

"We visited the chapel, which was converted into a citadel or castle during the fight, and which is seen to the left hand in my sketch of Abakrampa. We then descended into the bush, in the direction from which the Ashantees came. Here several freshly-made graves were pointed out to me. They were those of Ashantees who had been buried by the white troops. Farther on we came to a whole skeleton of an Ashantee, but without a head. This I instantly sketched roughly. A short distance on we found a skull, which I also put on paper. The smell was anything but pleasant in that quarter. Having made a hasty sketch of the village and battle-field, I returned to my missionary friend's house, there to wait until the sun had gone down and I could once more take to the march.

"About four o'clock, just as I was about to start, I was informed that the chief was again approaching. He did so with even a larger and more ceremonious procession. He desired to present me with a calabash or pot of palm wine; but, for fear of trickery, I desired he would first drink of it, which he willingly did, and, holding up the glass, drank to the great English Queen and her soldiers, and hoped they would be successful in the present war. I thanked him for his politeness, and, having had the glass refilled, I responded to his toast. We all partook of the wine, chiefs and missionary and myself. I presented the head chief with a dozen cigarettes, in return for his politeness. He was much delighted; we again shook hands, and, jumping into my hammock, I departed from Abakrampa.

"After six or seven miles of rather rather worse road, we arrived at Accroful. I had sent on my cook and carriers, so that when I arrived my dinner was ready. This being Christmas eve, a bottle of champagne was broached, but I did not feel very lively at being alone on such an occasion. In one sense I was not quite alone. Accroful is more noted for rats and every kind of vermin than any other station on the road. I was quartered that night in a hut, the roof made of palm leaves. I lay on an uneven bamboo bed, the only covering upon which was my waterproof sheet. The rats and lizards kept up a constant dance all night, running over my bed and boxes, and making a great noise. I may say that I have not had one long comfortable sleep since I left London.

"At last, Christmas Day dawned, and I rose to drink my usual cocoa, but felt as though I had never been in bed at all. This Christmas Day at Accroful was very slow. It is a small station, and there were only two officers quartered here. For my dinner, I had ordered my cook to give me some roast beef which I had brought with me, and a real English plum-pudding. When dinner was announced, I sat down upon a wine-box, with two other boxes raised for my table. I commenced with some soup, which was very badly made. Then, instead of the roast beef I had ordered, came the skin and bone, with a small piece of meat, haricot mutton out of a tin. I was much vexed and disappointed, but I found the beef had been carried. This made me laugh, as it was very good, after all. Lastly came the Christmas pudding. I had given particular instructions for this, but it turned out of the consistency of thick pea soup. The look of it was quite enough. A bottle of champagne, however, soon made amends and restored my fallen spirits. Such was my Christmas dinner on the road to Ashantee.

"I was not at all sorry to move on from Accroful next morning. When I arrived at Dunquah, I met a friend with whom I had been on board the Volta. A very good tent was here provided for me. But each officer, as I was introduced to him, said, 'Oh! you should have been here last night; we had a grand dinner,' and showed me the bill of fare. Colonel Festing, who was in command of the camp at Dunquah, gave me an invitation to dinner. Next morning Mr. Henty, of the Standard, and Mr. Stanley, of the New York Herald, arrived, with their enormous train of servants.

"From Dunquah we started next day for Mansu, where we were all quartered in a small hut. At this station we dined with Colonel Webber. On the following morning Mr. Henty left with his retinue; then Mr. Stanley, riding on one of his mules, which he had sent on before; and then I left, about three quarters of an hour later. My carrier women had refused to go on, saying I had engaged them to go to Mansu only; but this was not so. I could have settled the matter easily by refusing to pay them if they did not go on; but two of the four women had run away, frightened at the idea of going almost into the enemy's camp, as they said. So I had to stop and search for two more to go on, and the sum they wanted for just three days' march was enormous. At last the matter was settled, and away we went. In four or five hours we arrived at Satah: here I made a sketch. I had a hut with Mr. Henty, and Mr. Stanley was by himself.

"Next morning we left Satah, but the road was very bad indeed. I made a careful sketch of it, which I send up; and you may imagine it ten times worse in reality, as most of these scenes look better on paper. In the sketch they are mending the road by laying large logs or limbs of trees across the road, which trouble the native feet most severely.

"After a long and heavy march we arrived at Yancomassie, in Assin. Here we made another stoppage for the night. On the following morning, Dec. 31, we again took to the road. About eleven miles distant we came to Barraco, but we did not stop: we pressed on for the principal and most important station, Prahau, doing what is called a double march. We arrived here about twelve o'clock, in the hottest part of the day.

"Major Hume had given us a plot of ground directly opposite to head-quarters. We all set hard to work to clear away the bush and erect the tents. Mr. Stanley had very kindly offered me half his tent, which is a great comfort, as the Control Department does not supply any, and all the other correspondents have their own. As it is, I am very comfortable. During four or five hours the hammock men and carriers, and we ourselves, worked as hard as men could; and I can well imagine what a settler's or emigrant's life must be. Anyhow, the tents were raised, and we slept under them. As we are likely to be here for a fortnight and more, we wished to be very comfortable, and Sir Garnet, as well as the sanitary inspector, has complimented us on the appearance of our ground.

"On the following day (New-Year's Day) we commenced an elaborate hut, Mr. Stanley directing and superintending the construction. It contains a dining-hall, bath-room, store-room, and servant's sleeping-room, all on one floor. It is furnished, and we are going to have a dinner party in it for the first time to-day.

"Sir Garnet Wolseley has arrived with his staff. Last night, about twelve, Mr. Stanley and myself, and all who are around us, were startled by the report of a rifle. Almost immediately afterwards we saw the staff turn out of head-quarters. I instantly put on my boots and rushed across to where the voices sounded, and, having been accosted by a sentinel with 'Who goes there?' replied directly, 'A friend!' I received the answer, 'Pass, friend, and all is well.' I then inquired the cause of the disturbance, and was informed that one of the Ashantee Ambassadors had shot himself. I entered the hut where the Ashantees then were. A number of officers and doctors were round the dead man, who had apparently fired under the chin, as the lower part of his face was horribly disfigured.

"I have crossed the Prah, and made a sketch from the other side, which I will send off to-morrow. The soldiers will cross to-morrow or next day, and I want to put them into my sketch. The white troops are expected up in a few days, but you will see, by the sketch I send, that some of the Marines have arrived. It is almost impossible to put in all the carriers as well, but there were a very large number carrying the beds and clothing of our men. The Marines came in singing 'John Brown' and 'Glory Hallelujah!' They are a very fine set of men, and will no doubt show themselves to great advantage in this campaign."

The latest news is a telegram from Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley to the Secretary of State for War, dated Jan. 24, on the Adansi Hills, forty miles north of the Prah. It runs as follows:—

"All the white prisoners are now in my camp. The King accepts the terms I offer, and says he will pay the indemnity. I demanded £200,000. I halt to-morrow, for a few days, at Foemanah (Tommanah), thirty miles from Coomassie. All going right."

This news, which arrived in London on Thursday, had been preceded by the following, dated from Cape Coast Castle, Jan. 19, by the steam-ship Ethiopian:—

"The King of Ashantee had released the German missionary, and has sent him to General Wolseley to treat for peace. Eleven (?) hundred seamen and marines, with one hundred white troops of each regiment, within one day's march of Coomassie, with General Wolseley, except 23rd, who are not disembarked. Great trouble with native carriers, who have all run away. Stores carried to the front by volunteers of 1st and 2nd West India Regiments. Captain Glover not heard of. No fighting; troops in good health. 23rd of January named for taking Coomassie, instead of 15th."

BARON AMPHLETT BEING ADMITTED A SERJEANT-AT-LAW.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE: DISTRIBUTION OF BRIDE-CAKE IN EDINBURGH.

THE NEW JUDGE.

Mr. Baron Amphlett, the new Judge of the Court of Exchequer, received the honour of knighthood from her Majesty at Windsor Castle. Sir Richard Paul Amphlett is the eldest son of the late Rev. Richard H. Amphlett, Rector of Hadzor, Worcestershire, by his first wife, Sarah, daughter of Mr. Nathaniel Paul. He was born in the year 1809, and was educated at a grammar-school in Staffordshire, and subsequently at St. Peter's College, Cambridgeshire, where he took his Bachelor's degree in 1831, coming out in the mathematical tripos as sixth Wrangler. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Trinity Term, 1834, and has had considerable experience in Equity business. He received the honour of a silk gown in 1858. He is a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for Worcestershire, and has been for several years a Deputy Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for that county. He was chosen, at the last general election, one of the members for East Worcestershire, in the Conservative interest. He is known to have taken a great interest in the improvement of the education of his profession; and when Sir Roundell Palmer became Lord Chancellor Mr. Amphlett was chosen his successor in the presidency of the Legal Education Association. He has also supported in Parliament the reform of the bankruptcy laws. Sir R. Amphlett married, in 1840, Frances, only daughter and heiress of the late Mr. Edward Ferrand, of St. Ives, Yorkshire.

It seems likely that under the Judicature Act of last Session Sir R. Amphlett will be at once the "last of the Barons" and the last of the Serjeants. We present a sketch of the curious old ceremony of admitting the new Judge to the degree of Serjeant-at-Law. The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and his four puisne brethren endeavour to preserve their gravity while Mr. Baron Amphlett, attended by his "colt" (Mr. R. Holmden Amphlett), prays the widow's dower in the cause of Ann Wynn, widow of Francis Wynn, against Richard Jones, and demands of the said Richard Jones a third part of three hundred acres of land, messuages, and barns in Yorkshire. A learned Serjeant makes a feint of opposing the application on the part of Richard Jones (who, together with Ann Wynn, is alleged to be present in court), but speedily withdraws, and then the new Baron is admitted within the ranks of the Serjeants, bows to the court, and shakes hands with his coifed friends on each side of him. The Chief Justice asks him if he has anything to move, to which the learned gentleman responds with a graceful bow and retires with his "colt" to the Queen's Bench, where he is sworn in. The duty of the "colt" is to fetch the writ from the Lord Chancellor and to introduce the new Judge. This ceremony being performed, various oaths are taken, and the "colt" presents the Lord Chancellor on the part of the new Judge with two massive gold rings, one for the Queen and the other for himself. A third ring is given to the "colt."

This appointment of an Equity barrister to a seat on the Common Law Bench is a token of the fusion of those two departments of jurisdiction.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris).

Thursday, Feb. 5.

In the course of another week or so there will not be a single Republican mayor left in France, for, with the view of propping up its insecure tenure of power, the Government is rapidly carrying the new municipal law into effect, thirty or forty nominations of Legitimist, Orleanist, and Bonapartist mayors and adjoints appearing in the Journal Officiel regularly every morning. The Duc de Broglie has selected several ex-préfets and sous-préfets of the Empire to the mayries of Marseilles, Toulon, Nantes, Narbonne, Aix, Rouen, Rheims, Orleans, and Chartres, seditious localities, the Republican spirit of which needs to be controlled by energetic fonctionnaires à poigne. Even M. Rameau, the popular mayor of Versailles, and deputy for Seine-et-Oise, has not found grace in the eyes of the Prime Minister, and his dismissal was gazetted yesterday morning, his post being conferred on M. Hunebelle, a protégé, we are told, of the Duc d'Aumale.

This policy must tell against the Cabinet in the future, although it may momentarily strengthen its position. Besides the coming Republican interpellation apropos of the Duc de Broglie's recent circular, which we are told will be supported by MM. Gambetta, Lepère, and Challemeil Leclerc, a Legitimist interpellation concerning Marshal MacMahon's seven years' lease of power, now awaits the Ministry, and indeed threatens to sweep it from the scene. The Count de Chambord, the clerical organs tell us, has deputed M. Cazenove de Pradines, one of his most intimate confidants, and M. Lucien Brun, the colleague of M. Chesnelong in last year's fusion negotiations, to bring the question before the Assembly, and the Legitimist party is preparing for a desperate Parliamentary struggle.

The Ministers are only too conscious of the vulnerability of their position, and, having alienated both Legitimists and Republicans, know not where to seek for succour. Their organs announce that they have resolved to declare categorically that they consider it their duty to defend Marshal MacMahon's seven years' term of office against all attacks or party pretensions, from whatever quarter they may proceed; but it is somewhat doubtful whether, at the eleventh hour, they will not shrink from any such bold line of action. Meanwhile the President has been expounding his own views on this somewhat delicate topic, in reply to an address on the part of the Paris Tribunal of Commerce. After observing that the Government had the commercial and industrial interests of the country deeply at heart, and that important public works were about to be commenced in and around Paris, he is reported to have said:—"You justly remark that confidence in the stability of the Government is necessary for the revival of business. I do not, however, understand how any apprehensions can still exist on this head. The Assembly has intrusted the Executive power to me for seven years. Under these circumstances I shall make the Assembly's decision respected."

The debate on the new taxes which commenced in the Assembly on Saturday was opened by M. Magne, who opposed M. Léon Say's proposal to repay the Bank of France £10,000,000 instead of £12,500,000, a proceeding which he considered equivalent to borrowing £2,500,000 from that institution. He afterwards supported the Government proposals to place a surtax on commercial bills, and to tax the conveyance of merchandise by luggage-trains, which, he said, was preferable to augmenting the imposts on alcohol and glass, as the Budget Committee had suggested. When the debate was resumed on Monday M. Edouard Lockroy delivered a vehement address on the part of the Republican party, which, he said, was opposed to the imposition of the taxes suggested by the Budget Committee. He painted a most dismal picture of the condition of the French working classes, and frequently apostrophised the Right in the most vehement manner, winding up by designating the Conservatives as the splotchy class, for which he was called to order by President Buffet. Count Rampon, a member of the Left Centre, having protested against M. Lockroy's doctrines, the latter made a second speech on the following day, in which he defended his opinions while withdrawing the expressions for which he had been called to order.

An attempt was made in the Paris Municipal Council, the other day, to obtain a vote of 60,000f. for the purpose of giving a grand ball at the Luxembourg Palace. The proposal was, however, rejected by a considerable majority, and a Radical member suggesting that a similar sum should be allotted to the wives of the transported Communists, a turbulent discussion ensued, which ultimately resulted in the rejection of the proposition, the resignation of M. Vautrain, the president, and the closing of the session by the Préfet of the Seine.

The monetary conference, attended by delegates from Belgium, France, Italy, and Switzerland, which has been recently sitting in Paris, has now completed its labours. France has been authorised to coin silver five-franc pieces for a value of £2,400,000 during 1874; Italy, for a value of £1,600,000; Belgium, £480,000; and Switzerland, £320,000. The supplementary convention relative to customs duties concluded between France and Great Britain has been adopted by the Versailles Assembly and the ratifications exchanged between Lord Lyons and the Duc Decazes, on the part of their respective Governments.

SPAIN.

General Moriones has at last obtained a small success against the Carlists. On his way to relieve Bilbao he captured their stronghold, La Guardia. Another telegram ascribes this success to General Primo de Rivera. Fort Luchana, situated between Bilbao and Portugalete, has capitulated to the Carlists with its garrison of 115 men and complete armament. Elio, the Carlist leader, has been attacked by acute rheumatism, and has abandoned military activity for medicinal bathing. He is replaced in his post by Dorregaray.

A telegram from Calcutta, of Wednesday's date, states that rain has fallen generally in Bengal, that much benefit has been done to the crops, and that ploughing for the spring crops has been greatly facilitated. There was a public meeting at Calcutta on Wednesday, with the Viceroy in the chair, to consider measures for the relief of the distressed districts. A large sum has already been subscribed to form a relief fund.

The Viceroy has issued an elaborate minute explaining his reasons for not stopping the exportation of grain, a measure which he does not believe would have a beneficial effect. His conduct has been approved in a long despatch by the Secretary of State for India. His Grace thoroughly concurs in opinion with the Governor-General in Council, that the export of grain from Bengal ought not to be prohibited.

THE ELECTIONS.

The short, sharp electoral campaign was preceded, accompanied, and illustrated by several organised orations from distinguished public men. Thrice the Prime Minister tried his hand at what may be called mob-oratory in addressing open-air meetings at Greenwich, and of his speeches it may be said that in their adaptability to the situation they were good, better, best. As he went on, he exhibited more of the rough-and-ready quality which tribunes of the people should possess, in order fealty to catch the ears and, if possible, the sympathies of those which in their main elements must be democratic assemblies. He even resorted considerably to humour, which, though rather grim and elephantine, served to produce that "laughter" which so relieves a speech. In the personal duel between him and Mr. Disraeli this vein was adopted, even to the reciting of a "squib," of which he may have been himself the author. In other respects, in dealing with his immediate adversary, he was the better-tempered of the two, and by consequence, on the whole, more dignified. It was said in 1863 that the electors of South-West Lancashire were so-speeched by Mr. Gladstone into rejecting him, and the electors of Greenwich, because they had neither seen nor heard him, chose him for their member. This time personal appearance and the voice of the charmer did not militate against him.

As to Mr. Disraeli, he was in that temper which influenced him in those fierce attacks on Sir Robert Peel which gave his speeches the name of "Peelica." The personalities towards Mr. Gladstone were not merely coarse and unworthy of the speaker, but, worse, they were blunders. Some of his skits were happy enough, and notably when he made the reason of the dissolution the state of the Ministerial nerves, and compared the strategy involved in that movement as caught from the Ashantee system of ambush-fighting. In regard to policy, what he said was an excellent exemplar of his manner of dealing with public matters, and was creditable at least to his astuteness and his knack of sliding over difficulties. In his second speech Mr. Disraeli took a small modicum out of his offence against good taste in his vituperation of Mr. Gladstone; but his "chaffing" (there is no other word) retort on Mr. Lowe was inimitable.

The address of Mr. Bright was characterised by much of his ordinary rhetorical method; but, subjecting it, it may be, to hypercriticism, it may be said that he was more vague, less downright than has been his wont, and that his speech was almost entirely a retrospect, and gave no inkling of the political present or future. Incisive, suggestive, and perhaps intended to bear comparison with that of Mr. Disraeli, nearly calm and moderate, was the address of Mr. Lowe on his being elected for the University of London. His description of Mr. Disraeli was a masterpiece of depreciatory characterisation, while it seems to be largely admitted that at least on one occasion Mr. Cardwell made the best speech that he has ever produced. Remarkable was the physical fact of Baron Rothschild's making a set speech to the electors of London, and not surprising that, addressing itself to financial subjects, it was able and suggestive. But it was the more notable that it, so to speak, "ruffled" the two statesmen who are now struggling for the chief place in the council of the country, for, questioning the financial plans of Mr. Gladstone, it was seized with avidity by Mr. Disraeli and adopted into his arguments with a certain effusion.

Parting from electioneering polemics, and entering upon a consideration of electoral facts and action, it is proposed to pick out salient points and to deal with what may be called tid-bits, selected without any special regard to regularity or order. It is noticeable that Mr. Dodson, the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, has not been able to face a contest in East Sussex, and has had to woo Chester. Mr. Bonham-Carter—almost a veteran member for Winchester—has lost his seat for Winchester, and with it the chairmanship of Committees which he held at the close of the last Parliament; while Sir Henry Storks has not sought Ripon again, which has been occupied by Lord De Grey, and thus Mr. Cardwell loses an effective departmental colleague in the House. Some interest—it may be of a negative kind—attaches to the facts that Mr. Guildford Onslow has been obliged to yield his seat for the borough of Guildford to his cousin, Mr. Denzil, of the same surname (and the Liberal party thus loses a man), while Mr. Whalley has been almost triumphantly returned again for Peterborough, and, with that originality which belongs to him, thanked his supporters from the back of a caracolting charger. Early in the week the tide of Conservative success began to flow, and on the first day that party gained eight seats. Mr. Fortescue, a long-tried member, was ousted from Andover and replaced by Captain Wellesley; while Mr. Otway, who has many pretensions to hold the place of an M.P., had his seat wrested from him by Admiral Elliott. In a manner Leicester-square will be now represented in Parliament, for Mr. Albert Grant has turned out Mr. Lea, the late member.

Lincolnshire has no longer the element of Liberalism in its representation; the seats of the only members of that persuasion, Colonel Amcotts and the late Sir Montague Cholmeley, having been taken by Mr. Edward Stanhope and Sir Jacob Astley; while the city of Lincoln has rejected Mr. Hinde Palmer, and chosen Colonel Chaplin in his room. Mr. Somerset Beaumont has been ejected from Wakefield, for the sake of Mr. Edward Green; and, sad to say, England has lost one of its most ludicrously patriotic members by the rejection of Mr. Rylands at Warrington, and the substitution for him of Mr. Greenall. Bury St. Edmunds has cast out a careful and earnest representative, Mr. Hardcastle, and preferred a neophyte in the person of Lord Francis Hervey; Cheltenham has dismissed a slightly rising public man, Mr. Henry Samuelson, and has brought in Mr. Agg-Gardiner, a novelty; Colchester, ungrateful and unappreciative of the drollery of the membership of Dr. Brewer, has sent him about his business, and chosen Mr. H. B. Praed instead; Exeter has gone wholly for Conservatism, dismissing Mr. Edgar Bowring, and re-electing Mr. Arthur Mills and electing Mr. J. G. Johnson. Maldon has turned off Mr. Bontall, its late Liberal representative, and once more chosen Mr. Sandford, who, when he had not changed his name, and was Mr. Peacocke, and afterwards for some time was its member; and Plymouth, regardless of the claims of Mr. Morrison, and ignoring the fact that he is a millionaire, has given him his congé, and is now wholly Conservative in Parliament by the re-election of Mr. Bates and the election of Mr. Sampson Lloyd. It is only a return to the normal state of things at Petersfield that it should be represented by a member of the family of Jolliffe, the intervention, in 1863, of Mr. Nicholson, a Liberal, being exceptional. Wigan changes the character of its representation altogether, Mr. Henry Wood and Mr. Lancaster, the late Liberal members, having been forced out by Lord Lindsay and Mr. Knowles; while Windsor has been deaf to the blandishments of its late member, Mr. Roger Eykyn and gives Conservatism a turn-about by its choice of Mr. Richardson Gardner.

By a sort of electoral caprice, Cambridge has dismissed two Liberals and placed two Conservatives in their places, and thus Mr. W. Fowler will be unable again to be the moving cause of

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held, on Thursday, at its house, John-street, Adelphi—Mr. Thomas Chapman in the chair. Rewards amounting to £2500 were voted to the crews of various life-boats of the institution for services rendered by them during the past month. A reward was also granted to the crew of a shore-boat for saving life on the coast; and payments to the amount of £1670 were ordered to be made on different life-boat establishments. Several contributions and legacies to the society were announced as having been received from Glasgow, Norwich, Lancaster, Bolton, Chichester, Burton-on-Trent, and other places. The late Mrs. F. S. Kirby, of Dublin, has left a legacy of £200 to the institution. A new life-boat has been forwarded to Southport. It was decided to form a life-boat establishment at St. Mary's, Scilly Islands, the landed proprietor, Mr. Smith-Dorrien, having readily promised his hearty co-operation in carrying out that project. A communication was read from the President of the Russian Association for the Rescue of Shipwrecked Crews, conveying to the National Life-Boat Institution the thanks of the Grand Duchess Czarevna, patroness of the association, for the help the society had extended to them in carrying on their work on the shores of Russia.

"THE ROAD TO GREYNA," BY J. MORGAN.
FROM THE EXHIBITION AT THE FRENCH GALLERY, PALL-MALL.

THE RIGHT HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

MR. GLADSTONE.

The Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone, First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer, was on Tuesday re-elected for the borough of Greenwich a member of the new House of Commons. This eminent statesman, by his great achievements during a public life of nearly forty years, has become so well known to all his fellow-countrymen that a mere record of dates will suffice to bring his whole career before the minds of our readers. He is sixty-four years of age, having been born, at Liverpool, on Dec. 29, 1809. Like many other persons distinguished for intellectual vigour and activity, he is of Scottish parentage. His father was the late Sir John Gladstone, Baronet, a Liverpool merchant and a landed proprietor at Fasque and Balfour, near Laurencekirk, in Kincardineshire. The family name was originally Gladstones, and their residence was at Toftcombe, near Biggar, in Lanarkshire. Mr. Thomas Gladstones, who was in trade at Leith, was the father of Sir John; the baronetcy was conferred in 1846, when Sir John, by royal license, dropped the final s from his name. He had married Anne, daughter of Andrew Robertson, Provost of Dirgwall, in Ross-shire, whose remote ancestry is connected, says Sir Bernard Burke, with the Royal houses of Bruce in Scotland and Plantagenet (through a Beaufort) in England. Sir John Gladstone, who died in December, 1851, had four sons—namely, the present Sir Thomas Gladstone, of Fasque, who sat in Parliament during many years; Mr. Robertson Gladstone, who is still in business at Liverpool; the late Captain John Gladstone, R.N., sometime M.P., whose daughter married the Earl of Belmore; and, lastly, the Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone. It has been stated in biographical memoirs, and has not been contradicted, that an equal portion of £100,000 for each of his four sons was bequeathed by Sir John Gladstone.

The future accomplished statesman was educated at Eton, and at Christ Church College, Oxford, where he became a personal friend of the late Duke of Newcastle, then Lord Lincoln, the late Lord Herbert of Lea (Mr. Sidney Herbert), and others with whom he was afterwards politically associated. He entered the University in 1829, and graduated, with double first-class honours, in the Michaelmas Term of 1831. After a tour on the Continent he was elected M.P. for Newark, by the assistance of the Duke of Newcastle, in December, 1832; of course as a Tory, and a decided opponent of the Reform Bill. When Sir Robert Peel was in office, during a few months in 1834 and 1835, Mr. Gladstone was appointed a Junior Lord of the Treasury, and, some weeks afterwards, Under-Secretary for the Colonies. He lost office, with his political leader, in April, 1835; and the Conservatives did not regain power till 1841. Mr. Gladstone was then admitted to the Privy Council, and took office as Vice-President of the Board of Trade and Master of the Mint. The revision of our commercial tariff in 1842 was chiefly his work in matters of detail. In 1843 he succeeded the late Earl of Ripon as President of the Board of Trade, but left that office in 1845 to succeed Lord Stanley (the late Earl of Derby) as Secretary for the Colonies. In 1846, by acting with Sir Robert Peel in the repeal of the corn laws, Mr. Gladstone had a disagreement with the old Duke of Newcastle, and was obliged to give up his seat for Newark; but in August, 1847, he was elected, with the late Sir Robert Inglis, for the University of Oxford.

Mr. Gladstone's separation from the Tory party began soon after the overthrow of Sir Robert Peel's Government in 1846, but it was latent and gradual. The so-called Peelites—viz., the Earl of Lincoln (who became Duke of Newcastle in 1851), Mr. Sidney Herbert, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Cardwell—were the Liberal Conservatives of that time. They held aloof from the professions of uncompromising Toryism made by the late Earl of Derby and Mr. Disraeli; but they gave no sign of an approach to Lord John Russell and the other Whigs. In 1851 Mr. Gladstone's complete estrangement from his earlier political allies could no longer be disguised, and his re-election for the University cost a severe contest. The Earl of Aberdeen formed a Coalition Ministry in December, 1852, upon the defeat of Mr. Disraeli's Budget, after a debate in which Mr. Gladstone had been the most formidable antagonist of the Tory Finance Minister. Mr. Gladstone was therefore made Chancellor of the Exchequer in the new Government. But the Russian war broke out in 1854, and our military disasters in the Crimea soon caused the downfall of the Ministry. A new one was formed by Lord Palmerston, in which Mr. Gladstone at first held office, but withdrew on account of Mr. Roebuck's motion for an inquiry into the mismanagement of the War Department. That department had been in the hands of Mr. Gladstone's friend, the then (now late) Duke of Newcastle, but had been taken by Mr. Sidney Herbert. Mr. Gladstone remained some years out of office, but in 1858 accepted from the late Lord Derby a special mission to the Ionian Islands.

When Lord Palmerston was again in power, in 1859, Mr. Gladstone joined his Cabinet as Chancellor of the Exchequer. In the very next year he gained a brilliant success, with the help of Mr. Cobden and other economists, in concluding the French commercial treaty and in abolishing the paper duty. This made him very popular, and he was invited, in 1861, to become a candidate for South Lancashire. He did not, however, avail himself of this offer till 1863, when the University of Oxford had rejected him. After the death of Lord Palmerston, in October of that year, Lord John Russell having gone up as Earl Russell to the House of Lords, Mr. Gladstone became leader of the House of Commons during the ascendancy of the Liberal party. He was, it need not be said, the most efficient member of Earl Russell's second Administration. His share in the Parliamentary contests upon the Reform Bill of 1866, proposed by the Liberals, and the Reform Bill of 1867, brought in by the Conservatives and carried, was most important. In 1868 he proposed and passed his resolutions for the disestablishment of the Protestant Church in Ireland, a measure which had been conceived by the Radical Reformers of thirty years before, but which no person of Ministerial experience had ever yet adopted. The general election of November, 1868, turned mainly upon this question. Mr. Gladstone lost his seat for South Lancashire, but was elected for Greenwich. He came into power with a large majority, in December, 1868, and proceeded to execute his measures of justice to Ireland. The abolition of the Irish Church Establishment, in 1869, was followed in the next year by the Irish Landlord and Tenant Act. The Gladstone Ministry has done several other useful things in the reform of the Army and Navy and of the Law Courts, the establishment of school boards and of a school rate, the improvement of criminal law and of bankruptcy law; while it has escaped being drawn into the wars of the Continental Powers.

Mr. Gladstone, as a writer, has shown a fine taste for literary scholarship, with an especial turn for classical archaeology, and a disposition to reflect gravely upon themes of deep moral and religious interest. His chief publications are "The State in its Relations with the Church," which appeared in 1838; "Church Principles Considered in their Results," 1841; "Studies on Homer and the Homeric Age," 1853; a commentary on "Ecce Homo," 1868; and "Juventus Mundi; or, the Gods and Men of the Heroic Age," 1869; besides political treatises or pamphlets. Mr. Gladstone married, in 1819, Catherine, eldest daughter of the late Sir Stephen Glynn, Bart., of Hawarden Castle, Flintshire. He has four sons and three or four daughters. The eldest son is Mr. William Henry Gladstone, M.P. for Whitby, a Junior Lord of the Treasury; the second is the Rev. Stephen Edward Gladstone, Rector of Hawarden. One daughter was lately married to the Rev. E. C. Wickham, Head Master of Wellington College.

Our portrait of Mr. Gladstone is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company.

THE CHURCH.

The Winchester Wilberforce memorial, under the direction of Sir Gilbert Scott, is to take the form of a canopied monument, at a cost of about £5000. The contributions already promised amount to £1100.

The Rev. Prebendary Thorold, Vicar of St. Pancras, has been appointed by the Archbishop of York to fill the residentiary stall in York Minster, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. Canon Johnstone.

Earl Cadogan presided last week at the opening ceremony of some large schools which have been erected for the parish of Holy Trinity, Upper Chelsea, from designs prepared by Mr. E. H. Lingens Barker, upon a valuable site near Sloane-square, presented by his Lordship's father, the late Earl.

On the application of Dr. Evans, Rector of St. Mary-le-Strand, a citation has been issued in the Consistorial Court against Mr. Dodson, a churchwarden, for the removal of two boxes from the church. They were offering-boxes placed on the west wall for the use of worshippers. Mr. Dodson had on his own authority caused them to be unfastened, the money having been sent to the Rector.

Dr. Sandford was, on Sunday, consecrated Bishop of Gibraltar in Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford. The Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by the Bishops of Winchester, Chester, Oxford, Carlisle, and Dover, conducted the ceremony. The sermon was preached by the Very Rev. Dr. Liddell, Dean of Christ Church and Vice-Chancellor of the University. He said that so august a ceremony had not been performed in the cathedral since the translation of the relics of St. Frideswide, in the reign of Henry II.

A massive silver salver and gold pen-holder and pencil-case have been presented by the congregation of St. George the Martyr, Middlesex, to the Rev. Gerard Ludlow Hallett, who has recently resigned the office of Senior Curate.—The Rev. B. F. Smith, Honorary Canon of Canterbury, Vicar of St. Paul's, Rasthall, and Diocesan Inspector of Schools, has been presented by his parishioners with a handsome stationery case, on his preferment to the living of Crayford.—The Rev. Anthony Bunting, on his vacating the chaplaincy for the Vicarage of Kilsby, Northants, has received a set of fish-knives, value £5, from the officers and inmates of the Leicester Workhouse; and a silver salver and purse of £40 from the parishioners of St. Martin's, Leicester.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated April 1, 1869, with two codicils, both dated Jan. 29, 1870, of Sir William Eden, Bart., late of Windlestone Hall, Durham, who died at Lartington Hall, Yorkshire, on Oct. 21 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by Dame Elfrida Susanna Harriet Eden, the relict, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator leaves to his widow legacies amounting to £1000 and an annual rent-charge of £4000; upon trust for his daughters, Helen and Edith, £20,000 each; and there are legacies to his brothers, the Bishop of Moray and Ross and Admiral Eden, and to his nephews: he settles upon his two younger sons certain freehold property in Yorkshire; and the residue of his real estate, and also of his personal estate, upon his eldest son, William.

The will and two codicils, dated respectively March 18, 1869, and Jan. 1 and Oct. 31 last, of Sir Richard Atwood Glass, formerly of Ashurst, Surrey, but late of Moorlands, South Stoneham, Southampton, who died on Dec. 22 last, were proved on the 24th ult. by Francis Glass, the brother, and William Welch Deloitte, the acting executors, the personal estate in England being sworn under £120,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Dame Annie Glass, all his furniture, plate, and other household effects, a pecuniary legacy of £2500, and an annuity of £1500; to his brother, Francis, £2500; to his sister, Mary, £1250; and the residue of his property he settles, as to seven-tenths, upon his said brother, Francis; and the other three-tenths upon the children of Henry Julian Dyer, by his late wife, Emma Dyer.

The will, dated Sept. 13, 1869, of Lieutenant-General Arthur Joseph Taylor, who died on Dec. 23 last at Norwood, was proved on the 26th ult. by the Rev. Fitzwilliam John Taylor, the acting executor. The testator devises and bequeaths his real and personal estate to his two brothers, the said Rev. Fitzwilliam J. Taylor and Major-General Reynell G. Taylor.

The will, dated May 13, 1843, of Miss Lucy Makins, formerly of Thorne, Yorkshire, but late of No. 13, Westbourne-crescent, Hyde Park, who died on Dec. 22 last, was proved on the 27th ult. by Charles Makins, the brother of the testatrix, the sole executor, to whom she devises and bequeaths her real and personal property. The personal estate is sworn under £60,000.

Mr. Henry Melville, whose will has just been proved, recommends that immediately after his decease his books, papers, manuscripts, &c., should be secured by Mrs. Maria Gibbs, and that she should, without loss of time, apply to the Crown for a patent to use the Masonic symbols on planispheres and celestial charts, by which the original of the Sacred Bible and other mysterious works can be interpreted; and then goes on to say: "The patent having been secured, I recommend that application be made to the British Government by the said Maria Gibbs for a commission of inquiry to determine whether the knowledge should be made public, or retained for a certain time (to be determined by such commission and the said Maria Gibbs) and then made public. I recommend that copies of my manuscript works should be made, and that no one copyist should be allowed to transcribe more than one book, and that such copying should be executed only in the presence of the said Maria Gibbs."

The will, dated May 10 last, of William Dickinson, late of New Park, near Lymington, Hants, who died on the 9th ult., was proved, on the 31st ult., by Mrs. Anne Dickinson, the relict, Dr. William Howship Dickinson and Samuel Dickinson, the sons, and Dr. Octavius Sturges, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £60,000. The testator gives legacies to his executors for their trouble; to his wife, his household furniture and effects, £1000, and an annuity of £2000; and there are annuities to the three sons and four daughters during the life of the widow. At her death the whole of the property is given to his said children.

MUSIC.

Last Saturday's Crystal Palace concert included three pieces which were given for the first time here—the Pastoral Symphony and the Cradle Song from Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," and the overture to Mr. G. A. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist." The vocal piece was sung with great expression by Miss Antoinette Sterling, who was also highly successful in three German songs by Schubert, Schumann, and Mendelssohn. The symphony on Saturday was Schumann's No. 1, in B flat—that bright orchestral work which reflects the geniality of his happiest period, and which stands, therefore, in remarkable contrast to the gloom and sadness in which his career closed prematurely at the age of forty-six. Saturday's selection included a remarkably fine performance by Madame Norman-Néruda of Mendelssohn's violin concerto, which, like that of Beethoven, is the composer's single work of the kind for that instrument, the two being unrivalled in their class. The finished mechanism and refined style of the accomplished lady violinist were displayed with signal success. The concert commenced with Mendelssohn's overture to "St. Paul," and included the air "Refrain thy voice," from Mr. Sullivan's "Light of the World," and Beethoven's "Adelaide," both sung by Mr. Vernon Rigby. The concert of this (Saturday) afternoon is to be devoted to a performance of Handel's oratorio "Theodora," a work but little known in its entirety, although containing some music worthy of comparison with the more familiar productions of the master.

This week's Monday Popular Concert included the performance of two instrumental works, for the first time—Onslow's string quintet in E minor, op. 74, the thirtieth of his many productions of the kind—and Rubinstein's pianoforte trio in B flat, op. 52. The quintet is a good specimen of the style of a composer who has been somewhat too much ignored of late. His music, if occasionally dry and laboured, is admirably constructed, and has, moreover, a certain individuality which gives it sufficient interest to justify an occasional hearing as a contrast to other styles. The minuet of the quintet pleased so much that it had to be repeated. Dr. von Bülow was the pianist, and his fine playing produced a marked impression in the trio, and in Beethoven's solo sonata "Les Adieux," &c. The pianist also played at the previous Saturday afternoon performance, when he was heard in Mozart's fantasia in C minor and Beethoven's thirty-two variations in the same key, and in a very effective pianoforte quartet by Rheinberger. The vocalist on this occasion was Miss Anna Williams, who fully confirmed the favourable impression which she had made at the Crystal Palace a fortnight before. Mr. Santley sung on Monday, and M. Sainton was the leading violinist at both the concerts now referred to.

The second concert of the second season of the British Orchestral Society took place on Thursday evening, when the programme comprised Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony, Beethoven's overture to "Leonora," and that by Mendelssohn entitled "The Isles of Fingal," the late Ferdinand David's concertino for viola, played by Mr. C. W. Doyle, and Sir W. S. Bennett's caprice for pianoforte (with orchestra), performed by Madame Kate Roberts.

"Elijah" has been given twice during this week. On Thursday it was announced for the eighth subscription concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, the solo singers named having been Madame Otto-Alvleben, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Signor Agnesi; and yesterday (Friday) the same oratorio was promised by the Sacred Harmonic Society, with Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Santley, as solo vocalists.

The first of Mr. Gounod's new series of concerts is to take place this (Saturday) evening, when his newest composition—the music to the drama "Jeanne d'Arc"—will be performed for the first time in England.

Mr. Carter's choir and complete band will perform Handel's oratorio "Samson" at the Royal Albert Hall on Thursday next.

The season of the Royal Italian Opera will commence on Tuesday, March 31.

Mr. Kuhe's Brighton Musical Festival is now an established annual fact. This year's performances will begin on Tuesday next and conclude on the 23rd of the month. The principal works to be given are Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" and "Elijah," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Handel's "Messiah," Mr. Randegger's cantata "Fridolin" (conducted by himself), Sir Julius Benedict's new symphony, and Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio "The Light of the World," also conducted by the composers. The principal singers engaged are Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington, Otto-Alvleben, and Patey; Misses Enriquez, Julia Elton, Alice Fairman, and Marion Severn; Messrs. Sims Reeves, Vernon Rigby, W. H. Cummings, E. Lloyd, Pearson, D. Thomas, Santley, Lewis Thomas, Maybrick, and G. Garcia. Mr. Kuhe and Mr. Kingsbury will be the general conductors.

THEATRES.

We have been indebted lately to a comparatively new dramatist for some productions displaying considerable skill—we mean Mr. Paul Merritt, some of whose works have been produced at the Grecian and the Gaiety. He has now gained a position at the Adelphi, where, on Saturday, was acted an original drama of his, entitled "Rough and Ready." It is in three acts, and has already been performed at Brighton, with success. Early we perceive that a strong affection reigns between Mark Murgrave and Alice May (Mr. Billington and Miss Ellen Meyrick). Mark is a young gamekeeper, who has been driven from his native village by the son of his rich mistress, the Widow Valentine (Mrs. Billington), who is named Harry Valentine (Mr. F. Manton), his rival in the affections of Alice. Ultimately Mark proves to be his elder brother and heir to the estate. One Nathaniel Hickory, the agent (Mr. M. Intyre), is all along cognisant of the fact. A trial at law proves Mark to be the rightful claimant. The scene is laid in Yorkshire, and gave an opportunity to Mr. Billington to show his skill in the dialect. Mrs. Billington exhibits some of the best qualities of a severe actress; and we may add that the part is full of points well calculated to bring out her peculiar excellence. The performance may be regarded as a success.

We have to record the death of Mr. John Douglass, the founder and proprietor of the Standard Theatre. He was one of the men who are the architects of their own fortunes, and whose success in life is attested by the magnificent structure which he reared in Shoreditch. The size and appointments of this edifice enable it to command the best talent of the West-End in the shape both of plays and players. Mr. Douglass was connected also with the Westminster and Marylebone theatres, and as a man of business exhibited first-rate qualities. His sons remain to follow his example, and are gifted with qualities which will doubtless ensure them a permanent triumph as theatrical managers.

Professor Anderson, the "Wizard of the North," died on Tuesday, at Darlington, in the sixtieth year of his age.

MADAME PAREPA-ROSA.

This accomplished vocalist, whose death was recorded last week, was born in Edinburgh, in the year 1839, her father having been Baron Georgiades de Boyeska, a Wallachian noble, and her mother Miss Seguin, whose brother (Edward) was eminent as a concert and stage basso, both here and in America. It was in 1855 that the young Euphrosyne Parepa made her debut, at Malta, as Amina, in "La Sonnambula," the stage having been chosen as her profession on the death of her father, whose marriage with a Protestant had deprived the daughter of all rights of heritage. The first success of the young singer was followed by her appearance in grand opera at Naples, Genoa, Rome, Florence, Madrid, and Lisbon, her reception having been everywhere of the most brilliant kind. Her voice was a genuine soprano, of extensive compass and fine quality, while her highly-cultivated execution and her general musical knowledge gave her exceptional advantages, both mechanical and intellectual; among her many attainments having been a perfect acquaintance with several languages, in each of which she could sing with equal facility. Madame Parepa's first stage appearance in this country was in 1857, as Elvira, in "I Puritani," at the Lyceum Theatre, during the temporary occupation of that house by the Royal Italian Opera company, after the burning of Covent Garden Theatre; and it was in that company, in its present home, that the singer was last heard in London, in 1872, when she appeared as Donna Anna, in "Don Giovanni," and as Norma. Several years previous to this latter date Madame Parepa had been married to a Captain in the British Army, but was soon left a widow.

It was during her professional tour in America in 1866 that she made the acquaintance of Herr Carl Rosa, the eminent violinist; and in the following year they were married. A second, and also successful, American tour was followed by their recent return to this country, and the formation of Herr Rosa's English opera company, which has been pursuing a profitable career in the provinces for several months past, and was to have commenced a London season at Drury Lane Theatre on March 2. This scheme included the production of a version of Wagner's "Lohengrin," with the important feature of Madame Parepa-Rosa's appearance as the heroine, Elsa. This project has been sadly frustrated by the premature death of the accomplished artist, which took place early on the morning of the 22nd ult.; and has deprived the lyric stage of one of its brightest ornaments, while leaving a deep grief among relatives and friends, by whom the deceased was loved and esteemed for her virtues and merits.

WHY DO OUR TEETH DECAY? Who has ever travelled among the Indians of North America that has not been struck with the superior whiteness and soundness of the Indians' teeth? Many have wondered how those dusky savages could preserve such a full row of ivory, even to the greatest age, while premature decay of the teeth was the rule with the whites. What once was a mystery is no longer one. The extract from plants which the Indians have for ages chewed have been concentrated into a liquid called FRAGRANT FLORILINE; a few drops of which on a wet toothbrush cause a sort of foam in the mouth, which penetrates every crevice, and cleanses the teeth from all impurities, hardens the gums, and prevents tartar. The "Fragrant Floriline" should be used in all cases of bad breath and particularly by gentlemen after smoking. The Floriline combines, in a concentrated form, the most desirable cleansing and astringent properties. At the same time it contains nothing which can possibly injure the most sensitive and delicate organization. It beautifies the teeth and gums. It arrests the decay of the teeth. It acts as a detergent after smoking. It renders the gums hard and healthy. It neutralizes the offensive secretions of the mouth. It imparts to the breath a fragrance purely aromatic and pleasant. Put up in large bottles (only one size) and in elegant toilet cases complete at 2s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers. Prepared only by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London.

FLORILINE.—For the TEETH and BREATH.
Sweet as the ambrosial air
With its perfume rich and rare;
Sweet as violets at the noon,
Which the emerald nooks adorn;
Sweet as rosebuds bursting forth,
From the richly laden earth,
Is the "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."
The teeth it makes a pearly white
So pure and lovely to the sight;
The gums assume a rosy hue,
The breath is sweet as violets blue;
While scented as the flowers of May,
Which cast their sweetness from each spray
Is the "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."
Surrounds fairly with its hand
The crown of the myrtle wand,
And proceeds from fairy's bower
Scented perfumes from each flower.
For in this liquid gem we trace
All that can be so beautiful and grace—
Such is the "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

FLORILINE.—For the TEETH and BREATH.—It may or may not be generally known that microscopic examinations have proved that animal or vegetable parasites gather, unobserved by the naked eye, upon the teeth and gums of at least nine persons in every ten; any individual may easily satisfy himself in this matter by placing a powerful microscope over a partially decayed tooth, when the living animalcule will be found to resemble a partially-decayed cheese more than anything else we can compare it to. We may also state that the "FRAGRANT FLORILINE" is the only remedy yet discovered able perfectly to free the teeth and gums from these parasites without the slightest injury to the teeth or the most tender gums. A few drops of the "FRAGRANT FLORILINE" on a wet toothbrush produce a delightful foam, which cleanses the teeth from all animalcules or impurities, strengthens and hardens the gums, prevents tartar, and arrests the progress of decay. It gives to the teeth a peculiar and beautiful whiteness, and imparts a delightful fragrance to the breath. It removes all unpleasant odour arising from decayed teeth, a diseased stomach, or tobacco smoke. For Children and Adults whose teeth show marks of decay, its advantages are paramount; the Floriline should be thoroughly brushed into all the cavities; no one need fear of using it too often or too much at a time. Some of the ingredients being Eucalypti, spirits of wine, borax, and extract from sweet herbs and plants, it forms not only the very best dentifrice for cleansing ever discovered, but one that is perfectly delicious to the taste, and as harmless as sherry. The taste is so pleasing that, instead of taking up the toothbrush with dislike, as is often the case, children will on no account omit to use the Floriline regularly each day, if only left to their own choice. Children cannot be taught the use of the toothbrush too young; early neglect invariably produces premature decay of the teeth. If water be added to the Floriline, or if exposed in a very cold place, the honeycomb it sometimes turns thick and clumpy, but it never loses its cleansing power. Prepared only by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.
If your hair is turning grey or white, or falling off, use THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER, for it will positively restore, in every case, grey or white hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots, where the glands are not decayed. Certificates from Dr. Vermann on every bottle, with full particulars. This preparation has never been known to fail in restoring the hair to its natural colour and gloss in from eight to twelve days. It promotes growth, and prevents the hair falling out, eradicating dandruff, and leaving the scalp in a clean, healthy condition. It imparts peculiar vitality to the roots of the hair, restoring it to its youthful freshness and vigour. Daily application of this preparation for a week or two will surely restore faded, grey, or white hair to its natural colour and richness. It is not a dye, nor does it contain any colouring matter or offensive substance whatever. Hence it does not soil the hands, the scalp, or even white linen, but procures the colour within the scales of the hair. It may be had of any respectable Chemist, Perfumer, or Dealer in Toilet Articles in the Kingdom, at 2s. 6d. per bottle. In case the dealer has not "The Mexican Hair Renewer" in stock and will not procure it for you, it will be sent direct by rail, carriage paid, on receipt of 4s. in stamps, to any part of England.—Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 493, Oxford-street, London.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINER ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Footboards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The Instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE AT ST. PETERSBURG: THE GREEK CER

CELEBRATION, IN THE IMPERIAL CHAPEL OF THE WINTER PALACE.

THE GENERAL ELECTION: MR. DISRAELI AT THE MARKET ORDINARY, AYLESBURY, ON SATURDAY LAST.

THE RIVAL STATESMEN SPEAKING.

The appearances last week—one upon the hustings at Blackheath, the other at the Aylesbury farmers' market dinner—of Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli, who have challenged each other to a duel of mutual disparagement before their respective constituents and political supporters, were highly characteristic of English public life. We have taken these two leading incidents of the General Election for the subjects of two illustrations in this week's paper; and we presume that most of our readers have already perused the speeches of both the right honourable gentlemen. It will therefore be enough to notice the local and personal conditions under which they spoke upon those occasions.

Mr. Gladstone's first speech was delivered, on Wednesday week, to an open-air meeting of six or seven thousand people on Blackheath. The right hon. gentleman, accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Gladstone, with Mr. W. F. Rock (chairman of the Greenwich Liberal Committee), the Rev. Canon Miller, Vicar of Greenwich, and other friends, occupied a covered waggon, which was stationed nearly opposite the Ranger's house. The weather was not quite pleasant on Blackheath: there was a mist and drizzle of rain; but the people did not seem to mind this discomfort, in their eagerness to see and hear the most distinguished English statesmen of the day. The proceedings were commenced punctually at three o'clock. Mr. Gladstone was received with the loudest and heartiest cheering. He spoke above an hour, and his sayings frequently drew from the assembly fresh bursts of cheering, sometimes of triumphant laughter. Beginning with some remarks on the present need for a dissolution of Parliament, he expressed his regret that he had not been able to attend closely to the local affairs of Greenwich since he was elected one of its representatives; but he pointed to the arrangements made by the present Government for the better permanent use of Greenwich Hospital. He then examined the charges against his Administration made in Mr. Disraeli's printed address to the electors of Buckinghamshire. With regard to foreign policy, he said that Mr. Disraeli's party, if they had been in office in 1870, would have been likely to involve this country in the war between France and Germany. He denied Mr. Disraeli's assertion that the present Government had compromised the freedom of our trade with China and Japan by surrendering to the Dutch a treaty which had bound them not to conquer the shores of Sumatra commanding the Strait of Malacca. The questions, however, upon which the general election would mainly turn were questions of finance and economy. It would now be (he said) in the power of Parliament to do three things: to relieve and reform local taxation, with the removal of a burdensome toll in the town of Greenwich; secondly, to repeal the income tax; and, thirdly, to lessen taxes on some articles of general consumption. He was not in love with taxes, and he would like to repeal them all; but he would never relax his grasp of any tax until he was well assured that the service of the country could be carried on without it. Three subjects must be considered to determine this: they were the existing surplus, the adjustment of taxation, and economy. He had been enabled in four or five years, from 1862 to 1866, out of large surpluses to make large remissions of taxation. The Tory party had been three times in office and had not made any such remission, because they had never any surplus. The reason of this was their wanton and needless expenditure. In less than two years and a half, a time of profound peace, they added three millions and a half to the expenditure, not reckoning the cost of the Abyssinian War, which was above nine millions. The present Government had reduced the expenditure by two millions and a half. With regard to future adjustment of taxation, if the income tax were to be abolished, property ought to make some other fair contribution to the revenue. As for economy, he asked Mr. Disraeli, would the Conservative or Tory party mend their manners in this respect if they had the chance given them once more? He (Mr. Gladstone) had often advised them to do so, but they would not take his advice. Only let them be fixed and nailed to that principle. Mr. Gladstone, in conclusion, declared that what was called the Conservative reaction was mere weariness and loss of energy; but he insisted upon the necessity for union in the Liberal party. Without this condition he should not be able to lead or serve them. His speech having ended amidst great applause, a vote of confidence in him was proposed by Dr. Purvis, seconded by Dr. W. C. Bennett, and passed by acclamation. The assembly then dispersed. Mr. Gladstone spoke again, on Saturday, in Beresford-square, Woolwich, and, on Monday, at New Cross, Deptford.

Mr. Disraeli, accompanied by his private secretary, Mr. Montague Corry, dined at the Farmers' Ordinary at the George Hotel, Aylesbury, on Saturday afternoon, and the company after dinner adjourned to the Assembly Rooms for his speech. Two or three thousand persons filled the hall; the galleries were occupied by ladies. The chair was taken by Colonel Pratt. The right hon. gentleman was, of course, welcomed with very hearty cheering. He began with a complaint of the manner in which Mr. Gladstone had suddenly dissolved Parliament. It was an unfair attempt to catch the country by surprise, like the Ashantee way of fighting. He defended himself against Mr. Gladstone's assertion that he had combined with the Roman Catholic prelates to defeat the Irish Universities Bill. He spoke of his having declined to form a Government after that event, and blamed Mr. Gladstone for keeping back from Parliament his correspondence with the Queen upon this subject. Commenting upon the Prime Minister's electioneering address, he objected to the mention of a repeal of the income tax as a gross bribe, like his promise to take off the burden of a local toll at Greenwich. He examined the argument that the income tax was but a temporary expedient to allow of removing some indirect taxation. It was estimated by Baron Rothschild that the financial changes now projected would be a loss of revenue to the amount of nine or ten millions. There would be a deficiency of four millions and a half. How was this to be made up? It must be, as Mr. Gladstone himself said a few years ago, by increasing taxation of property, most likely by the house tax; by imposing trades licences, as Baron Rothschild said; and by augmenting succession duties, attacking the inheritance of the orphan and widow. He censured this vague, ambiguous, and desultory manner of bringing forward a financial scheme. It should have been first submitted to the criticism of Parliament, instead of being cast into a general election. Mr. Disraeli next turned to reviewing the conduct of the Government during the last five years. Its harassing interference had made everybody uncomfortable, and Mr. Lowe seemed to glory in doing so. He especially accused Mr. Gladstone of mischievous behaviour with reference to foreign policy. The Crimean War cost 200,000 lives and £200,000,000 of money. He deplored that war; it was not unjust, but it was unnecessary, because Russia was tempted to cross the Pruth by the infirmity of purpose and vacillation of England. Mr. Gladstone was in fault for that; Lord Palmerston, who knew it, was in the habit of saying so. Then, was it for a Minister who had occasioned the Crimean War, and had caused such a awful waste of human life and public treasure, to pride himself on the economy of dismissing some dockyard labourers and scraping the incomes of Government clerks? The Abyssinian War, too, was caused by the grossest neglect and carelessness of foreign affairs, in a Government of which Mr. Gladstone was a member. It was a scandal to the British Crown; it weakened our influence in Europe; it was whispered of with contempt in the bazaars in India, and might have endangered our Eastern empire. The Conservative Government, at the instance of the present Lord Derby, one of the most prudent, but not the least resolute, of English Ministers, at length took action in that matter. It cost nine millions, because time was precious, as the affair had been so neglected; but the expedition, under Lord Napier of Magdala, was completely successful. The neglect or mismanagement of foreign affairs might therefore have very costly, as well as ignominious, consequences. A Minister who affected to despise foreign policy would bring us to grievous loss and national dishonour. Now, he had accused the present Government of an act of great folly and ignorance, concerning the Strait of Malacca. Mr. Gladstone seemed to think little and to know nothing about this, but it was a very important matter, as the Strait of Malacca was the great highway of commerce between India and Europe on the one hand, and China and Japan on the other. One side of the strait was formed by the Malay peninsula, under the control of England. On the other side was the island of Sumatra. Mr. Gladstone's Government had permitted the Dutch, if they pleased, to take the whole of Sumatra; in exchange for this, we had taken the Dutch settlements and engagements on the Gold Coast, which at once brought us into the Ashantee War. After exposing, as he said, the inaccuracy of Mr. Gladstone's statements upon this subject, Mr. Disraeli returned to questions of finance. In general, he thought, the income tax should be reserved for a war tax, and it would then give immense power to the foreign policy of this country. But it might also be used, as when Sir Robert Peel first imposed it, to effect a reform of the tariff. It would be no relief to abolish the income tax and substitute other taxes more vexatious. Let the income tax die a natural death, and let the surplus of revenue be applied to relieve other parts of the public burden. The income tax was now at 3d.; he (Mr. Disraeli) left it at 4d.; and it would soon disappear. The relief of local taxation, of burdens on land, had been one of the earliest objects he sought, when first elected for Buckinghamshire. As for the land question, he was anxious to secure the independence of the farmer, not doing injustice to the landowner. He and his friends were ready last Session to support the principle of Mr. Read's bill. If tenants generally held under agreements which secured them a two-years' notice to quit, that might be the foundation for a good understanding. The condition of the farm labourers might be improved, and great improvement had been made; but to offer to relieve their social wants by merely giving them political privileges was the part of demagogues, not of statesmen. That was, indeed, a very large question, which would have to be dealt with some day. In conclusion, Mr. Disraeli promised to uphold the institutions of the country, the rights of the people, and the honour of the county of Buckingham. He was repeatedly cheered throughout his speech. The meeting was afterwards addressed by Sir R. Harvey and Mr. Talley, and a vote of thanks was passed by acclamation.

Mr. Disraeli arranged to be at Newport Pagnell on Wednesday last, for a second address to his Buckinghamshire constituents.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The long monotony of the winter recess has at last been broken, as far as the turf is concerned, by the publication of the weights for the various spring handicaps. The entries for most of the handicaps—especially for the long-distance races—exhibit a decided falling off from the standard of previous years; and it is to us a matter of regret to see 159 horses entering the lists for a mile scramble at Lincoln, while the old-established Great Northamptonshire Stakes, run over the two-mile course, can only secure a miserable entry of thirty-seven. It was very different in the old days, when Stampede, carrying a heavy weight, ran first past the post in a field of twenty; and when Fairwater, with a yet heavier burden on her back, and Dollar and John Davis were successively victorious over large fields of good horses. Nowadays we have to put up with few runners, and such sorry victors as Midsummer, Messenger, and Flurry—animals but little removed from platers. However, it is no good groaning over the altered state of racing. What was once a pastime is now a profession, and we must accept it that those who attempt to make a livelihood by keeping racehorses have the best right to set the fashion. Our only wonder is, when we regard the question from the professional and gambling point of view, how this system of short-distance training can be made to pay. To win any race is difficult enough; but surely many disappointments must be borne by a man who gambles on the chance of his horse proving victorious over from thirty to forty competitors in the short scramble of a mile.

As, at the time of writing, we have not received notice of the acceptances for the general body of the spring handicaps, we shall at present only make a few remarks on the Lincoln Handicap. That the weights have been pretty satisfactorily adjusted is evidenced by the fact that seventy-eight out of the original entry have cried content with their imposts. Among the top weights Andred looks well with no more than 8 st. 5 lb. to carry, for he is a really brilliant miler, and we think he is sure to beat all those handicapped above 8 st. In the next division we notice the names of Hochstapler, Anton, Light-house, and Salvano, all of whom are most favourably treated. Unfortunately, they all labour under suspicion of infirmity, though Lighthouse, probably, has nothing much the matter with him, and, if the representative of the stable on the day, will very likely start first favourite. Of the lightly-weighted horses we should think that Wild Myrtle ought to have a good chance with only 6 st. 13 lb. to carry, seeing that she ran second in the Oaks and was always rather above the average of racers. Maid of Kent, too, cannot complain of 6 st. 12 lb.; and the Lemonade colt, at 6 st. 4 lb., trained as he is by one of the dangerous Dawsons, is almost certain to be a good favourite before the day.

The Ridgway Coursing Club held their third and last meeting last week. The dogs were, with hardly an exception, of moderate quality, and the trials, especially at the meet at Balham Smithy on Thursday, were often unsatisfactory, owing to the extreme roughness of the ground.

In the match between the English Eleven and the New South Wales Club the former scored 92 in their first innings and 90 in their second. The New South Wales men made 127 runs in their first innings, and won the match by eight wickets.

It is stated that the Treasury have granted a superannuation allowance of £900 a year to Sir Thomas Fremantle, late Chairman of the Board of Customs.

Dr. F. Sandberger has come to the conclusion that the fresh-water shell Unio sinnatus, now extinct in Germany, existed there not merely in prehistoric times, but down to the times of the Romans. He believes that the mollusca were eaten by the Romans, and that they used the shells for ornamental purposes.

FORSTER'S LIFE OF DICKENS.

We have received the third and concluding volume of Mr. John Forster's "Life of Charles Dickens," published by Messrs. Chapman and Hall. It comprises a period of twenty years, from the writing of "David Copperfield" to the author's sudden death, in June, 1870. The biographical interest of this portion is very inferior to that of the early struggles, brief as they seem to have been, with difficulties occasioned by a father's want of worldly prudence, which appeared in the narrative of Dickens's boyhood. There is also an increasing lack of that fresh and enthusiastic zest for the labours of his own imaginative genius, and that frank enjoyment of his well-deserved fortune and fame, which won our sympathy in the first fifteen years of the popular novelist's successful career. After the production of "David Copperfield" it was generally felt by the most attached readers of this gifted author that his rich fund of native good humour had been somewhat impaired by the excessive draughts upon its literary and social expression. In some points of literary workmanship, especially in the plan and construction of his stories, there was a notable advance. The practised skill of the artist is very great in "Bleak House," though greater dramatic power is shown in "Copperfield." But the engaging spirit of unaffected cheerfulness is not so constantly present, and the ridicule is more allied to bitter scorn, in such later tales as "Little Dorrit" and "Our Mutual Friend." Mr. Forster, one of the best of critics, observes that the first mentioned of these two stories added nothing material to its author's reputation, and that the second will never rank with his higher efforts for want of "freshness and natural development." The candid biographer is equally ready to confess "the underlying tone of bitterness" that runs through the books which followed "Copperfield," the absence of a cheery tone, and the resentful anger which gave too aggressive a form to satire.

The offensive attitude which Dickens now began to assume with regard to what his biographer terms "national institutions and conventional distinctions," is partly ascribed to the effect of periodical writing. As conductor of a weekly paper, like Household Words and All the Year Round, he was liable to contract the besetting faults of journalism. "The decisive, peremptory, dogmatic style" into which one is betrayed by "a habit of rapid remark on topics of the day," is pleaded by Mr. Forster as an excuse for the "tone of bitterness" which he detects and deplors. We scarcely think, however, that such an effect could have been due to such a cause; for some of the sweetest-tempered, the mildest, and kindest men we have ever known were employed far more than Dickens ever was in the daily office of sternly denouncing a host of public abuses or controversial fallacies. The true cause lay deeper, as we believe, in an impatient sense of personal discontent. But what ailed him so much, in the midst of his great renown, with increasing pecuniary rewards for his work, and with a large circle of admiring, trusty friends? Mr. Forster, in chapter vii. of this volume, under the title of "Disappointments and Distastes," offers some remarks in explanation of the painful restlessness that beset Dickens when he was forty-five years of age. We do not care to look closely into this part of his life. The letter in which he told his friend of a certain private unhappiness may now be read by those who wish to do so. But they will know little more of the matter than was revealed by the "unwise printed statement in Household Words," at the time of a well-known arrangement concerning his domestic affairs. This took place in May, 1863. Mr. Forster does not shrink from expressing his disapproval of the course that was taken, and it is much to be desired that the whole subject should be allowed to drop.

But we are told, at the same time, of another "disappointment and distaste," which is more likely to have affected the tone of the novelist's later stories with the "bitterness" already confessed. He did not like "what is called society" in England, and he was not satisfied to leave it alone, but he was angry with it for being what it is. "The inequalities of rank which he secretly resented," we are told, "took more gallingly as well as glaring prominence from the contrast of the necessities he had gone through with the fame that had come to him; and when the forces he most affected to despise assumed the form of barriers he could not easily overleap, he was led to appear frequently intolerant (for he very seldom was really so) in opinions and language." This can only mean that Dickens thought his acknowledged rare genius and literary success ought to have gained for him more complete access to some aristocratic and fashionable circles than he found actually open to him; and that he was exasperated by finding himself treated as not quite the equal of a Duke or Marquis. Yet he pretended not to care for such distinctions, or for the amount of personal attention he received. "He was sensitive in a passionate degree to praise and blame, which yet he made it, for the most part, a point of pride to assume indifference to." Herein we find the real explanation of much that is said in the history of his inner life. We cannot but think it very probable that the failure to achieve some objects of social ambition, in those particular quarters, and upon those unusual terms, which he thought he had a right to insist upon, may have reacted upon his more private sources of happiness. It is all over now; but these notorious experiences have seemed to jar with the moral teaching of his books, which were once welcomed as the best illustrations of a blessed art of life—the art of getting the utmost innocent joy from the indulgence of domestic and social affections. This teaching of his books was mainly right and true; the sincerity of their author, while engaged in writing them, is beyond all doubt. The only comment to be made in this instance, as in many of a similar kind, is that a man of genius, like another man, is not invariably endowed with moral strength to act upon his own wisest resolves. The influences of a rapid rise in worldly position are dangerous to peace of mind, when self-esteem and the love of admiration have been fostered by too early renown.

We are told, in this biography, that the determination of Dickens to become a public reader of his own writings, and to travel about for that purpose, was in great measure due to his "restless domestic discontent." But it may also have been confirmed by his finding that "what is called society" did not suit him; for he could not live in retirement, and the platform was a substitute for ordinary intercourse with the world in general. He had removed from London to Gadshill, near Rochester, where he saw only a few intimate friends. The first series of public readings took place in 1858, at St. Martin's Hall, and was followed by a provincial tour, extending to Ireland, which yielded him a net weekly profit of £300, and sometimes £500. The second series of readings was at St. James's Hall in 1861, and afterwards in different towns of England and Scotland. In 1863 this entertainment was again presented to the London public, and there were readings also in Paris, on behalf of a charitable fund. He was offered £10,000 for eight months' readings in Australia, and had a mind to go, but refrained because he could not take his daughter with him. His last visit to America, in 1867 and 1868, gained him nearly £20,000, with continued orgies of applause; but the fatigue and changes of climate were very bad for his health. Mr. Forster is of the opinion, expressed by other friends of Dickens at the time of his death, that the renewal of these readings in 1869 had much to do with the latent brain disease which struck him down a twelvemonth afterwards. According to the statement of the eminent physician, Sir Thomas Watson, called to see him in April, 1869, he was even then on the brink of an attack of paralysis, or possibly of apoplexy, "the result of extreme hurry, overwork, and excitement, incidental to his readings." His work done after that consisted of the six numbers extant of "Edwin Drood," which show no diminution of power. A few pages written for this story, having lately been found among the author's manuscripts, are here first printed; they contain Mr. Sapsea's account of the circumstances under which he seceded from "the eight club," in the town of Cloisterham.

Mr. Forster has occupied the whole of chapter xiv. with a critical essay upon the genius and talents of Dickens as a novelist, which is marked, as usual with him, by sound literary scholarship and discernment. He thinks, as most of us do, that the earlier works of this delightful author—"Pickwick," "Nickleby," "Oliver Twist," "The Old Curiosity Shop," and "Martin Chuzzlewit"—are better than those of later date. As we recall the pleasure which they gave us many years ago, and which they are still capable of affording to new generations, we feel bound in gratitude to put down this faithful narrative of his personal history with a renewed expression of our esteem for one of the greatest literary favourites of the English people.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

CONTINUITY OF ANIMAL LIFE.

Professor P. Martin Duncan, M.D., F.R.S., began his third lecture on Palæontology, on Thursday week, with some remarks on the nature of natural-history classification, arguing that, as fossils are the mineralised relics of past faunas and floras, they must be classified upon the same principles as living animals and plants, because the laws which regulate living things have operated continuously. Zoologists have classified forms by their external resemblances and dissimilarities; but their only correct method is by associating those which have structures in common, and such structures as appear to involve the presence of certain others. This mode of classification, which involves the idea of plan, the Professor illustrated by referring to the distinctive characteristics observable in the structure of mammals and birds. Palæontologists employ the same method, and the involved or correlated structures are of the very greatest importance when fragments alone are discoverable. The nature of the succession of forms in a limited area and the principles of geological classification were next considered, and the old theory of repeated destructions and new creations was disproved by the application of such facts as there being persistent types found in all strata (of which globigerina, caryophyllia, and lingula were cited as examples), and the last geological formations containing both extinct forms and many which still flourish; and it was shown that fossils frequently fill up gaps in the series. After noticing the relation of "colonies" to this question, the Professor commented on the importance of intercalary and linear types. Of the former he selected the iguanodon as a dinosaurian form, whose remains were discovered by Dr. Mantell in the Wealden of Sussex; and then, referring to large diagrams, he pointed out the structures which demonstrate its alliance to both reptiles and birds. The probable habits and locality of this huge creature, a model of which may be seen at the Crystal Palace, were also commented on, as well as the physical geography of its age. The mastodons and elephants, ranging from the miocene time to the present, were taken as linear types, and it was urged that no reason existed for refusing, without evidence, the genealogical relationship between consecutive faunas and floras.

WEBER AND HIS TIMES.

Sir Julius Benedict, at the Friday evening meeting, Jan. 30, gave a discourse on the Life and Times of his master and friend, Carl Maria von Weber. Baron Franz Anton, his father, was described as a very eccentric person, who, after many changes, became the chief of a company of strolling players; and, in consequence, his son, a weakly, delicate child, born Dec. 18, 1786, suffered much, morally and physically. His father, being connected by marriage with Mozart, determined that Carl should also be a musical prodigy, and accordingly not only set him, before he was four years old, to sing and play the piano, but urged him to compose while unacquainted with the laws of harmony. The boy obtained friends and patrons, and at the age of fourteen was a student under Michael Haydn, with Sigismund Neukomm. After various changes he gained the friendship of Meyerbeer, the son of a banker at Berlin, when the development of his genius began. His early opera, "Sylvana," was unsuccessful at Frankfurt in 1810; but in 1812, when greatly roused by the struggle for German independence, he set to music the patriotic songs of Arndt and Körner still popular. On Christmas Day, 1816, he became capellmeister to the King of Saxony, who, unfortunately, preferred the Italian opera to the German, and Weber suffered much through the intrigues of his rival, Morlacchi. While at Dresden, beside other works, he composed the "Invitation à la Valse," a work which marks a transition in dance music; and into this, characterised then by tame sentimentality, he infused life and vigour by introducing passion, dignity, and simplicity. In 1820 he produced his musical drama "Der Freischütz," the subject of which had long been working in his mind. In February, 1821, Sir Julius Benedict said it was his happy lot to become Weber's pupil; and he gave an interesting account of his introductory interview at Dresden, followed by copious details of the first performance of "Der Freischütz" at Berlin, on June 18 in that year, when it was highly successful in spite of many technical drawbacks. This great work, though so warmly received by the public, was severely criticised by musicians; and Sir Julius attributed its success to Weber's breaking through the conventionality of the Italian opera, and adapting his music to the nature and position of the individual. He made his characters stand out in relief; they breathe and live; and in this his influence shows itself in the works of Meyerbeer, Mendelssohn, and Wagner. "Der Freischütz" was also most enthusiastically received at Vienna, Paris, and London, but with small pecuniary benefit to the author. It excited little attention at Dresden, where he was still treated very unworthily. Eventually he selected from very many offers an engagement at Vienna, where he produced, on Oct. 25, 1823, his great work, "Euryanthe"—at first coldly received, through the defective plot and the great length of the libretto. His health was now breaking fast, and he fell into complete inactivity, from which he was only roused by his earnest anxiety to provide for his beloved wife and family, knowing his end to be near. Contrary to medical advice, he accepted the earnest invitation of Charles Kemble, in 1824, to come to England, and he began immediately to study our language, in order to compose his opera "Oberon." After a warm reception at Paris, on his way hither, he arrived in London in March, 1826; and on April 9 finished the overture, writing on the score, "Soli Deo Gloria!" "There is no similar instance in the history of music," said Sir Julius, "of a work, at once so tender and so vigorous, so original and yet so musician-like, being written under such conditions." On April 12 the opera was performed with great success, and Weber's reception was overwhelming; but the concert, on which he had built great hopes, was a complete failure from various causes. At it Miss Stephens sang his last composition to the words of Moore, and there he fell on a sofa, shattered and almost breathless. His end was drawing near, though he still hoped to meet his wife again; and on the morning of June 5 he was found in the sleep of death. His body, buried first at Moorfields, was removed to Dresden in 1844, mainly through the exertions of Richard Wagner, who, in his farewell address over his grave, said, "There never was a more German composer than thou. Into whatever fathomless realms thy genius carried thee, thou didst remain chained by the most tender links to the heart of the German people." The musical illustrations of the lecture from Weber's works included his part-songs, "Bright sword" and "Lutrow's wild hunt," and the cavatina, "O Araby!" Sir Julius Benedict gave the "Invitation à la Valse," and, in other instrumental music on the pianoforte, was assisted by Mr. W. Ganz. Mr. George Busk, F.R.S., the treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

THE MODES AND CONDITIONS OF MENTAL ACTION.

Professor Croom Robertson devoted his third lecture, given on Saturday last, to the most difficult part of Kant's Critical Doctrine—the answer to the question, How is the pure science of Nature possible? or, How is it possible for the mind to determine anything necessarily about Nature? It was said that the mind does so when it declares that every event must have a cause. About the fact there can be no doubt. Nature can never become the subject of synthetic judgment, a priori, if for our knowledge we are dependent on mere experience that comes to us; in other words, if Nature has an existence quite independent of the mind. It can be known, as it is known, only if the mind which so judges of itself constitutes or makes Nature. This agrees with the solution of the question about pure geometry. But Nature is the world of experience, the complex of all the objects of experience. How, then, can the mind make or constitute that which confessedly it has to acquire? or how can that be experience which the mind, in order to know anything a priori about it, must constitute? The Professor explained how Kant met this difficulty. The matter of experience, he said, is the variety of phenomena constituted of sensations received in space and time, and this matter cannot be empirically got. Nature is the complex of the objects of experience constituted through or according to fixed laws, which cannot be acquired as the matter of experience is. The only alternative is that the form must be innate—that the necessary laws of experience spring from the mind, and that experience in the full and effective sense that is meant when we speak of Nature is constituted by the mind imposing laws upon phenomena. Kant showed that synthetic judgments a priori are everywhere possible. Synthesis (putting together) means activity and spontaneity, as opposed to receptivity; and in sense the mind is not active at all. But the mind can act, can combine; and manifests another faculty—namely, that of thought or understanding, which also has its fixed conditions. To discover these is the purpose of the second part of Kant's Critical task. Thinking is not knowledge, though there is no knowledge without thinking. The mind puts together in knowing, and thought is such putting together; but it depends upon what is put together whether the result be knowledge. The mind can have no knowledge by way of intuition a priori, but, freely constructing figures by productive imagination, it puts together their parts or elements, and makes universal determinations accordingly. The latter part of the lecture was devoted to the illustration of Kant's celebrated table of the categories or concepts of the understanding:—1, Quantity (including unity, plurality, totality); 2, Quality (reality, negation, limitation); 3, Relation (substance or inherence [substance and accident], causality and dependence [cause and effect], community [reciprocal action between agent and patient]); 4, Modality (possibility—impossibility; existence—non-existence; necessity—contingency). In expounding this table the Professor referred to Kant's method of interpretation by schemata (thus, number is the pure schema of quantity), and explained the way by which the categories may be applied to mathematics, physics, and metaphysics. He also showed how Kant wrought out his theory in revulsion from the scepticism of Hume, and how Stuart Mill, in his "Logic," has attempted, from his own point of view, a task corresponding with that in Kant's "Transcendental Logic."

At the next Friday evening meeting Dr. Doran, F.S.A., will give a discourse on the Opponents of Shakspeare; and on Saturday next Mr. R. Bosworth Smith will begin a course of four lectures on Mohammed and Mohammedanism.

CURIOUS WILLS.

WILL OF JEHAN CONNAXA, OF ANTWERP.

(Contributed by the Author of "Flemish Interiors.")

The will of Jehan Connaxa offers so curious a history that it has served almost without alteration for the plot of an admirable comedy by C. G. Etienne, performed in Paris with great success in 1810.

It is mentioned by Père Garasse in his "Doctrine Curieuse," who states it (p. 926) to be of an earlier date than that of M. Rapin, who died in 1608, or even that of the Docteur Bude, deceased 1540, of both of whose wills he speaks at pp. 920 and 922. P. Garasse also asserts that Connaxa's will is alluded to in the "Dialogues of Cæsar" (Philosopher and Physician, died 1551, aged ninety-one). Moreover this entertaining history has been related as an actuality by Angelinus Gazæus, a Jesuit, in his "Pia Hilaria," published at Antwerp (1629), and there can be no reasonable doubt of its authenticity.

The Sieur Jehan Connaxa was a merchant-prince or burgher of Antwerp, who, having but two daughters, coheirresses, married them to the two most illustrious noblemen of that city. Notwithstanding the large dowries brought by the respective brides, the two sons-in-law still looked with an envious eye on the remaining portion of his large fortune which the father-in-law had reserved for himself. They consequently came to an understanding with their wives to induce the old man insensibly to make over to them the whole of his property. Adulations, invitations, caresses, promises, were employed; in fact, no means were left untried to obtain the coveted end, till at length the good father-in-law, persuaded that his remaining years would continue to be passed as agreeably, weakly yielded to the persuasions of his children, and ceded to them all they asked.

For a few weeks all went on marvellously well; the same care, the same attentions, the same tenderesses were lavished upon him. Imperceptibly, however, these demonstrations of affection began to wear off: marks of kindness diminished, caresses became colder, invitations more rare. At last they ceased altogether, and when the too-confiding father presented himself at their houses unasked, he soon began to find his visits were inopportune and his company an intrusion.

Now began the chapter of regrets, but, alas! all too late:

the mistake was irreparable. The old man, however, who was no fool, while secretly devouring his grief, bethought him of a method of recovering, if not the affection of his children, at least its outward semblance, and of securing to himself the restitution of enough of his own too-generously-bestowed substance, to live on: this was his scheme—

He went to see one of his friends, a rich banker, and begged him to favour him with the loan of 1000 crowns for the space of three hours only: "Pray send me this sum," said he, "tomorrow morning early, and at mid-day, when I shall be at dinner with my family, let one of your clerks come with a message from you to ask me to lend you the amount in question, and insist on not returning without it. One thing only I beg you: let this secret remain entirely between you and myself." The banker acquiesced, and Connaxa proceeded to call at the houses of his sons-in-law to invite them to dine with him on the morrow. The young men, somewhat reluctantly, it is true, accepted the summons; for, knowing the circumstances of their father-in-law, they did not expect he could give them much of a banquet; however, at the appointed hour husbands and wives presented themselves and took their seats at table. The dinner was well served, and they were busy discussing it when a loud knock was heard at the door. The servant who went to open it returned, saying that it was the banker's messenger, who had called for the thousand crowns he had promised to lend him; and this he repeated aloud, so that every one in the room might hear him.

Connaxa, without looking round, replied he had visitors with him at dinner, and could not be disturbed to attend to business. At this the sons-in-law looked at each other knowingly, as if perfectly well aware of the real objection of their poverty-stricken relation. The messenger, however, continuing urgent, Connaxa pushed back his chair with a show of impatience, and, begging his astonished guests to excuse him a moment that he might get rid of the fellow by satisfying his demand, rose and went into an adjoining room, where he counted over the coin with a great deal of jingle, ringing all the large pieces, so that there should be no mistake at all about its existence, then dismissing the man with his burden he resumed his seat grumbling at the interruption.

But the sight to note was the change that had suddenly taken place in the comportment of the young people; instead of the stiffness and reserve they had before maintained, there was now a geniality, a warmth and friendliness, in their manner which would have fallen like a ray of summer sunshine on the heart of the old man had he not, unfortunately, been too well aware of the cause. On taking leave, each couple was eager to secure his company for the next day; and, indeed, both pressed him so urgently, time after time, that he ended by promising to divide the remainder of his days equally between them; the young people entertaining no doubt but that a man who had ready cash enough at command to be able to lend so large a sum must hold countless stores hoarded up.

At length, however, Connaxa fell seriously ill. His children surrounded his bed; never was a sick man more tenderly nursed, each vying with the other to show the excess of his and her zeal. He gave them delicately to understand that the one who paid him most attention would prove to be the most liberally provided for; and, on the decided aggravation of the symptoms, they begged him to declare his last wishes and make a codicil. He replied that that had already been done, and requested them to bring out of his room his strong box with three locks: the weight was enormous, and the expectant heirs felt convinced that their inheritance would shortly be doubled.

Connaxa requested them to send for the Prior of the Jacobins of Antwerp; and, appointing him his testamentary executor, he handed him one of the keys of the box, and to each of the sons-in-law one of the remaining two, desiring that it might not be opened until forty days after his obsequies. Then, addressing his sons-in-law, he said—"My children, I desire, for the salvation of my soul, to do some good works before my death; I therefore beg you to pay immediately 100 livres to each of the churches in Antwerp, and 200 livres to the Church of the Jacobins, where I wish to be buried. You will take care that my funeral is conducted honourably, and with due regard to your position and mine; I assure you you will lose nothing by it."

The sons-in-law promised that all should be done according to his desire, and proceeded forthwith to pay the legacies to the churches; then, melting into tears, they begged the dying man's blessing. Connaxa granted it willingly, and not long after, died, his children supplying the most splendid funeral ceremonial.

It is needless to say with what impatience the heirs awaited the expiration of the forty days, in order to proceed to the examination of the strong box. At length the expected hour arrives; the Prior of the Jacobins is summoned, and appears with his key and his witnesses. The three keys are solemnly thrust into the three locks, and are simultaneously turned; the lid is raised; but what is their surprise and disappointment to see a mass of old iron, bits of lead, and flints! In the midst of these lies conspicuous a clumsy cudgel, and round it is rolled a parchment, which proves to be Connaxa's will. It is briefly written, in these words:—

"Ego Joannes Connaxa tale condo testamentum ut qui sui cura relicta, alterius curam susceperit, maculetur hac clava."

The fame of this incident, so humiliating to the disappointed heirs, soon spread round and about the old city of Antwerp, and thence to the adjacent provinces, and there was not a city in the Netherlands that did not applaud the ingenious device by which the fond and trustful father had repaired the mischief of his iacantious generosity in despoiling himself, like a second Lear, in favour of his avaricious, ungrateful, and unnatural children.

The Goldsmiths' Company have voted £100 in aid of the funds of the Society of Friends of Foreigners in Distress.

The opening meeting of the African section of the Society of Arts was held yesterday week, at the society's house, in John-street, Adelphi, when the inaugural address was delivered by Sir Bartle Frere. The chair was taken by Admiral Ommamney; and there was a numerous company, among those present being Sir Samuel and Lady Baker, Lord Montagu, Mr. Hyde Clarke, the Rev. Horace Waller, Dr. Mann (of Natal), and a number of commercial gentlemen representing the heads of the African trade in London.

The annual ball of the Licensed Victuallers' School was held, on Thursday week, at St. James's Hall, and attracted a large number of visitors. The school is situated in Kennington-lane, Lambeth, and has accommodation for 200 children. Since its establishment, in the year 1803, it has maintained, clothed, and educated 1895 children, a large number of whom on leaving the school have received sums of money for their apprenticeship. The expenditure of the institution for the past year amounted to upwards of £6000; and, as the income from invested capital does not exceed £900 per annum, it is necessary to raise a large amount by subscriptions, in order to keep up the efficiency of the institution. A special effort is this year in progress, in order to increase the number of lady life subscribers.

THE ROYAL MARRIAGE AT ST. PETERSBURG: THE ENGLISH CE

REMONY, IN THE ALEXANDER HALL OF THE WINTER PALACE.

THE MARRIAGE AT ST. PETERSBURG.

The marriage of his Royal Highness Prince Alfred Ernest Albert, Duke of Edinburgh, second son of her Majesty Queen Victoria, to her Imperial Highness the Princess and Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna, only daughter of his Imperial Majesty Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, took place, in the Winter Palace at St. Petersburg, on Friday, the 23rd ult., a day which is reckoned the 11th by the Russian Calendar. We now present, from the sketches made there by our Special Artist, Mr. Proctor, some illustrations of the august and happy nuptials, to which are added those of particular scenes at St. Petersburg and elsewhere associated with the occasion.

The religious service of the wedding was performed, first, according to the ritual of the Greek Church, in the Imperial Chapel of the Winter Palace; and then, immediately afterwards, in the Alexander Hall of that palace, by the Very Rev. Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, according to the forms of the English Church.

The different classes of persons who were privileged to witness the ceremony met about noon in the several state apartments of the Winter Palace. Members of the Council of the Empire and foreign Ambassadors, with the ladies who accompanied them, met in the Alexander Hall; the Emperor's Aides-de-Camp and other military or naval officers of distinction met in the Nicholas Hall; a select company of Russian merchants and foreigners met in the Marshals' Hall. In the Concert Hall were the Court ladies, the wives of senators and other Russian nobles. They assembled, at a quarter to one, in the Salle des Armoiries. Here were several hundred ladies and gentlemen, the former in rich robes of every gorgeous colour, with diamond-studded coifs and lace veils, the latter in a variety of splendid uniforms, with the badges of many orders. The ladies were ranged standing on one side of the long and rather narrow hall or gallery; the gentlemen stood along the other side. An avenue was so formed, through which the procession of the Imperial family, with their princely visitors, conducted the bride and bridegroom to the chapel. A detachment of Lancers was stationed as a guard of honour in the middle of the gallery.

The procession was ushered in by the fourriers of the Imperial Court, the Masters of the Ceremonies, the Chamberlains and marshals, walking two and two, with their ensigns of office. Their Majesties the Emperor Alexander II. and the Czarina, or Empress, were attended by the Minister of the Imperial Household, the Major-General of the Suite, and two Aides-de-Camp. Then came each married couple walking together, the Czarevitch and Czarevna, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and the Imperial Crown Prince and Princess of Germany and Prussia, followed by the Crown Prince of Denmark. The bride and bridegroom were the next pair in the procession. Prince Arthur and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha came after them, followed by the Russian Grand Dukes Vladimir, Alexis, Sergius, and Paul, younger sons of the Emperor; the Grand Duke Constantine, his Majesty's brother, with his wife and four sons; the Grand Duke Nicholas, the Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg, the Princes Romanoffski, the Dukes of Leuchtenberg, Princess Marie of Baden, Prince Peter of Oldenburg and his family, and Prince Alexander of Hesse. A train of Court ladies and other persons of rank closed the procession.

The Czar wore the dark green uniform of a Russian General, with white shoulder knots. He carried a plumed helmet in his hand. The Empress wore a gold-embroidered train trimmed with ermine, and with two broad rows of gems on her breast; on her head was the crown, with a tiara of diamonds, and a long veil. The bride, Grand Duchess Marie, wore a silver embroidered dress, on which were roses and fleurs-de-lys; she had a purple velvet mantle trimmed with ermine; her train, very long and heavy, was borne by four chamberlains and an equerry. The bridegroom, the Duke of Edinburgh, wore his uniform as a Captain in the British Navy. The Crown Prince of Germany wore a dark blue uniform. The Crown Princess of Germany had a green velvet train. The Prince of Wales wore a British military officer's scarlet uniform, with white satin shoulder-knots. The Princess of Wales wore a pearl-coloured satin dress, with a train of crimson and gold; she had a diamond tiara, a collar of brilliants, and a pearl necklace. Her sister, the Czarevna (Princess Dagmar of Denmark), wore a gold and white robe, with a train of deep-blue velvet, a diamond tiara, and a collar of brilliants. The Russian Grand Duchesses were all splendidly attired. The Duke of Saxe-Coburg had a white Russian uniform. Some of the Grand Dukes wore little children, wearing uniforms, helmets, and high boots, with a manly and soldierly air.

At the door of the Imperial chapel the Czar and Czarina, and the Princes and Princesses, were received by the Metropolitan Archbishop and the Holy Synod, with other clergy, bearing the cross and holy water. They were conducted to the altar. The arrangement of a Russian church should here be remembered. Its interior comprises, first, the porch; secondly, a large open space, corresponding to the nave of a Protestant or a Catholic cathedral, which in the Russian is called the rapeza; thirdly, the entrance to the church proper (the singers usually stand on each side of the altar); and, lastly, the officiating priest, at certain parts of the service, stands upon a kind of platform, which is very low, and which is designated the ambon. One of the most important portions of the building is the ikonostas, the term applied to the screen which separates the altar from the church. Upon this screen the holy pictures are hung, and it is the most sacred part of the church. Some of the canons prohibit women from ever going beyond it, and it is most lavishly adorned. The ikonostas rears itself up in bold relief; close to the rails of the sanctuary is a handsome pulpit, with a fringed circular canopy. Above it are golden cherubim, wreathed in at the apex by a dazzling "glory." At the back of the canopy is a pictorial representation of a sacred subject; two cherubs forming the brackets and a framework of drapery hedging in the picture. This pulpit, which informs a sexagon, has panels in unison with the prevailing style of ornament, which is gold and white. An angel with outstretched arms forms the bracket supporting the pulpit, which is not usually seen in Russian churches. The ikonostas is a mass of gold, upon which are medallions with paintings inserted. The pillars supporting the roof are of red granite; the floor is a series of wooden inlays, similar to the flooring throughout the palace; and the sanctuary windows are curtained with red silk.

Upon the altar table were placed the cross, the Gospels, in a massive gold frame, the pyx or box for the sacramental bread, and a picture of the Virgin and Child framed in gold. A flood of light was shed upon all by a great number of wax tapers in the candelabra. The four chief priests—viz., the Metropolitan Archbishop of St. Petersburg and Kiev; Monsignor Bajanoff, Confessor of the Emperor and Empress, and Monsignor Macarius, Bishop of Vilna—stood at the analogion or lectern. They wore gold vestments, and Monsignor Bajanoff wore a scarlet collar, with other decorations. The Czar took his place at the right-hand side of the altar. The bride and bridegroom were placed immediately before the priests at the lectern; Prince Arthur and the Grand Dukes Vladimir, Alexis, and Sergius stood behind them as groomsmen. Next to the Czar and Empress were the Crown Princesses of Germany and the Princess of Wales; the Czarevna, with her little son, Grand Duke Nicholas, six years old; the Grand Duchess Constantine, the Czarevitch, and a Grand Duchess. On the opposite side were the gentlemen, the Crown Prince of Germany, the Prince of Wales, Prince Gortschakoff, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the Crown Prince of Denmark, and the Grand Dukes of Russia.

The order of the Greek marriage service was as follows:—After the liturgy had been said, first making the sign of the cross on the head of the bride and bridegroom three times, the priest handed each of them a lighted taper, having previously repeated that act of devotion on the forehead of both with one end of the taper. Being conducted into the church proper—or, as we should say, into the nave—the priest incensed them, and then the deacon exclaimed, "Give the benediction, Sir," which the priest proceeded to do in the following words:—"Blessed be our God always, now and for ever, even unto ages of ages," to which the choir responded "Amen." When the deacon had bidden the congregation to pray, he besought God to grant them heavenly peace and salvation to their souls. He also prayed "for the peace of the whole world; for the welfare of the Holy Church of God, for the Holy Legislative Synod, for the clergy and the people, for the Emperor (by name), for the servant of God (the bridegroom), and the handmaiden of God (the bride) about to be espoused, and for their salvation." One clause in the prayer was an expression of the devout hope that the bride and bridegroom might obtain all their desires tending to their salvation; another that they might be granted perfect love, peace, and mutual help—that they might be "preserved in concord and steadfast vitality to each other, and blessed in innocency of love, and delivered from all affliction, strife, and necessity." To this pious aspiration the choir responded, "Lord have mercy upon us." Then followed this brief prayer by the deacon, "In remembrance of our most holy, most pious, most blessed, and glorious Lady, the mother of God, and ever Virgin Mary, with all saints, we commend ourselves and each other and our whole life to Christ our God." Again came the vocal response, "To Thee, O Lord," succeeded by a fervent aspiration from the priest, in which he prayed to the Almighty, "who blessed Isaac and Abraham, and made them heirs of His promise," to bless the Duke and the Grand Duchess Marie, and to guide them in every good work.

These prayers were followed by an act to which general attention was drawn. The wedding-rings had been previously brought forward upon golden salvers, and placed upon the altar by one of the masters of the ceremonies; and now they were taken from the holy table by the principal priests and given to the confessor of the Emperor and Empress. That priest, according to custom, placed them on the fingers of the Grand Duchess Marie and the Duke of Edinburgh, and then ensued the following:—"The servant of God" (naming the Duke) "is betrothed to the handmaid of God" (naming the bride), in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, now and for ever, even unto ages of ages. Amen." Addressing himself to the Grand Duchess, the priest said, "The handmaid of God is betrothed to the servant of God," adding the inscription. This form was repeated three times, after which the priest made the sign of the cross on the forehead of the Duke and the Grand Duchess with the rings, and then put them on the forefinger of the right hand of each. When the rings had been thus placed upon the fingers of the bride and bridegroom, the Paranympheus, or, as he is called in Slavonic, the Vospriemnek, exchanged the rings of the espoused pair, and then the priest said a long prayer, beseeching God, "who conducted the servant of Abraham when he was sent into Mesopotamia to take a wife for his master Isaac, and at the well of water moved him to betroth Rebecca," to "bless the espousals of these Thy servants, and confirm them in his holy union." In the prayer occur these sentences:—"Thou, O Lord, has shown us that such pledges should be given and confirmed. By a ring power was given unto Joseph in Egypt; by a ring Daniel was honoured in Babylon; the truth was discovered with respect to Tamar by a ring; and by a ring our heavenly Father showed his kindness to his returning Son." This prayer closed with the ascription, and was followed by what is called the triple ectinia, or Litany, and "dismissal," the latter being a hymn which is constantly repeated in the Russian Church service.

With the "dismissal" terminated "the espousals," and then followed the office of the Matrimonial Coronation, which is prefaced by a striking scene. Giving the bride and bridegroom lighted tapers to hold, the priest placed himself in front of them, and, censer in hand, sang the 128th Psalm, beginning "Blessed are all they that fear the Lord and walk in His ways," the choir responding at the end of each of the seven verses, "Glory be to Thee, our God—glory be to Thee." What occurred next was watched with unabated interest. This part of the office might well be called "The Interrogations," for the priest says to the bridegroom, "Hast thou a good and unrestrained will and firm intention to take unto thee to wife this woman (mentioning the Grand Duchess by name) whom thou seest here before thee?" To this question the Duke of Edinburgh answered, "I have, Reverend Sir." The Priest: "Hast thou not promised any other woman?" The Bridegroom: "I have not promised another, Reverend Sir." To the Grand Duchess Marie a similar question was put, and her Imperial Highness returned the same answer. "Give the benediction, Sir," then said the deacon to the priest, who asked the Divine blessing, after which the deacon said the ectinia. In this the deacon prayed for peace for the whole world, especially for "the servants of God now joined together in holy wedlock," beseeching that the marriage might be blessed "like that of Cana of Galilee." The commendation of all to the Virgin followed. Then the priest recited another long prayer, asking God to give the young couple "a peaceful life, length of days, sobriety, mutual love, joy in their children, and the never-fading crown of glory."

One of the most important features of the service was then witnessed. This was the "crowning" of the bride and bridegroom. Taking in his hands the crowns, which play a conspicuous part in every Russian marriage, the priest first crowned the Duke of Edinburgh, mentioning his Royal Highness's name, and saying, "The servant of God is crowned for the handmaid of God (naming the Grand Duchess Marie), in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Then he put the crown on the bride's head, saying that she, the handmaid of God, was crowned for the servant of God (her husband), in the name, &c. After this interesting ceremony the benediction was given, the priest saying three times, "O Lord our God, crown them with glory and honour," and making in the air the sign of the cross. From this time until the end of the service the crowns were held over the heads of the bride and bridegroom by the four groomsmen alternately. Next came the Prokeimenon of the Apostle, consisting of verses out of the Psalms, the choir chanting the verses after each had been read. The Prokeimenon was sung to the eighth tone, and was as follows:—"Thou hast put crowns of precious stones upon their heads; they asked life of Thee and Thou gavest them." The reader next stated the Lesson, which is always the same at Russian marriage ceremonies, and which is taken from the Epistle of St. Paul to the Ephesians, chap. v., verses 20 to 23.

The deacon having directed the notice of the congregation to what was about to follow by exclaiming, "Attend!" the reader proceeded to read the Epistle, bidding the wife to submit herself to her husband and the husband to love the wife, "as Christ loved the Church." The few words which succeeded, and which it is unnecessary to repeat, were chanted to the fifth tone. In a very impressive manner the deacon exclaimed, "Wisdom! stand up. Let us hear the Holy Gospel," which the priest "declared" as being from St. John. Then came the tuneful voices of the choristers in the "Gloria," and the reading by the priest of the Gospel, beginning, "At that time there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee, and the mother of Jesus was there." Another "Gloria" followed the reading of the Holy Gospel, and preceded a prayer for the Emperor by name, for the Synod and Bishop, and brethren in Christ; and "again," recited the priest, "we pray for life, health, and salvation, and remission of sins to the servants of God"—namely, the Royal bride and bridegroom, whose preservation from all ill was again besought.

Another striking feature of the service was now imminent. When the deacon had given the commendation, what is called in the Russian liturgy "the common cup," containing the consecrated wine, was brought, and blessed by the confessor, who then asked God's blessing upon it, and who further besought the Almighty to impart His spiritual benediction unto the bride and bridegroom. Thrice the communion cup was presented to both the Duke and the Grand Duchess, who received the sacramental wine; and then, holding a lighted taper in their left hand, they were thrice led round the analogion, a kind of lectern or desk, or portable table, upon which are placed the holy books when the priest or deacon reads any part of the service. As their Royal Highnesses were conducted round the analogion from right to left they were accompanied by the best men, Prince Arthur and the Grand Duke Vladimir or Alexis, who held the crowns over the heads of the newly-married pair.

Our Illustration, in the large Engraving which forms the Extra Supplement, represents the chief officiating priest, Monsignor Bajanoff holding the Duke of Edinburgh and the Grand Duchess by their joined hands, and so leading them round. The Emperor and Empress are standing in the background. The Prince of Wales is to the right hand, under the pulpit.

After this ceremony, a troparion was sung to the fifth tone—"Exult, O Isaiah, for the Virgin has conceived and brought forth a son, Emmanuel—God and man. The East is His name. Him do we magnify and call the Virgin blessed." When two other verses had been said, the priest, taking off the bridegroom's crown, said:—"Be thou magnified, O bridegroom, as Abraham; be thou blessed as Isaac; and multiplied as Jacob, walking in peace and performing the commandments of God in righteousness." Taking off the bride's crown, he said to the Grand Duchess:—"And be thou magnified like Sarah; be thou joyful as Rebecca; and increase and multiply as Rachael, delighting in thine own husband, and observing the bounds of the law according to the great pleasure of God." One or two short prayers having been said and responded to, the priest delivered the following concluding prayer:—"The Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, the Most Holy and consubstantial Trinity, the Fountain of Life, whose Godhead is one, and whose kingdom is one, bless you and give unto you length of days, fruitfulness, increase of life and faith! May He fill you with all good things upon earth and vouchsafe unto you the goodness He has promised through the prayers of the Holy Mother of God and of all Saints! Amen." The bride and bridegroom, having kissed the holy cross, were embraced first by the Emperor and then by the Empress, whose greeting of her Royal son-in-law was profoundly touching. After the congratulations of the other members of the two Imperial and Royal families, the bridal procession left the church, the conclusion of the Russian rite being marked by the discharge of 101 cannon from the ramparts of the fortress of St. Petersburg.

The procession moved on through the palace to the Alexander Hall, which is not very large, but of beautiful design and sculptural adornment, with pillars of white marble, their capitals surmounted by white marble eagles. Two conspicuous trophies give additional beauty to the appearance of the hall. They are of white marble, corresponding with the ceiling, and consist of shields, the largest of which have a double eagle springing out of them, while another eagle is formed by smaller shields on each side. Above is a suit of Grecian armour with Greek shields. Frescoed medallions in relief run all round the room, giving it a light and graceful appearance; the subjects being varied by the introduction of classical figures at intervals. On the walls are five large pictures—one, by the English artist, George Dawe, being a fine portrait of the Emperor Alexander I.; the others, by Sauerwald, representing the battles of Kulm, Leipsic, &c., and the taking of Paris in 1814.

In this room an altar had been erected. It was exceedingly plain, about 3½ ft. in height, and covered with a deep, rich crimson velvet altar-cloth. The altar-rails were of brass, supported on brass pedestals; three steps led to the holy table, and in the centre of the steps were placed two cushions of the same deep crimson velvet as the frontal, and a curtain of similar texture, hung in brass rings, draped the back of the altar.

Shortly before half-past two o'clock the procession entered the Alexander Hall, the Emperor leading the Duke of Edinburgh and the Grand Duchess Marie to the altar, where stood the three English clergymen.

The Emperor and Empress stood on the right-hand side of the altar, her Imperial Majesty only occasionally using the chair which was placed for her. Close by were the Princess of Wales, the Czarevna, the Grand Duchess Constantine, the Grand Duchess Nicholas, and the other members of the Imperial family. In the rear of their Majesties stood the Ambassadors Plenipotentiary:—Lord Augustus Loftus (Great Britain), General Leflo (France), and Prince Reuss (Germany), the Austrian, Italian, Danish, and American Ministers, with their secretaries and attachés, amongst whom were the following gentlemen attached to the British Embassy:—Mr. W. Doria (secretary of Embassy), Mr. Henage, Mr. Seymour, and Mr. H. Loftus. Conspicuous amongst this group of diplomats was the special Envoy sent by the Republic of Montenegro; three representatives of Bokhara, who only arrived on the previous day, were present; also the members of the suites of the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Arthur, with a great many English visitors, amongst whom were Lord and Lady Aylesford.

When all had taken their places the English form of solemnisation of marriage was begun. Just as at Royal marriages in England the Archbishop of Canterbury reads the whole of the service, so on this day the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster took the whole of the duty upon himself, although there were also present in their clerical capacity the Rev. Arthur S. Thompson, B.A. (Oxon), Chaplain to her Britannic Majesty's Embassy, the Russian Company, and the British Factory; and the Rev. S. Kingsford, M.A. (Cantab). The Anglican service began by the Russian choir (who numbered forty men and boys) chanting, in their own tongue, the first verse of the 21st Psalm—"The King shall rejoice in Thy strength, O Lord; and in Thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice." This the St. Petersburg choir gave as well as they had performed their arduous part in the large church, and when they had concluded the Dean of Westminster began the service. The Beati omnes (Psalm 128) was chanted.

After the prayer beginning "Almighty God, who at the beginning did create our first parents, Adam and Eve, and did sanctify and join them together in marriage," the Rubric says—"If there be no sermon declaring the duties of man and wife the minister shall read as followeth" (i.e., the Exhortation), "All ye that are married." Inasmuch, however, as Dean Stanley had preached upon the subject of the Royal marriage on the previous Sunday at the English church, he did not deliver an address now, neither did he read the Exhortation, but in place of both he said the prayer specially written by him for this occasion. It concluded with the following supplication:—"Grant that the union in deeds of war which this hall celebrates may be exchanged for the more blessed union of brotherly kindness and perseverance in well-doing; that peace and happiness, truth and justice, faith and charity, may be established among us for all generations, and that by divers gifts from north and south, from east and west, Thy kingdom may be built up and enlarged even more and more in the unity of the Spirit and in the bond of peace, through Jesus Christ our Redeemer. Amen."

The choir then chanted in Russian the following final anthem, taken from the first three verses of the 112th Psalm:—"Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord: he hath great delight in his commandments. His seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the faithful shall be blessed. Riches and plenteousness shall be in his house: and his righteousness endureth for ever."

The services of both the Russian and the English Churches were now concluded. The procession went on to the Malachite Hall, where the last important formality of signing the register was gone through, the only persons present besides the above distinguished personages and Viscount Sydney, Lady Augusta Stanley, and the three English clergymen, being the chamberlains and the pages who held the trains. Prince Gortschakoff and Count Schouvaloff were present. The bride and bridegroom signed first, then the Emperor, the Empress, the Russian and English Princes and Princesses signing next, Viscount Sydney affixing his signature last but one, and the Rev. Mr. Thompson signing last. During this interesting ceremony the Grand Duchess Marie sat on one side of the table and the Empress on the other. The register of the Chapel Royal, St. James's, being justly regarded as too valuable a volume to be removed, a leaf was taken to St. Petersburg in order that, after their Royal Highnesses had signed it, the page might be subsequently inserted in the book.

It is observed with interest that the prayer-book from which the Dean of Westminster read the first part of the service was the same volume which was used at the coronation of William IV., and that in the after-part of the office Dean Stanley read from the prayer-book which was used at the marriages of George III., Princess Charlotte, the Duke of Gloucester, the Princess of Hesse, the Duke of Cambridge, William IV., the Duke of Kent, and the Prince of Wales. This historic volume is the property of Lady Mary Hamilton.

The Emperor and Empress gave a grand banquet to 800 wedding guests, in the Nicholas Hall, at five o'clock. It was a brilliant scene; the great hall is white, and was lighted up by thousands of wax lights in the numerous chandeliers. At the four tables sat a splendidly-dressed company. The newly-married Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh were placed side by side. On her left sat her father the Czar, and next him were the Princess of Wales, the Prince Imperial of Germany, and the Czarevna on that side of the high table. On the Duke of Edinburgh's right sat the Empress, in close conversation all through the banquet with her new son, who, in speaking to her Majesty, bent towards her with an air of courtesy and deference. Next to the Czarina sat the Prince of Wales. Next to the Prince sat the Princess Imperial of Prussia, and then the Czarevitch. Music was performed during the feast, Patti and Albani singing their best. The health of the bride and bridegroom was drunk, all standing up and touching glasses with each other. At half-past eight in the evening the company reassembled in St. George's Hall for the graceful dance, or rather promenade to music, which is called the polonaise. It went gaily round the ball-room, with frequent changing of partners, till nearly ten o'clock. Then came the quiet departure of the newly married couple to the palace of Tsarskoe-Selo, a few miles from St. Petersburg. They were attended by five persons, including Lady Emma Osborne and Lieutenant Haig. Some public buildings of St. Petersburg were illuminated that night, Messrs. Defries, of London, being employed for this work. The illuminations of the British Embassy are the subject of one of our illustrations. They were provided by Messrs. Defries, whose patent crystal apparatus, with various emblematic devices, produced a brilliant and beautiful effect.

The funeral of Count Berg, Lieutenant-Governor of Poland, which took place at St. Petersburg, a few days before the Royal wedding, presented an imposing spectacle in the streets of the Russian capital, as the procession conducting the hearse moved from the Lutheran church, in the Nevski Prospect, after the religious ceremony. The Emperor of Russia and the Prince of Wales attended the funeral procession, both on horseback. Our Art ist's sketch represents his Majesty and the Prince awaiting the departure of the hearse from the chapel door. His Royal Highness wore his military overcoat and the bushy cap of the Rifle Brigade.

An incident of ordinary experience in winter at St. Petersburg is the subject of our Artist's remaining sketch, the operation of taking water in casks out of a hole broken in the ice of the Neva, for the supply of householders in the city.

Miss Landseer, eldest sister of the late Sir Edwin Landseer, has presented to the National Life-Boat Institution 100g.

The old gravel-pits and belts of furze on the west side of Tooting-common are being cleared away, and the land is to be excavated and laid out as a public park and recreation-ground for the inhabitants of Tooting and Streatham. The work is undertaken by the Board of Works, who have purchased the manorial rights and arranged with the commoners having pasture rights and other privileges. The other portion of the common, about which there has been expensive litigation between the lord of the manor and the commoners, is to remain intact. It is beautifully timbered, and possesses a park-like aspect, and is to be preserved in its present state.

A correspondent of the Garden quotes a letter from Mr. Bright in reference to the more efficient utilisation of Indian corn as an article of food in this country. Mr. Bright is of opinion that the main impediment to its more general use is the ignorance which prevails in regard to the best way of cooking it, and he expresses his anxiety that some good American cook should give us practical instructions in the matter. It is added that Indian corn, although it will not ripen in the southern counties of England, may be raised with ease as far as the green state, in which state it is largely used in the United States as a most palatable addition to the table.

MATCH AT CHESS BETWEEN THE CALCUTTA AND BOMBAY CHESS CLUBS.

It will interest many of our readers to learn that Chess is not neglected in the country of its birth. The two following games have lately been played by telegraph between the Calcutta and Bombay Chess Clubs—that is, by three champions selected by each club. The players for Calcutta were Messrs. R. Steel, R. M. Ross, and C. H. Ogbourne; for Bombay, Messrs. W. B. Fellows, A. G. Mullins, and J. Westlake.

GAME NO. 1.

(K's B's Opening.)

WHITE (Bombay).	BLACK (Calcutta).	WHITE (Bombay).	BLACK (Calcutta).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	27. R takes R	B to K 5th
2. B to B 4th	Kt to K B 3rd	28. K R to Kt 7th	R to Q sq
3. P to Q 4th	P takes P	29. R takes R (ch)	K takes K R
4. P to K 5th	P to Q 4th	White were too impetuous. Having gained a clear piece, they need have risked nothing; and, by sheer superiority of force, they must have won with ordinary care. They have still a winning game, however.
5. Q takes P	P takes B	30. K to B sq	P to K 4th
6. Q takes Q (ch)	K takes Q	31. K to K 2nd	P to B 5th
This exchange of Queens at the beginning detracts greatly from the interest of the game.
7. P takes Kt	P takes P	32. P to Kt 3rd
8. Kt to K B 3rd	B to K B 4th	Fatal loss of time.
9. Kt to Q 4th	B to K Kt 3rd	33. R to Q 7th	B to B 2nd

Bombay have now a considerable advantage in position. Their King is in safety and all their pieces in play.
18. P to Q Kt 3rd	B takes P	42. P to B 7th	P to B 7th
Why sacrifice a P eep?
19. R takes B	P takes P	43. R takes P	P to B 8th, becoming a Queen

9. Castles K's side	Castles	19. R to B 5th	B takes R
10. P to Kt 3rd	P to K R 4th	20. R takes B	P to K Kt 4th
This is not sound, but it leads to a sharp and amusing skirmish.

And Calcutta announced mate in eight moves

CHESS PROBLEMS.*

The collection of Chess Problems just issued by Messrs. Pierce is a welcome addition to the too few books upon the subject which we possess. Without pretension to the highest faculties in the composition of these ingenious subtleties, the authors of the volume before us, by fertility of invention, and occasionally by originality and beauty of idea, have entitled themselves to a conspicuous place among those who have devoted themselves to this branch of chess. The collection comprises not less than 300 positions, of which each brother contributes nearly half; the few remaining being joint compositions with Mr. Meyer and Mr. Victor Gorgias. Nearly the whole of these problems have been printed before, in the various chess organs in this country and abroad, a fact which, if it detract from their novelty, is a good guarantee for their correctness. The following (No. 28) is a pleasing and well-constructed position:—

White: K at K B's 2nd, Q at K B sq, R at Q 6th, B at Q R 4th, P at K Kt 3rd, K's 3rd, Q 4th, and Q R 3rd.

Black: K at K B 4th, Q at K Kt 5th, Kt at Q Kt sq, P at K Kt 2nd and 4th, Q's B 5th and 6th, and Q R 3rd.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Still better is No. 71: but that appeared in our columns not long since. No. 200 is not difficult, but will be a delightful morsel for the young students. Of the joint compositions by Messrs. W. T. Pierce and H. Meyer one of the most attractive will probably be No. 275:—

White: K at R sq, Q at Q Kt 2nd, R at K R 2nd, B at K B 5th and Q 6th, Kt at Q 4th, P at K Kt 7th, Q 7th, and Q B 5th.

Black: K at Q 4th, R at K Kt sq and Q sq, B at K B 2nd, Kt at K R sq, P at K Kt 5th, Q 6th, Q R 2nd, 3rd, and 5th.

White to play, and mate in four moves.

We are told, but have not had time to examine them critically, that Nos. 91, 110, 150, and 205 are also particularly good. If they prove to be so, and have not already appeared in the Illustrated London News, we shall probably print them by-and-by.

SCIENTIFIC RESULTS OF THE MONTH.

On Jan. 20 a paper on "The Mechanical Production of Cold" was read before the Institution of Civil Engineers by Mr. A. C. Kirk. The discussion which followed was continued throughout the evening and also throughout the whole of the meeting during the following week—the subject being one of comparative novelty and of much importance. The science of thermodynamics teaches that in every case in which power is generated by heat there must be a high and a low temperature, and teaches also that in the conversion of heat into power a certain expenditure of heat will in a perfect engine generate a determinate amount of power, which is consequently termed the mechanical equivalent of the heat. The converse proposition is also true, that a certain expenditure of power will generate a corresponding difference of temperature at the points of reception and rejection; and this is what is done in all the freezing machines in which cold is produced by the expenditure of mechanical power. In some of the freezing machines a volatile liquid, such as ether or liquid ammonia, is made to boil by placing it in a vacuum, which is mechanically maintained, the vapour being constantly removed by a pump or otherwise into a vessel having a high internal pressure, where it is again liquefied, and cold is produced by the rapid vaporisation. In Kirk's machine the fluid used is air. The air is compressed mechanically by a steam-engine, by which operation its temperature is increased. While in the compressed state it is cooled by water, and, being then suffered to expand, it seeks to recover from surrounding objects the heat it had lost, and thus produces cold. The problem of economical cooling is of much interest on account of its bearing upon many processes in the arts, such as the solidification of paraffine and carbolic acid, the cooling of brewers' worts, and the preservation of meat in a frozen state during its conveyance from foreign countries in steam-vessels specially fitted for that particular function. The speakers during the two evenings the discussion lasted were Messrs. Siemens, West, Reece, Liddleley, Thomson, and Bourne.

The Prussian Government has given a great impulse to salmon-culture in Silesia by distributing fecundated ova among the leading pisciculturists of Silesia and Brandenburg, and the number of young fish in the Oder has thus been much increased. In 1871 the number of young fish raised and put into the Oder was 55,000, in 1872 it was 320,000, and in 1873 it was 144,274.

A paper by Professor Reynolds has been read before the Literary and Philosophical Society of Manchester "On the Destruction of Sound by Fog and the Inertness of a Heterogeneous Fluid." On this subject the author of the paper dissents from the conclusions arrived at by Professor Tyndall.

A correspondent of the Field gives an account of a gigantic species of cuttle-fish lately found entangled in the nets of some fishermen near St. John's, Newfoundland. The body, it is stated, was 8 ft. in length and had ten arms, the longest of which are 24 ft. long, radiated from the top of the head. The mouth, which was about the centre of the head, was armed with a horny beak, like that of a parrot. When killed by the fishermen it ejected a large quantity of inky fluid. The animal appears to have been a calamary, and is a different animal from the octopus. It is stated that a cuttle-fish was some time since thrown ashore which was 80 ft. in length. The fishermen who encountered a cuttle-fish some time since in Conception Bay state that it was three times the length of their boat, which was 20 ft. long. It threw one of its tentacles over the boat, and this tentacle, which was severed by an axe, and is now in the local museum, is 35 ft. long.

The International Exhibition for 1874 will consist of three divisions, of which the first will be devoted to the fine arts; the second to manufactures, raw materials, machinery, and processes; and the third to new inventions and discoveries. Among the machines will be lace-making machines, stone-dressing machines, brick-making machines, and wood-working machines. New stoves will form a prominent feature. Messrs. Chance and Co. will exhibit the revolving-light apparatus constructed for the South Stack lighthouse, near Holyhead; and Gramme's electro-magnetic light will also be shown.

The iron-mines of Elba have long been known to furnish some of the best iron ore in the world, and the supplies are inexhaustible; but their beneficial development has been prevented by Governmental restrictions. A company of Italian capitalists has now been formed to lease the mines for thirty years, and they will erect ironworks.

The system of casting metals under pressure, inaugurated by Sir Joseph Whitworth for the production of sound castings in wrought iron and steel, has been extended by Colonel Lavroff, a French officer, to bronze with advantageous results. The Whitworth system is now being applied to the production of heavy guns and of shafts for screw-propellers, which are cast hollow, and which, with about half the weight, are stronger than the screw-shafts usually employed. The soundness of the main shaft in screw-vessels is still more important than it is in paddle-vessels, as, even if one paddle-shaft breaks, the vessel may be able to complete her voyage with the other; whereas, if the screw-shaft breaks, the vessel is left without resource except the sails, which are often useless in such a case.

Mr. Griffiths, the inventor of one of the best forms of screw-propeller now in use, has lately proposed to employ two screws, one at the bow and the other at the stern; or he uses one screw working in a short tube which opens downward at the fore end, so as to take in water from below the keel and deliver it at the stern. Mr. Griffiths says:—"A screw-propeller working in open water in the ordinary manner draws a great portion of its supply of water from all around its periphery, and the power which is consumed in drawing it is wasted. This is not the case with my system, when the power is divided between the bow and stern screws, or with the enlarged tunnel-mouth for a single screw; for the extra quantity of water required by the screw is thus supplied without any loss of power. Screws must be supplied with 40 or 50 per cent more water to give the best effect in propelling the ship."

Last month we recapitulated some cases in which heat counteracts the effect of gravity, as when liquids assume the spheroidal state and roll over a hot plate without touching it. Mr. Crookes has quite recently described to the Royal Society several forms of apparatus which enabled him to render sensible an action exerted by heat on gravitating bodies. One of the experiments was made with a balance formed of a straw beam, with pith-ball masses at the end, the whole inclosed in a glass tube and connected with a Sprengli air-pump. It was found that the application of heat beneath one of the pith balls in the rarefied tube caused it to rise, whereas the application of a piece of ice caused it to fall. The motion could not be due to air currents, as there was no air present.

A substitution of albumen for gelatine in the bichromate process of photo-lithography has been successfully made. The paper is covered with a thin coating of albumen, upon which a concentrated solution of the bichromate is poured. After exposure under the negative, the sheet is covered with lithographic ink, and is then immersed in cold water to dissolve the unaltered albumen, which is removed by a soft sponge. A very clear image is thus obtained, which may be transferred to the stone and printed from in the usual manner of lithography.

people to relief works. We do not by any means intend to imply that some labour may not, under some conditions and in some places, be insisted upon as the price of grain. One cannot but hope that, as one of the beneficial results of that change of Administration which the general election has unexpectedly made imperative, a fresh impulse may be given to the Indian Administration in dealing with probably the greatest impending calamity of the age.

COURT ARRANGEMENTS.

The Queen will hold Drawingrooms at Buckingham Palace, on Thursday, 16th inst.; on Wednesday, March 25; and on a day yet to be named at the end of April or the beginning of May. The Queen will also hold a Court on Friday, March 13, at Buckingham Palace. The Knights of the several orders are to appear in their collars at the Drawingroom on March 25, it being a collar day.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, accompanied by the Czar, the Czarevitch, the Czarevna, the Prince and Princess of Wales, with the other Royal guests and members of the Imperial family, arrived at Moscow from St. Petersburg, by special train, at midnight on Wednesday week. The Imperial and Royal party were received at the Nicolaïfski station with the usual military honours, and drove immediately to the Kremlin in carriages and sleighs, the route being lined by dense and cheering crowds. Moscow was most brilliantly illuminated.

The Imperial Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany arrived in Moscow the day previously to the arrival of the Russian Court. Their Imperial Highnesses visited the Troitzkos Sergiewski Monastery.

On Thursday week the Czar reviewed the Catherine Slav-Regiment, the members of the Court and the foreign visitors being present. Subsequently the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh held a reception at the Kremlin to receive the congratulations of the Moscow nobles. At the reception a golden coffer was presented to the Duke and Duchess. In the evening there was a state performance at the Grand Theatre. When the Czar and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh entered the Imperial box the orchestra performed the British National Anthem, followed by the Russian Anthem, the audience enthusiastically cheering. All the foreign visitors were present.

Yesterday (Friday) week the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, with the Czar and the members of the Imperial family, and the foreign visitors, drove out, and inspected various places of interest in the city. The Imperial and Royal personages also attended a parade of infantry in the great Manège. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh received at the Kremlin a deputation of the English residents in Moscow; and a congratulatory address was presented by the Rev. R. G. Penny, British Chaplain at Moscow. In the evening a state dinner was given; and subsequently the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, with the Czar and the Imperial and Royal visitors, were present at a ball given by the Moscow nobles, at their club. At three o'clock the next morning, after attending the ball, the Imperial Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany and the Duke of Coburg left Moscow en route for Berlin.

On Saturday last the Emperor, with the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and his illustrious guests, together with the members of the Imperial family, proceeded by the Jaroslaf line to the Troitzkos Sergiewski Monastery, and upon their return the Imperial and Royal party dined at the Nicolai railway station. In the evening the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Czar, and the members of the Imperial family and the foreign visitors were present at a ball given by Prince Dolgourouki, Governor-General of Moscow.

On Sunday the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, with the Russian Court and the foreign guests, left Moscow upon their return to St. Petersburg. The Imperial and Royal party arrived at eleven o'clock a.m., and were received at the railway station by the Grand Duke Nicholas, Governor of the city, and a numerous staff.

On Tuesday the Prince of Wales, Prince Arthur, and the Danish Crown Prince paid a visit to Cronstadt. Their Royal Highnesses first visited the Technical School, and, after luncheon, went round the Middle Harbour, where they inspected the ironclad frigate Peter the Great, now in dock. They subsequently visited the Marine Club and Library in the new Admiralty House, the sail and boat manufactories, the Constantine battery, and the new battery (No. 3) in course of construction. The Royal visitors returned to St. Petersburg by way of Oranienburg.

On Wednesday the Duke of Edinburgh and the Prince of Wales were present at the ceremony of laying the keel of the ironclad corvette to be named the Duke of Edinburgh.

The Neva Skating Society gave a fête on the ice in the evening in honour of the Prince and Princess of Wales. A band of music attended, and there was a magnificent illumination with Bengal lights. The members of the Imperial family and the British Princes and Princesses arrived on the ice at a quarter past ten, and were received with loud cheering. The fête lasted till past midnight. Thousands were present.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh will leave St. Petersburg about the 27th inst., en route for England. Their Imperial and Royal Highnesses will make a short stay at Berlin. It has been notified to the town council of Gravesend that the Duke and Duchess will land at the Terrace Pier at that town on the morning of Saturday, March 7, that being the day on which the Princess Alexandra of Denmark (Princess of Wales) landed at the same place in 1863 and made her entry into London. The Duke and Duchess will proceed to Windsor Castle, where they will be received by the Queen.

Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne will shortly proceed to Dornden, Tunbridge Wells, which mansion is being suitably fitted up for the reception of the Princess and the noble Marquis. Dornden is situated within beautiful grounds, and is contiguous to the Royal parade and the mineral springs. The estate has been purchased by the Marquis of Lorne.

Prince Leopold was present, on Saturday last, at the marriage, in Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford, of Miss Lorina Liddell, eldest daughter of the Dean of Christ Church, to Mr. William Baillie Skene, M.A., of Pitlour, N.B., Fellow of All Souls' College.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Sir Gilbert Scott has been presented by the Turners' Company with the freedom of the City.

At the weekly meeting of the London School Board, held on Wednesday, at the Council Chamber, Guildhall—Mr. C. Reed, M.P., in the chair—it was arranged that the debate on Canon Gregory's motion relating to board statistics and voluntary schools should be resumed next Wednesday.

The nineteenth annual dinner of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools was held, on Tuesday evening, at the London Tavern—Sir Arthur Helps, K.C.B., presiding. It was stated that there are now 133 children in the schools, and since its foundation the institution had received 330 orphans. Subscriptions to the amount of £1700 were announced.

The annual assault of arms of the athletic club in connection with the Hon. Artillery Company was given on Wednesday evening at the headquarters, Finsbury. Mr. R. Harry Nunn, the honorary secretary of the club, who acted as manager of the sports, merited the thanks of the visitors for the admirable manner in which he conducted the entertainment.

Addressing the Fellows of the Royal Geographical Society, last Monday evening, on the question of Dr. Livingstone's fate, Sir Bartle Frere observed that, while a ray of hope was still remaining, he was nevertheless bound to say it was now smaller than it had been before the last few particulars had reached England. All he could do was to ask them to suspend their judgment and hope for the best.

The London Piscatorial Society of amateur anglers had its annual dinner last week at St. James's Hall, when Mr. T. R. Sachs, who held during some years the office of honorary secretary, was presented with a set of diamond studs and a silver tea and coffee service, with salver, in addition to the gift of a silver cup in 1866, as a testimonial of his services. We have noticed the objects and proceedings of this society before.

Exeter Hall was again filled on Wednesday evening with the friends of the movement for obtaining an advance of wages and the abolition of Sunday duty in the minor departments of the postal service. The chair was taken by Mr. Mundella, M.P.; and among other members of Parliament who supported the cause by their presence and advocacy were Sir Charles Dilke, Bart., Mr. M'Cullagh Torrens, Colonel Beresford, Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., and Mr. Plimsoll.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 107,301, of whom 36,992 were in workhouses and 70,309 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871 respectively, these figures show a decrease of 7119, 17,455, and 57,039. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 508, of whom 354 were men, 116 women, and 38 children under sixteen.

A meeting of Roman Catholics, to counteract the influence of the recent demonstrations of sympathy with German Protestantism, was held yesterday week, in St. James's Hall, under the presidency of the Duke of Norfolk. Many persons of note were present; and the attendance was so large that a second meeting was held in Warwick-street church, and a third in a large room at St. James's Hall. Sir Charles Clifford took the chair at the latter meeting, and the Hon. and Rev. G. Talbot, D.D., at Warwick-street church.

On Wednesday night the twenty-second anniversary festival in connection with the Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street, was celebrated at Willis's Rooms. Sir F. Goldsmid, Bart., M.P., presided. A large list of subscriptions and donations was read by the secretary. Worthily heading these was a third donation from Mr. John Walter, M.P., of £250, which was ably supplemented by one of £200 from the chairman, £100 from Mr. B. W. Currie, £50 from Lord Overstone, £50 from Mr. R. B. Wilson, and £25 from the Marquis of Exeter.

At the annual meeting of the Fellows of the Royal Horticultural Society, on Tuesday, there was an animated discussion on the motion for the adoption of the report. An amendment was moved proposing the adjournment of the meeting to March 10, to enable the opinion of the Court of Chancery to be obtained, if possible, in a friendly way, as to the legality of the election of the new council. For the amendment 52 voted, and for the report 71. The proxies were then handed in: for the amendment, 225; for the report, 231.

Lord Derby presided, on Tuesday night, at Willis's Rooms, at the anniversary dinner of University College Hospital. In proposing the toast of the evening his Lordship spoke at some length on the subject of charitable institutions, observing that there were none so safe from abuse as a great and established hospital. Sir F. H. Goldsmid, in proposing the health of the chairman, said a great contest had been going on throughout the country for the last fortnight, of which he would only say that those who had been defeated would feel less disappointment and concern, while those who had succeeded might not feel less joy, if, as the result, the highest position in the State were assigned to their noble chairman. Lord Derby, in replying, said:—"My hon. friend has thrown the 'fly' over me with great skill and ingenuity, but I don't mean to 'rise.' All I would say in the matter to which he has alluded is that I go in for fair play, and I think that those who fought the battle ought to enjoy the victory." The subscriptions announced during the evening amounted to £1500."

The Extra Supplement.

"LOW LIFE."

In none of his numerous works now at Burlington House, or elsewhere that we remember, is Sir Edwin Landseer ever happier in suggesting analogies between the canine races and different orders of men than in the two pictures of "High Life" and "Low Life," in the Vernon Collection at the South Kensington Museum, both of which we have now engraved—the illustration of the former having appeared in our Number for Jan. 31 last. Two men could hardly differ from each other more completely, in themselves and their surroundings, than do that Scotch deer-hound which appeared in our Paper a fortnight ago and this English bull-terrier; and if the Baron's noble hound is a fitting representative of "High Life," surely this burly, bandy-legged butcher's dog is the very impersonation of "Low Life." Not even the opposite counsel in the trial of the "Claimant," whatever the object in view, could represent the Roger Tichborne and Arthur Orton of former days as more essentially distinct beings. The one dog is of the purest breed—thin, sinewy, agile, fond of field sports—yet, as he reclines against his lord's cushion, he has a thoughtful, even melancholy, air. And every accessory about him—sword and casque, books and manuscript (perhaps the rent or pedigree roll), hawking-glove and eagle's-claw—tell of aristocratic life and tastes. The other dog is a vulgar cross of two plebeian breeds. He is neither active nor graceful in his movements, nor is he beautiful to look at. There is, however, plenty of fight in him; and, though out of condition, he would be a match for most dogs in a short tussle, and rats would have small chance in his neighbourhood. He has doubtless been at many a dog-fight, ratting-match, and pugilistic encounter. His master's habits may be inferred from the pewter pot and pipe behind the dog, and the empty bottle above. His sporting proclivities are probably indicated by the top-boots and blue spotted necktie; whilst his employment is evident from the butcher's block, knife, &c. Fat, overfed, indolent, impudent, blinking or winking one eye in the sunshine, and licking his lips over a well-polished bone, the butcher's dog stands at his master's door in stolid self-satisfaction, and perfectly content with the "Low Life" he leads and represents.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

There has been some doubt concerning the genuineness of a despatch, published yesterday week, bearing date the 24th ult., and purporting to come from Sir Garnet Wolseley, who was said to be then encamped on the Adansi hills, half-way between the river Prah and the Ashantee capital city of Coomassie. But the drift of its news has obtained confirmation from its agreement with letters of the 15th from Prah-su, which were published last Thursday. A German missionary, Mr. Kühne, had been sent down from Coomassie by the King of Ashantee to offer or invite terms of peace. More than half the Ashantee army which invaded the Gold Coast country a twelvemonth ago had perished; about 20,000 had returned, and there was great lamentation at Coomassie. Mr. Kühne had seen 300 dead bodies of Ashantee chiefs. The chief causes of this great mortality were famine, smallpox, and dysentery, but the Ashantees had many killed in the fight at Abrakrampa. What remained of their army, which had been under the command of a General named Amanquantia, reached Coomassie on Dec. 22, and almost immediately dispersed. Three days afterwards King Koffee Calcalli, having deliberated upon this state of affairs, dictated to an educated native, who could write English, a long letter to Sir Garnet Wolseley. He sent this down to Prah-su, where Sir Garnet's headquarters then were, by a party of Ashantee messengers, whose arrival in the British camp, at the end of December, has been mentioned.

Our Special Artist, in one of his sketches engraved for this week's paper, shows the crossing of the river Prah by these ambassadors on a pontoon raft, accompanied by Lieutenant Grant and another English officer, who had gone across to meet them. Four of the most important members of the Ashantee embassy are conveyed on the first raft; their chief is distinguished by a coloured handkerchief tied round his head, and a square gold plate on his chest. The raft seen in the distance bears seven other Ashantee messengers or attendants, with one British officer. Sir Garnet Wolseley received the letter they brought, but declined to see them. They were shown the practice of our Gatling battery gun, which frightened them so much that one of them went mad, and shot himself in the night. Or this may have been from his fear of disgrace, when he found that their mission would prove a failure, as they were told Sir Garnet Wolseley meant to go on to Coomassie. These Ashantees returned to their King, reaching the capital on the 8th ult., and next day the King sent for Mr. Kühne, who had been detained there in captivity four years and a half, but had not been severely ill-treated. He found the King alone, dressed in a white cloth, and seated on a low stool playing with his cats. Mr. Kühne was invested with a royal robe, such as is worn by the King's relatives, and was presented with a gift of gold. He was then told that the King would send him to the English or Governor-General to say that the King wanted peace; "he would not fight with the white men, even if they came into the market-place, for his ancestors had never fought with the white man." This of course is an untruth on the part of his Majesty, whose predecessors, Osai Quaco Duah and Osai Tootoo Quamina, fought great battles with the English in 1824 and 1826, on the former occasion defeating and slaying Governor Sir Charles M'Carthy. Mr. Kühne undertook the message of peace, and arrived at Prah-su on the 13th, meeting Sir Garnet Wolseley on his march to Coomassie.

The General had several hundred sailors and marines, with a picked company of soldiers from each of the three European regiments which had come up to Prah-su. There was great difficulty in the transport of stores, as the Fantee carriers hired at Cape Coast Castle would not go farther towards the Ashantee country. The men of the two West India negro regiments were therefore obliged to be used as carriers. One of our Illustrations shows the arrival of the naval brigade on the 3rd ult., which was mentioned in our Special Artist's letter. They are dressed in coats of dark blue, with waist-belts, and three or four straps over the shoulders, to which are hung the water-bottles and filters, ammunition-pouches, and haversacks for their rations of food. They have with them a native boy, whom they picked up on the road. He wanted to go with them to join his father and brother on the other side of the Prah. The English sailors took kindly to this little fellow, and he has become a pet amongst them.

We present also two Illustrations of earlier date: one is that of a regiment starting from Cape Coast Castle on its march inland; the other shows the Royal Engineers fixing the electric telegraph wires along the line to Prah-su. Their greatest labour is to cut down the trees and clear away the brushwood in the dense forest of that tropical clime.

THE ELECTIONS.

By the absolute verdict of the constituencies, the Conservative party is about to govern this country. The flow of the electoral success of that party which began to rise last week has since risen to such a height that there will be a working majority and something more in the House of Commons against Liberalism, and England will be entering on a new political régime. In a comparatively desultory manner, but in some sort a chronological sequence, some record of the changes of the election may be given, premising that the English constituencies have most decidedly pronounced for Conservatism; that in Ireland there have been some Liberal gains, always supposing that the Home Rulers who have been returned are to be all counted as Liberals; while, strange to say, in Scotland there have been Tory gains, and seats have been taken from some notable adherents of the Gladstone Government.

In the first amongst the variations of membership which have occurred in this week must be placed the defeat of Mr. McClure, the former Liberal member for Belfast, Mr. J. P. Corry, a Conservative, having been returned; and as Mr. William Johnson, Tory and Orangeman, has been re-elected, the representation is wholly Conservative. Perhaps the greatest shock the Liberal party has received, and the most significant indication of Tory reaction, is the defeat of Mr. James White and Mr. Fawcett at Brighton. Each in his own way was a typical Liberal, and their vanquishment has not been soothed by the negative satisfaction that they have fallen before "foemen worthy of their steel;" for their places have been taken only by Mr. Ashbury, who is certainly a foremost yachting-man, and General Shute, who is certainly a distinguished officer in a particular way. At Canterbury the one-and-one condition of the representation has ceased, Captain Brinkman, the late Liberal member, having been forced to cede his seat to Mr. Majendie, a Conservative; while Mr. Butler-Johnstone, the late member of the same political persuasion, keeps his place. A useful Liberal member, with a specialty in regard to experience of India, Sir Charles Wingfield, has been routed out of Gravesend by Captain Pim, who, to put it mildly, is romantic in his ideas generally, and, so far as we recollect, is troubled with grievances. A complete upset has occurred at Ipswich, where Mr. Adair, long a most valuable member in matters of private business, and Mr. West, who was rather conspicuous (in a certain way) in the House, have been ousted by two Conservatives, Mr. J. P. Cobbold, who, to be sure, has some hereditary claims on the borough, and Mr. J. R. Bulwer, Q.C., so that the representation is wholly Tory.

The Conservative element in Manchester has proved dominant; for the late member of that creed, Mr. Birley, has secured a colleague of cognate political sympathies in Mr. Romaine Callender, the third seat being occupied by the venerable and venerated former Liberal member, Sir Thomas Bazley; while Mr. Jacob Bright did not get a place at all, and is "left lamenting." By the rejection of Lord Henley at Northampton the Government has lost a steady vote, and the House a sage and judicious member; and Mr. Pickering Phipps, a Conservative, will henceforth be the coadjutor of Mr. Charles Gilpin, the late Liberal member. At Norwich a victory was gained over Mr. Tillett, who sought the seat left vacant by the late Liberal member, Sir William Russell, by Mr. Huddleston, Q.C.; but Mr. Colman, the other former Liberal member, saved his seat, and the representation is now divided instead of being, as hitherto, completely Liberal. The retirement of Sir E. Massingham Buller from North Staffordshire has deprived the Gladstone Government of a straight vote, and Sir Charles Adderley has in Mr. C. Minton Campbell a supporter who will be an addition to the Conservative ranks. Again a borough formerly true to Liberalism—Stoke-on-Trent—has fallen away by choosing Conservative Mr. Heath in the room of Liberal Mr. Roden; but Mr. Melly has retained his seat, though he was second on the poll.

The first indication in Scotland of the existence of the Conservative epidemic which has been prevalent was the choice of Colonel Alexander for North Ayrshire, in the place of the late Liberal member, Sir D. Wedderburn, who did not seek re-election. A very old Liberal member, Sir Harry Verney, has been pushed out by Conservative Mr. Hubbard, junior, whose father formerly sat for the borough when it had two representatives. The favour in which Sir Henry Hoare was believed to be held in Chelsea has proved not to be sufficiently powerful to resist the rush of Conservatism, and so he has been replaced by Mr. Gordon, who will have to bear with a Radical colleague, as Sir Charles Dilke retains his seat. Christchurch was not wooed by the late member, Mr. Haviland-Burke; and a Tory, Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, has got into that hitherto Liberal fold. Deserted by Mr. T. Hughes, Frome has added to the Conservative victories by returning Mr. H. Lopes, who sat in the last Parliament for Launceston. Disregarding his long tenure of the representation of the borough on Liberal principles, Leeds has, as it were, cast out Mr. Baines, though it has retained Mr. Carter, whose pronounced Radicalism may, perhaps, neutralise the additional Conservatism which has been infused into the membership by Mr. Wheelhouse, the late member, having a colleague after his own political heart, in the person of Mr. R. Tennant. Re-election at Knaresborough was not sought by the late Radical member, Mr. Illingworth; and, after a contest, Mr. B. Woodd took the place.

The city of London has emphatically pronounced for Conservatism. Mr. Goschen was the only Liberal returned, and he was at the foot of the poll—Mr. Alderman Lawrence and Baron Rothschild being nowhere; while Mr. Alderman Cotton, Mr. Hubbard, and Mr. Twells sit in their places. How it would have been if Mr. R. Crawford, one of the late Liberal members, had not retired, it is impossible to say. Whatever the influence which has acted on political opinion in this election may have been, it was potent in Marylebone, from the representation of which Mr. Harvey Lewis having retired, Sir Thomas Chambers, the other late Liberal member, will now have a Conservative colleague in Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., who was at the head of the poll. Sir John Ramsden, the late Liberal representative of the Monmouth Boroughs, did not go thither again, and an accession has been made to Conservatism by the choice of Mr. Cordes. The defeat of Mr. Hibbert at Oldham, by Mr. Serjeant Spinks, is very suggestive, inasmuch as he was one of the most respected members of the House when he was in a private station, and proved, as Secretary to the Local Government Board, a satisfactory official. He has, however, to give way, and Mr. Cobbett, the other late member, will have his recent Conservatism nourished and intensified by association with his new colleague. Again has a Scottish constituency proved recreant to the Liberal cause, for Stirlingshire has put into the place of Admiral Erskine (who did not stand on this occasion) a Conservative, Sir W. Edmondstone having in a contest beaten a new Liberal candidate, Sir W. Bruce. By a fantastic trick the Tower Hamlets has chosen to put a Mr. Ritchie, entirely unknown as a public man, at the head of the poll, has retained Mr. Samuda, one of the late Liberal members, and rejected Mr. Ayrton—an act which would seem to be intended as a direct slap at the Government. In Westminster two Conservatives were returned in a whirlwind fashion, Mr. W. H. Smith, of course, retaining his seat, while Sir Charles Russell has been given to him as a colleague. This is an instance of the fatuity of the Liberals in crowding their candidature on constituencies, for, had they pursued their intention of running Sir T. Fowell Buxton alone for the seat left vacant by the retirement of Captain Grosvenor, and concentrated their votes, the one-and-one condition of the representation might have been preserved, whereas the candidature of Sir W. Cudington, by which it was sought to assail both seats, ended inevitably in the letting in of a Tory.

Once more, Scotland is in Liberal default, and this time a borough, the urban constituencies having hitherto been considered as towers of strength to the party of progress. Ayr has got rid of Mr. E. Craufurd, the late member, and has chosen a Conservative Baronet, Sir W. Cunningham, in his stead. It is believed that there will be one universal feeling of regret amongst the members who were in the former House at the loss of Mr. Locke King, whom the electors of East Surrey have rejected, and given the late Conservative member, Mr. Watney, a colleague of his own way of thinking in the person of Mr. W. Grantham.

The Carmarthen Boroughs were not asked to re-elect the late Liberal member, Sir J. Cowell Stepney, but they were asked to supply his place by his son, Mr. Arthur Stepney; they declined, however, and chose a Conservative, Mr. W. Neville. A Conservative has been returned at the head of the poll for the city of Dublin—namely, Sir Arthur Guinness, who was returned also in 1868, but unseated on petition. With him is joined Mr. Brookes, a Home Ruler, who happens just now to be Lord Mayor of the city. Mr. Pim, one of the late Liberal members, was relegated to the foot of the poll; his former colleague, Sir Dominic Corrigan, did not stand. In South Wilts Mr. Fraser Grove, the late Liberal member, was defeated by Viscount Folkestone, who, with the other previous member, Lord Henry Thynne, makes the representation entirely Conservative. Another English county, Gloucestershire (West), which returned two Liberal members to the last Parliament, has rejected one—or, at least, has supplied the place of Mr. Marling, who retired, by Mr. R. E. Plunkett—though Colonel Kingscote, the other Liberal, retains his seat. Ayrshire South has followed the example of the northern division, and rejected the late Liberal member, Mr. Finnie, for Mr. Roger Montgomerie, a Conservative. A heavy blow to the Government has been dealt in the Wigton district by the rejection of the Lord Advocate for Scotland, and the election of a mere Mr. Stuart. Essex South has sent away its two late Liberal members, Mr. Wingfield Baker and Mr. Andrew Johnstone, and become wholly Conservative, by the return of Mr. T. C. Baring and Colonel Makins; and the county of Edinburgh, by not finding a Liberal to succeed Sir A. Maitland (who did not stand again), and choosing the Earl of Dalkeith, has restored the Tory dominance in the county, which was destroyed at the last election.

Turning to the enumeration of the Liberal gains, the task is not very heavy, though in some few instances the victories obtained have been good ones. Thus the entire representation of North Durham has been obtained by the return of Mr. Lowthian Bell and Mr. Palmer, whereas it was formerly divided between Sir Hedworth Williamson (who did not stand this time), a Liberal, and Mr. George Elliott, a Conservative. At Kirkcudbright a hybrid Liberal, Sir W. Herries Maxwell, has been replaced by a total one, Mr. Maitland. In Ireland some successes—notable for changes in a Liberal direction—have been made in some of the northern Conservative boroughs. Thus Colonel Knox, a loud-spoken Tory and Orangeman, has yielded his seat at Dungannon to Mr. Dickson; and Sir Hervey Bruce has had to give his seat at Coleraine to Mr. D. Taylor. There is a question whether the late representative of Dungarvan, Mr. Henry Matthews is a Tory or a Liberal, so batlike are his oscillations between the two parties; but, at any rate, he has made way for an absolute Liberal, Mr. O. Keefe, and Lord Newry has been forced out of the borough which gives him his title by a Liberal, Mr. Whitworth. Mayo County, which was left unsought by its late Conservative member, Lord Bingham, has become wholly Liberal by giving to the other late member, Mr. G. E. Browne, as a colleague, Mr. T. Tighe. A little while ago Colonel Pease, a Tory, was returned for Hull, in the room of the late Mr. Clay, and the representation was thus neutralised. Before, however, he could take his seat, he has been ousted by Mr. A. H. Willson, and the other late member, Mr. Norwood, has again a colleague of his own Liberal opinions. In County Down there is a gain, for though Lord Arthur Hill-Trevor, one of the former Conservative members, has been again returned, Colonel Forde, who sat with him in the last Parliament and was politically in unison with him, has gone down before Mr. J. Sharman-Crawford, a tenant-right candidate, and son of Mr. W. Sharman-Crawford, once so prominent a member of the House.

For Berwickshire Mr. W. Miller, a Liberal, was returned late in last Session; but he has had a very short tenure of his seat, for he has been defeated now by Major Baillie Hamilton, who is thus added to the Conservative strength. In a parenthetic way, it may here be mentioned that Mr. Adam, the Chief Commissioner, whose seat for Clackmannanshire was threatened, has been triumphantly returned by a large majority. There has been a Liberal gain in the county of Elgin, Lord Macduff having turned out the late Conservative member, the Hon. Ogilvie Grant. A seat has been taken from the Liberal party in Derbyshire East Mr. Strutt having given way before Mr. F. Arkwright (there will be now three members of that name in the House), but Admiral Egerton, the late Liberal member, has again been returned. The county of Herts is now wholly Conservative, Mr. T. Halsey having taken the place of Mr. H. R. Brand, who represented it in the last Parliament; the other Liberal member, Mr. H. Cowper, though returned, being at the wrong end of the poll. The state of the representation is thus reversed, for, whereas there were formerly two Liberals and one Conservative (Mr. Abel Smith) as members, there are now two Conservatives and one Liberal. Colonel Tomline will be entirely lost to the House, for, having forsaken Grimsby and wooed East Suffolk as a Liberal, he has been defeated by Conservative Lord Rendlesham, who takes the place vacated by Mr. Corrance, of the same political creed. In the southern division of the West Riding of Yorkshire Liberal Mr. H. F. Beaumont, a late member, has succumbed before Conservative Mr. Starkey; and, coming nearer home, we find that in Middlesex Mr. Coope, a Conservative, has ousted Lord Enfield, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. With this for the present this chronicle of the elections closes.

At the annual meeting of the Huntingdonshire Agricultural Society the show was fixed for Sept. 9, and will be held at St. Neots. Among other gifts, the Duke of Manchester promised a silver cup, value 20 gs., for horses, and Mr. J. M. Heathcote promised a cup valued at the same amount.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Feb. 12.

Public attention has been divided this week between the speech delivered by Marshal MacMahon at his recent visit to the Tribunal de Commerce and the elections in the departments of the Pas-de-Calais and the Haute-Saône. The Marshal's oration, of which we have had an official version, bears unmistakable signs of having been composed by the Duc de Broglie, and was, we are told, essentially an electoral manoeuvre destined to influence the result of Sunday's scrutiny. "On Nov. 19," said the Duc de Magenta, in answer to President Daguin's congratulatory address, "the Assembly entrusted me with the government for seven years, and my first duty is to secure the execution of that decision. Having no uneasiness, therefore. During these seven years I shall be able to make all parties respect the present legally-established order of things. We shall, I hope, also see calm restored to the public mind and confidence revive. Confidence is not to be created by decrees, but my acts will be of a nature to command it."

All this, it was thought, would influence Sunday's elections; and, in some measure, it has done so. Neither Royalists nor Republicans are precisely pleased with the result of the scrutiny. The former jubilantly announced beforehand that the Conservative candidates were certain to triumph, and the latter were equally confident concerning the success of their own party. In the Haute-Saône M. Herisson, the well-known Radical member of the Paris Municipal Council, has defeated the Duc de Marmier, his competitor, by an overwhelming majority; but in the Pas-de-Calais—a department which, it is true, has almost invariably returned Conservative deputies—M. Brame, the Republican candidate, has been beaten by his antagonist, M. Sens. The politics of the latter are somewhat enigmatical. The Royalists claim him as a Fusionist; the Bonapartists hail him as a partisan of Napoleon IV. This only appears certain—that in his electoral address he has promised to unswervingly support the Government of Marshal MacMahon. On the whole, the Republicans have no reason to complain. Eight months ago M. Longlet, their candidate in the Pas-de-Calais, was defeated by a majority of 18,000 votes; on Sunday M. Brame only needed 2700 additional votes to be returned. The Republican cause, spite of Ministerial manoeuvres, is undoubtedly rapidly gaining ground.

The dismissal of Republican mayors continues. No less than 145 have been discharged by the Minister of the Interior and the Préfet in the department of the Gironde alone. In many instances the authoritatively-appointed functionaries decline the proffered honour; and the Republican journals register, daily, protestations from all parts of France against the arbitrary manner in which the Government is carrying the obnoxious municipal law into effect. The Royalists are becoming frightened at the large number of Bonapartists who are being appointed, and the organs of the Extreme Right admit that the deputies of their party are already beginning to regret having assisted the Government in carrying the "Loi des Maires."

On Saturday M. Buffet was re-elected to the Presidency of the National Assembly, by 348 votes against 246 given to M. Léon Say. MM. Fourcade and Rameau, the recently-dismissed Mayors of Bordeaux and Versailles, were unsuccessful candidates at the election for Vice-Presidents, M. Martel, Benoist d'Azy, De Goulard, Chabaud-Latour, being re-elected by considerable majorities. Throughout the week the Assembly has been occupied in discussing the various taxes and financial expedients proposed with the view of providing for the deficit in the Budget, but without adopting any of them. General de Ladmirault, Governor of Paris, having requested the authorisation of the Chamber for the prosecution of one of its members, M. Melvil-Bloncourt, a coloured gentleman deputy for Guadeloupe, accused of having been implicated in the Commune, a committee has been appointed to report upon this demand. M. Bloncourt appears to have escaped to London. The step taken by the Governor of Paris has caused a great sensation, such a long delay having elapsed since the perpetration of the offences complained of. At a recent meeting of the Amnesty Committee the Préfet of Police stated that the Councils of War had hitherto judged 50,000 Communists, 900 alone remaining to be disposed of. He declared that it was impossible to classify the prisoners for the purpose of an amnesty, seeing that many privates in the National Guard were more guilty than the officers; added to which in several instances insufficient sentences, considering the serious nature of the crimes committed, had been passed. It was his opinion that the Councils of War should settle the 900 remaining cases previous to any steps being taken with regard to an amnesty.

Literature has sustained a great loss in the death of M. Michelet, the eminent, though often prejudiced, historian, who died at Hyères, on Monday last, of disease of the heart, from which he had been suffering since 1870. He was seventy-six years of age. His greatest claim to the attention of posterity will undoubtedly be his History of France, remarkable alike for its brilliant, picturesque, and frequently eccentric, style, and its undisguised partiality in favour of Democratic doctrines. La République Française, to which he has been of late an occasional contributor, contained this morning an obituary notice, including a sketch of his life and an essay on his peculiar genius, six columns in length.

The Melun Assize Court has condemned Prince Soutzo, who, it will be recollected, recently shot Prince Ghika in a duel at Fontainebleau, to four years', his two seconds to three years', and the seconds of his unfortunate antagonist to two years' imprisonment.

SPAIN.

A Madrid telegram states that the scheme for establishing a national bank has been accepted by the Bank of Spain.

A decree has been issued offering 1000 reals to every soldier who has obtained his discharge and re-enters for a year.

Interchange of prisoners with the Carlists has, according to the Madrid Imparcial, been agreed to by the Government.

According to an official announcement by the Carlist General Andechagas, the bombardment of Bilbao was to begin on the 13th inst. A special telegram from St. Jean de Luz represents General Moriones to have changed his mind about raising the siege. He remains in masterly inactivity on the Ebro, and the fall of the city is now thought imminent.

Official advices received in Madrid state that the Carlists have been defeated, with heavy loss, at Pobra, in the province of Llerida. Two hundred and eighty prisoners detained by them were released by the Republican troops. The Carlist bands under Vizcarro and the brother of Cucala, numbering 1400 men, have been beaten and dispersed near Nule, in the province of Valencia. The Carlists have cut the railway bridge at Alendia, in Valencia, have burnt the railway at Almaden, and have thrown a goods-train off the line at Guadalmes.

PORTUGAL.

All the members of the Royal family were represented at the funeral of Count Leisal, on Sunday, in the German Protestant cemetery at Lisbon.

With the exceptions of a Major and two sergeants, all the military prisoners at Lisbon accused of participation in the conspiracy of July, 1872, have been acquitted. The punishment awarded to each of the three persons found guilty is two years' imprisonment.

HOLLAND

It appears that the war in Sumatra did not end with the taking of the Kraton, the Acheenese chiefs remaining hostile and erecting forts in the interior. Still, it is considered that the enemy's strength is broken. The Sultan of Acheen is dead; and an official telegram from Acheen, dated Feb. 7, states:—"The hostile chiefs have elected as Sultan Toemankoe Dased, the cousin of the Sultan before the last one, with four regents. We are constructing a fort and camp in the Kraton which will command the river. The people are not hostile to us."

The Carnival at Rome was inaugurated last Saturday, and a despatch to the Daily Telegraph says:—"Agreeable to the 'Royal Edict of Pasquino II.,' King of the Carnival, the opening act was a grand mythological spectacle—the reception by Pasquino of the visit of 'his Majesty the Emperor Saturn' and his daughter Ceres."

GERMANY.

The German Parliament was opened by Commission, on Thursday week, and Prince Bismarck read the Speech from the Throne. The Speech, after expressing the regret of the Emperor at being unable to be present, refers to the fact that representatives appear for the first time in the House from Alsace-Lorraine. It is pointed out that the principal measure to be presented to Parliament will be the Military Bill, the object of which is to clearly define the military strength of Germany. Among the other measures to be introduced are a new press law and a bill to regulate trade disputes between masters and workmen. In conclusion, reference is made to the satisfactory state of the foreign relations of Germany. At Monday's sitting of the Reichstag Herr von Forckenbeck, of the National Liberal party, was elected President; Prince Hohenlohe-Schillingfürst, of the Old Liberal party, Vice-President; and Dr. Hänel, of the party of progress, second Vice-President.

The new military estimates of Germany exceed the old Army Budget by 15,000,000 thalers.

As a response to the London Anti-Romanist meetings, a demonstration took place last Saturday at Berlin, under the presidency of Professor Gneist, the pro-Rector of the University and a member of the Reichstag. The large assembly was addressed by several speakers, and the meeting closed with enthusiastic cheers for the Emperor William.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The Emperor of Austria left Vienna for St. Petersburg on Wednesday, passed through Granica at midnight, and arrived at Warsaw next morning. After inspecting the Russian Kesholm regiment, on which occasion he wore the Russian uniform, his Majesty continued his journey to St. Petersburg. The railway station and the streets of Warsaw were decorated with flags, and the Emperor was everywhere cordially received by the people.

The committee of the Reichsrath appointed to report on the ecclesiastical laws have nominated two sub-committees, one of which will examine the Government bill on the subject, while the other will draught a new bill upon the marriage law to be introduced by some members of the Reichsrath.

In Tuesday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies the Government introduced bills for the immediate completion of three railway lines in Bohemia, and for the construction of five railway lines in other Austrian provinces.

The Reichsrath has, by a decided vote against the Government and the Ultramontanes, resolved that the Theological College at Innsbruck, which is in the hands of the Jesuits, be broken up in July next. The college is looked upon as the nursery of Jesuitism for Austria, Germany, and Switzerland.

Thirty thousand working men are out of employ in Vienna, and the number of clerks out of employ is estimated at 6000.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The King opened the Norwegian Chambers in person on Tuesday. The introductory remarks made in the Speech from the Throne were similar to those of the Speech delivered to the Swedish Chambers. The King proceeded to enumerate the measures to be presented to the Chambers, which comprise bills relative to the salaries of civil servants and the extension of the railway system, and a bill enacting the steps for modifications in the law respecting liability to military service.

Mr. Secretary Fish discredits the statement published in the Patrie to the effect that sharp notes had recently been exchanged between the Governments of France and the States.

CANADA.

It is stated in a telegram from Toronto that the Government has obtained large majorities at the elections in all the provinces, and that, out of 206 members, not fifty will belong to the Opposition. The Toronto Globe says that the Ministry of British Columbia has tried to force an alteration of the terms of the Confederation upon the people, and that the sitting of the House was broken up amid extreme excitement. The Globe adds that a demand for a dissolution has been made.

INDIA.

Last week's official telegram respecting the Bengal famine states that the rainfall on the 21st ult. extended as far as Oude, and embraced all the distressed districts. Sir R. Temple has formed an estimate of the number likely to require relief, and his aggregate is a million and a half.

Rain has fallen in all the divisions of the Bengal presidency, with beneficial effect.

A Calcutta telegram in the Times, dated Tuesday, says:—"The Allahabad officials draw a startling picture of the distress at Goruckpore. Starving children are entering the missionary orphanage. Rice is 6lb. for 1s., and the relief works are crowded. Wages are 2d. per day. In North Moorshedabad the labourers exist on one meal daily. The rain has relieved Rajshyee. A relief committee has been formed in the Hooghly districts. The first subscription at Calcutta reaches £17,000. At Behar prices are double the average. 100,000 labourers are employed on the works, besides the railway and canal. People are alarmed and suffer great privation. Occasionally women and children are employed on the roads. The rules regulating advances are further relaxed. Grants have been made for works to the extent of £261,800. Sir R. Temple is improving the Tirhoot transport. The exports since October are 150,000 tons. The Government imports 50,000 tons. The railway is carrying 1500 tons daily."

A Daily News telegram from Bankipore says:—"The condition of Northern Tirhoot and Chumpan is growing worse. Distress is intensifying, and becoming actual famine. Several deaths have occurred from starvation. Hundreds of high-caste women are to be seen labouring on the Government relief works with common coolies. The Government depôts are already selling in three sub-divisions of Tirhoot, and the Government supplies are pouring in for distribution. The official organisation is splendidly active."

The Bombay mail of Jan. 19 has arrived. The news it brings respecting the famine has been anticipated by the telegrams. The Madras papers announce the death, at the age of seventy-two, of Azim Jah, the Prince of Arcot.

At Valparaiso they have had an earthquake and a great fire, the latter supposed to have been the work of an incendiary.

The only other item of interest is the announcement made by the Attorney-General of the Transvaal State that he had seen twenty-three gold nuggets, weighing together 13½ lb., which had been found in one day.

A Cairo telegram, dated Tuesday, says:—"The army of the people of Darfur, numbering 10,000 men with three guns, which had been sent to assist the bands on the river Gazale, has been completely beaten by a body of Egyptian troops. The chief of the Darfur army was killed, and his flags and three cannons captured. The Egyptian force advanced into Darfur, pursuing and dispersing the negroes everywhere."

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

In summarising the Australian evidence, yesterday week, the Lord Chief Justice excluded from consideration the story of the cheque drawn by Roger Tichborne at Melbourne, which was stated by the defence to have come into the possession of Mr. Hopkins. His Lordship's reasons for discrediting it were the impossibility of Mr. Hopkins concealing such a proof of Roger's existence from his relatives, and the fact that no one else had seen the alleged cheque. In introducing Arthur Orton upon the scene, his Lordship objected to Dr. Kenealy's description of him as a "low, coarse brute." There was nothing, he said, in Orton's letters to warrant the assertion. In analysing the defendant's own account of himself in Australia, it was shown that his defence turned on the ten months of an interval in his movements which he had not accounted for. Mrs. M'Allister's evidence was commended to the special attention of the jury, as leading to the conclusion that Arthur Orton and the defendant were identical. The Lord Chief Justice then tested the principal incidents in the defendant's later life at Wagga-Wagga and elsewhere. He asked the jury if it was likely Roger Tichborne would have taken to butchering, or horse-breaking, or such like colonial occupations. He concluded with an estimate of Mr. Cubitt's evidence as to his first acquaintance with the defendant, and the circumstances under which he disclosed his claim to the Hampshire baronetcy.

On Monday his Lordship entered into an examination of the statements made by the defendant to Mr. Gibbs and others in Australia, at the period when he first set up his claim to the Tichborne estates. He analysed the whole of the defendant's original communications to Gibbs at Wagga-Wagga, the correspondence with Lady Tichborne, and the various accounts first given by the defendant of his early life. His Lordship traced out the possibilities of the defendant having obtained family information from his companion Slate, a Hampshire man, and from the biographical articles in the Illustrated London News. It was strongly impressed on the jury that Roger Tichborne could not have known any of the names inserted by the defendant in the Wagga-Wagga will as his executors. In support of the supposition that the idea of claiming the Tichborne estates had not been long entertained before it was put in execution, his Lordship instanced the defendant's marriage at a Wesleyan chapel, and a number of the entries in the pocket-book picked up in Wagga-Wagga. In commenting on Dr. Kenealy's attempt to reconcile these discrepancies his Lordship said it amounted to asking the jury to believe there had been an interchange of minds between Orton and the Defendant. His Lordship afterwards alluded to the defendant's statements with respect to the regiment in which he served in the Army and the position which he held in it.

Proceeding, on Tuesday, with his analysis of the Australian evidence, the Lord Chief Justice dissected the statutory declaration made by the defendant in Sydney, remarking upon the names of ships and persons and dates appearing in it that could not possibly have been known to Roger Tichborne. The attention of the jury was next directed to the defendant's mistake in comparing Lady Tichborne with Mrs. Butts, of the Metropolitan Hotel—a tall, burly woman. On the alleged recognition of Bogle by the defendant his Lordship was more lenient than Mr. Hawkins had been. He gave Bogle credit for bonâ fides, but instanced many cases in which his evidence was unreliable. Having traced the defendant to Ford's Hotel, Manchester-square, his Lordship commented on the urgency of the motive which could take a man out of a comfortable room on a Christmas night, and, after landing from a long sea voyage, to make an expedition to Wapping. His Lordship intimated that little importance was to be attached to the theories by which the defendant's counsel attempted to explain away such proceedings as the visit to the Globe public-house and the inquiries made about the Ortons. The defendant himself, he said, had never been asked what was the actual fact.

The summing up on Wednesday extended from the defendant's arrival in England to his first meeting with Lady Tichborne. The Lord Chief Justice remarked on the imprudence of the visit paid by Mr. Gosford and Mr. Cullington to Gravesend, and the impropriety of their conduct in forcing themselves on the defendant. Mr. Gosford's account of their first interview was minutely compared with allusions to the same incident in the defendant's cross-examination. Stress was laid on the strange action of Lady Tichborne in seeking the advice of her solicitor, Mr. Bowker, and then dismissing him at the critical moment when his opinion was most urgently required. In qualification of Dr. Kenealy's argument about the maternal instinct, the Lord Chief Justice pointed out how little Lady Tichborne had seen of her son, and how she failed to detect obvious discrepancies in the defendant's account of himself. The brown mark and the card case at Brighton, which he had offered as proofs of identity, his Lordship did not undertake to pronounce upon, though he suggested a "hypothetical solution." He expressed his strong disapproval of the charges of conspiracy made by Dr. Kenealy against the Tichborne family and their friends.

On Thursday his Lordship referred to the interview between Mr. Danby Seymour, William Burdon, and the Claimant at the Swan, at Alresford, and afterwards at Mr. Hopkins's. The interview at Croydon between the defendant, Sir P. Radcliffe, Mrs. Towneley, and Miss Nangles was next commented on, when he addressed Mrs. Towneley as his cousin Kate; and afterwards, on Lady Radcliffe coming into the room, calling her Mrs. Towneley. The next subject that came under consideration was the second interview with the defendant at Croydon. His Lordship was occupied a great part of the day in reading the defendant's correspondence, principally with Lady Tichborne, and pointing out the errors in spelling and grammar and the ignorance displayed on many subjects with which Roger Tichborne must have been well acquainted. Referring to the initiation of the Chancery suit, and the defendant's examination before Mr. Roupell, his Lordship suggested that the information which he then undoubtedly possessed, assuming he was not Roger Tichborne, might have been obtained from Lady Tichborne, Baigent, Miss Braine, Bogle, Carter, and M'Cann, observing as to the last three that it was most improper and irregular on his part, knowing they would be called as witnesses, to take them into his employ.

A case of breach of promise—"Maclean v. Knight"—was before Lord Coleridge and a special jury, last Saturday, in the Court of Common Pleas. Mr. Hawkins, Q.C., who appeared for the plaintiff, said that a consultation between himself and Serjeant Parry, who represented the defendant, had resulted in an arrangement that a verdict for the plaintiff should be taken by consent for £2000. The learned counsel stated that a good many private matters were involved in the case. A verdict for the above amount was accordingly returned.

An action for slander, arising out of some differences in connection with pigeon-shooting, was tried in the Court of Queen's Bench on Saturday; and the plaintiff, son of a general officer, obtained a verdict, with damages of £50, against his traducer, by whom he had been called a cheat and a blackguard.

In the Court of Queen's Bench Mr. Justice Blackburn has been engaged with a special jury in trying an action for libel brought against the Times newspaper. The libel complained of was contained in a letter written to the Times from Paris in January, 1873, by a correspondent of that paper, and headed "Sham Correspondents," which stated, in substance, that a "Monsieur Polhes," who was said to have abstracted some papers from M. Thiers's house during the Commune, had been passing himself off as a correspondent of the Times. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff—damages, £50.

For participation in a violent robbery from the person of Joseph Bush, a young ruffian named John Brown was, on Monday, sentenced at the Middlesex Sessions to seven years' penal servitude and another term of seven years' police supervision. The prosecutor's wife, who had behaved with great courage in seizing and holding the prisoner, though she was set upon and cruelly beaten by a number of her own sex, received from the Court a reward of £1, accompanied by high commendation. Robert Aikman was, on Tuesday, sentenced to seven years' penal servitude and seven years' supervision by the police. The prisoner had visited the clubs and some of the first-class hotels of the metropolis, and, whilst the waiters were inquiring after some name he had given, he appropriated greatcoats, wrappers, and other articles. The business for the day generally terminated by his entering an hotel, where he managed to slip from the cabman, and cheat him of his fare.

Templeman, the attorney, and Giraud, the Frenchman, charged with defrauding Messrs. Roberts, Lubbock, and Co., by passing a forged cheque for £1242, have been convicted at the Central Criminal Court, and sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude.

"Something called coffee," which had been seized on the premises of Mr. Syers, in Lime-street, was on Tuesday condemned at Guildhall, in spite of the owner's representation, first, that he had himself drank a decoction of it, and, secondly, that it was sold to go abroad.

Mr. Arthur Foster, clerk in a Government office, was again brought before Mr. Knox at Marlborough-street, yesterday week, charged with violently assaulting Mr. Denyer, an hotel-keeper in Dover-street, and was committed for trial.

William Cole, in the employ of the Civil Service Co-operative Stores, Haymarket, was finally examined at Marlborough-street, on Saturday, charged with robbing his employers, and was committed for six months, with hard labour.

A REVIEW AT ST. PETERSBURG.

Our Special Artist, who was at St. Petersburg to attend the ceremonies and festivities at the Duke of Edinburgh's marriage to the Grand Duchess Marie, has furnished a sketch of the review or parade of Russian troops in front of the Winter Palace, on the 26th ult. The Emperor of Russia, the Czar-witch, the Prince of Wales and Prince Arthur, the Crown Prince of Prussia and Germany, and the Crown Prince of Denmark were spectators of this grand military show. They sat on horseback while the troops marched past and saluted his Imperial Majesty. There were 23,000 infantry and 8000 cavalry, nearly all of the Imperial Guard, and some artillery besides. Another day was occupied with a hunting party at Gatchina: Prince Arthur went there, but not the Prince of Wales.

ROYAL MARRIAGE FESTIVITIES AT ST. PETERSBURG: REVIEW BEFORE THE EMPEROR, THE PRINCE OF WALES, AND THE CROWN PRINCE OF PRUSSIA.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

THE RIGHT HON. BENJAMIN DISRAELI.

MR. DISRAELI.

The result of the general Parliamentary elections in the last two weeks is to place Mr. Disraeli in power, and we therefore present our readers with a portrait of that distinguished statesman. He is sixty-eight years of age, four years older than Mr. Gladstone. Benjamin Disraeli was born in London, it is said in Bloomsbury-square, Dec. 21, 1805. His father was Mr. Isaac D'Israeli (that was the way he wrote his name), a learned antiquarian scholar, author of "The Curiosities of Literature" and the "Calamities and Quarrels of Authors." Mr. Isaac D'Israeli had inherited a moderate fortune from his father, who was a London merchant in the Mediterranean trade. The great-grandfather had come to London from Venice; but the family, which was Jewish, had been driven to Italy from Spain, in the fifteenth century, by a religious persecution. They had thence assumed the name of Israeli. Mr. Isaac D'Israeli did not adhere to the Jewish religion, but he dissented from the Church of England, and his son Benjamin was therefore educated at a small private school kept by the late Rev. E. Cogan, Unitarian minister, of Walthamstow. The mother of Benjamin Disraeli was a lady whose maiden name was Basevi, sister to the architect of the Pavilion at Brighton. His father possessed the estate and mansion of Bradenham Manor, near High Wycombe, and might have associated on equal terms with the landed gentry, but for his peculiarities of foreign race and creed, and his secluded life as a student. When Mr. Benjamin Disraeli left school, instead of going to one of the Universities, which were then more under Church direction than they now are, he was placed in an attorney's office to learn some details of business. This sort of work proved uncongenial, and he left it to his younger brother, Mr. Ralph Disraeli, who afterwards became a Registrar in the Court of Chancery.

The future Prime Minister chose a career of literary and romantic enterprise. Like Byron, he roved about in Albania and the Levant; like Shelley, he wrote a "Revolutionary Epic." He also wrote "Vivian Grey," the ideal of a bold and clever youngster aspiring to win the prizes of social and political distinction by self-asserting force. This was so early as 1827. In the saloons of Lady Blessington, and other leaders of the fashionable world on the ultra-Liberal side, he made a conspicuous figure, even at a juvenile age, while Mr. Gladstone, in his college at Oxford, was imbibing the doctrines of orthodoxy and austere Toryism. In like manner, when Mr. Gladstone obtained a seat in the House of Commons for Newark, by the patronage of the ultra-Tory Duke of Newcastle, as an opponent of the Reform Bill, Mr. Disraeli, one of the wildest of "Dandy Radicals," sought an entrance to Parliamentary life by an introduction from Joseph Hume. Both these right honourable gentlemen have since found good cause to alter their opinions, and it would be unjust to impugn the sincerity of either at any period of his life.

It was not till 1837 that Mr. Disraeli succeeded in getting a seat in the House, as one of the members for Maidstone. His colleague was the late Mr. Wyndham Lewis, of Pautgwynlais Castle, Glamorganshire; and in 1839, after the death of that gentleman, Mr. Disraeli married his widow. To that lady, who in 1868 was created Viscountess Beaconsfield, he has gratefully and chivalrously acknowledged that he owes no small part of his opportunity of success. He was soon alienated from the Radical Reform party, and connected himself with what was then called the "Young England" school. Their ideas of the true agencies of social and political regeneration might be expressed by the three titles of Monarchy, Aristocracy, and Anglican High Church. Mr. Disraeli, in 1841, exchanged Maidstone for Shrewsbury. The opposition of some representatives of the landed interest to Sir Robert Peel's free-trade measures, and, finally, to his repeal of the corn laws, in 1846, gave occasion to Mr. Disraeli for taking a forward place in debate, on the side of this malcontent section of the Tory party, the "Protectionists." He was now elected for Buckinghamshire, and, with the political importance of his rank of a county member, he became, after Lord George Bentinck's death, with the isolation of Sir Robert Peel, the leader of the Conservatives in the Lower House. In this position he was always supported by the chief of that party, the late Earl of Derby; and he appears to possess the confidence of the present Lord Derby as well. It need scarcely be stated that Mr. Disraeli was Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Derby Ministry of 1852, and in that of 1853, and again from July, 1865, to February, 1868, when he became First Lord of the Treasury. His Ministry was overthrown by the general election of November, 1868, upon Mr. Gladstone's proposal to disestablish the Protestant Church in Ireland. The most remarkable act of Mr. Disraeli's Government was the Parliamentary Reform Act of 1867, extending the suffrage to all householders in boroughs and cities. This was denounced not only by the Tories, but by Mr. Lowe and other Liberals, as an excessively democratic measure; but it now seems to have proved favourable to the Conservative party. In some respects Mr. Disraeli has been consistently Liberal from the first, as in advocating the removal of political disabilities imposed on account of religious belief. This was no more than was to have been expected of the descendant of Jewish victims of persecution.

His genius and style, both as a speaker and writer, have been very frequently made the subject of critical comment. In the orations likely to have been prepared beforehand his rhetoric is too artificial, and borrowed ornaments have too often been detected; but in current debate, in the rapid encounter of wits, and especially in the vein of banter, he is certainly the best speaker we have had in the House of Commons since the late Lord Derby was removed to the House of Lords. An inestimable merit of Mr. Disraeli is that command of temper, with that unflinching courtesy of his personal demeanour, which have sometimes disarmed his most bitter opponents. Whatever he may be as a politician, he is eminently a gentleman in bearing and in feeling. He has consummate social tact, and vast knowledge of the world. His fame as an author would probably not have been very considerable, but for the notoriety of his public position. A series of novels and romances, the last of which was "Lothair," have displayed highly coloured and exaggerated pictures of social life and incredible conceptions of character, mixed with rather indiscreet caricature or mimicry of real persons in our time. Fancy and wit Mr. Disraeli has in abundance, but little genuine humour, and none of the highest qualities of imagination. These literary pastimes, however, do not constitute his principal claim to the regard of his countrymen. The titles of some of his books may be enumerated:—"Vivian Grey," "The Revolutionary Epic," "The Rise of Iskander," "Ixion in Heaven," "Popanilla," "The Young Duke," "Henrietta Temple," "Contarini Fleming," "Alroy," "Coningsby, or the New Generation," "Sybil, or the Two Nations," "Tancred, or the New Crusade," "Lord George Bentinck, a Political Biography," and, finally, "Lothair." They were found amusing at the time when they were written.

Mr. Disraeli is a widower; the death of Lady Beaconsfield occurred not long ago. He has no children, and his only brother is deceased. His country house and estate are at Hughenden Manor, High Wycombe; he has lately taken a new town house, No. 2, Whitehall-gardens.

The Portrait of Mr. Disraeli is from a photograph by Messrs. W. and D. Downey, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and of Ebury-street, Eaton-square.

DUDLEY GALLERY EXHIBITION.

The spring exhibitions of water-colour drawings at this gallery diminish in interest as the number of their contents augment—as augment they do largely, if our memory serves us. Of works of artistic significance or importance there are certainly this year fewer than on any former occasion. Fewer artists of established reputation are among the contributors, and we almost entirely miss one element of special interest in former gatherings—i.e., studies for pictures and sketches pour servir made by oil painters of distinction. Nor among the many younger or little-known aspirants in water colours do we recognise, with some few exceptions, either an aim in art above or beside the familiar or commonplace in subject, or a strenuous effort at excellence in treatment. Some recent tendencies of our younger artists towards the mystico-mediæval or romantic-classic were heretofore illustrated more fully at the Dudley Gallery than elsewhere; but they have now almost entirely disappeared from its walls. Such tendencies had not unfrequently an affected or morbid character, which could not be accepted by healthy tastes; still they gave evidence of artistic energies which might mature into something purer and better, as well as original. Youth is the season of ambition, and it is an ill omen for the future of water-colour painting among us to find so little that is tentative from the many young artists who exhibit here. It might be otherwise if we had anything like a definite school either of water colours or oil in this country—if we had a number of capable, properly-trained pupils following acknowledged masters in developing well-ascertained principles of art. But it is not so. The leadership of the master and the intimate concurrence of the followers in a given direction, as practised in all the successful historic schools of painting, is virtually unknown among us. A few artists strike out fresh by-paths for themselves and they have their little followings, but they do not work in concert; the results, therefore, do not clear the way to further progress. The Dudley Gallery may be useful as a nursery for the old-established societies, and there are, no doubt, many evidences of capacity and promise in the present display; but the facilities it affords for disposing of productions in the slight material of water colours, which are little better than a superior kind of paperhanging, may, we think, be prejudicial to the career of many young artists.

With so few works of salient importance, our notice might be a short one; we shall, however, endeavour to include, if only by merely mentioning them, a proportion of the productions which, as we have said, evince capacity and promise. Among the most pleasing items in the collection are the small portraits by Mr. J. C. Moore, who in a quiet, unobtrusive key of colouring, and with refinement of treatment generally, very happily realises the sweet ingenuous expression of childhood. "Blanche Egerton" (224), a bright-eyed little lady in white, under a Japanese parasol, is especially felicitous; and little if at all inferior are the portraits of Master Richard Cavendish (348), and little Isabella Roget (333). A portrait-group in the same genre, by Mr. Poynter, of Mr. F. Hugh Bell, seated with his little daughter posed between his knees (84), seems to us scarcely worthy of the artist's reputation. Father and daughter are a little too self-conscious, and the draughtsmanship is rather questionable; the male hands have a degree of anatomical detail seldom seen except as a consequence of long manual labour. "Summer Noon" (304), a scene in a garden pleasaunce, and some landscape "bits" testify to the artist's versatile but very unequal power. A child-portrait group (177) by W. B. Morris, carefully drawn and modelled, but slightly wanting in ease and grace, may be mentioned in the same category with the portraits of Messrs. Moore and Poynter. Among fancy single-figure studies we have that of a girl in white dress and black mittens, standing on a terrace (205), by Mr. G. D. Leslie, which, though it has the artist's customary sweetness of feeling, is even more than usually insufficient, technically considered. "A Young Greek Woman" (235), by Miss Edith Martineau—well drawn and elevated in style and character; "Adeline" (12), by Mr. W. Gale; "Rubinella" (34), by C. Bellay; "Violin Player" (393), by W. J. Knewstubb; "Baby Bunting" (192), by Miss Juliana Russell; a head by Miss Helen Thornycroft; "Under a Cloud" (105); a child mourning over a dead goldfinch, by E. Bale; No. 231, representing, in the manner of Mr. Leslie, a country girl returning from church, by Mr. A. C. H. Lummoore; and contributions by J. Burr, H. Patterson, and S. Lucas are other single-figure studies of merit.

The more elaborate figure-subjects are not numerous, and few of them need detain us. One of the best is Mr. Heywood Hardy's "Field Labour in Upper Egypt" (60), in which we see a fellow standing on logs that serve as a rude harrow, and that are dragged along by a camel. This drawing is thoroughly studied and complete, like all this young artist's works. Still better in its way is Mr. Buckman's decorative treatment of "Football" (269)—after the manner in which he rendered some London street cries in the last Academy exhibition. The tussle of the group of athletic young fellows who struggle over the ball is capably expressed, with excellent figure draughtsmanship, and the whole composition is perfectly subordinated to the requirements of flat, mural decoration. Mr. Buckman has struck out a path that is much neglected, if not new, in our school, and he is already eminently successful. A word of praise is due to Miss Constance Phillott's graceful Peona returning through "the gloomy wood in wonderment" (144), from Keats's "Endymion." Very spirited and characteristic is Miss Elizabeth Thompson's drawing (151) of a Prussian escort conveying a number of French Zouave prisoners of the war of 1870 in a ferry-boat.

Messrs. Brewtall, Parker, T. Green, and J. Macbeth have adopted more or less the technical method of Mr. F. Walker in their respective drawings "Called before the Curtain" (128)—a fair young actress bowing her acknowledgment at the footlights; "The Gentle Craft" (41)—boys fishing from a rustic bridge; "The End of the Journey" (373)—a young couple of the last century just alighted from the "Bath" coach; and "The Vale of Health, Hampstead" (393)—an invalid old lady in a donkey-chaise, attended by two daughters or granddaughters. In these drawings there is much delicacy in details, but the workmanship is giggling and miniature-like. The same cramping, imitative influence was probably not unfelt in the otherwise charming drawing (293) of children in a flowery dell, by Mr. A. Goodwin; and Mr. O. Rossiter's "Sea Stones" (292)—children on the sea shore. Other drawings of some mark, though in a rather small style of execution, are Mr. H. Goodwin's "Dining Out" (241), a labourer sitting in a picturesque valley with a begging dog before him, and Mr. C. Earle's "Common Objects at the Sea-Side" (136)—i.e., an assemblage of saddle-donkeys with their drivers. In a broader, more robust manner, are Mr. J. Knight's "Going to Mass" (215) and Mr. J. J. Richardson's "The Gillie's Pipe" (341)— a sporting moor scene, which is very good of its kind. We would specially commend to notice two extremely dextrous studies à la Fortuny, by M. Leloir, called "Pretty Cockatoo!" (519) and "A Moorish Lady" (550); together with the spiritual and delicately-handled "Skirmish" (534), by Mr. Dstaille; and the painful little picture by Mr. F. G. Cotman, called "Worn Out" (602), which is very subtly characteristic in the modelling of the aged face. While desiring to pay all respect to Mr. W. Crane's aim, in his allegory of "Winter and Spring" (262), we cannot reconcile ourselves to its heavy, opaque colouring. With mention of respectable contributions by Messrs. C. Napier, Hemy, R. Thorne Waite, and F. J. Skill, we pass to the landscapes, &c.

In this department, largely as it is represented, we find even less to repay examination; and we must content ourselves with little more than bare enumeration of some productions which rise above the average standard. The mass of the contributions of this class are mere studies or sketches—very careful and truthful in many cases, but wanting in the character and completeness of "pictures" rightly understood, and wanting such artistic treatment as should confer upon them distinctive and individual art-value. One of the few drawings aiming at sentiment in landscape is Kate Malleson Goodwin's "Autumn Twilight: St. Catherine's Hill, near Guildford" (48); which is impressive though not happy in composition. Mr. T. J. Watson's view of Hexham (52), relieved against the sky after sundown, has an air of greater truth, yet just misses the vague impressiveness of the former. "The Mill Rest" (349), by Mr. E. H. Fahey, another twilight subject, shows a young painter working always in the same groove, and with the same set palette of not particularly agreeable or artistic colour. Mr. J. Bannatyne's "Twilight on the Ayrshire Coast" (40), and other contributions of this artist, are truthful and neat in workmanship, yet prosaic. More powerful in effect and execution is Mr. H. Macallum's "Return of the Bear Fleet" (96), a Scotch seacoast scene at early morning. The same artist sends a view of "Florence from the Hôtel d'Arno" (202), which has merit. Mr. A. Severn is represented by a view of Florence from almost the same point (314), but a more striking effect of sunlight is sought to be rendered. Unfortunately, however, Mr. Severn does not quite realise technically his fine feeling for effect, either here or in the "Early Morning on Coniston Lake" (115). "The High Tor, Matlock" (58), by Mr. A. B. Donaldson, is bold and effective, but the colour is forced. Mr. A. W. Weedon proves himself a keen and close student of nature in "Ben Slioch from Kinlochawe" (256); and "The Slighagan River, Isle of Skye" (154), by Mr. S. Vincent, reveals a vigorous, disciplined hand. The last remark applies to Mr. J. Macculloch's "Ben Venue from Loch Aray" (277). Good manly work will likewise be found in Mr. C. Richardson's "After Sundown, Westmorland" (285) and "Midday" (403), and in the contributions of Mr. H. Moore. Similar merits, or other acceptable qualities, such as workman-like facility, delicacy of treatment, a sense of atmospheric influences—or at least, some recognition of picturesque requirements—are noticeable in Mr. T. Lloyd's "Showery" (185); Mr. A. C. Stannus's "Arran from the Ayrshire Coast" (246); "San Servolo—After Sunset" (260), by Mr. F. C. Nightingale; "Near Gravesend—Sunrise" (393), by Mr. C. E. Holloway; "Washing on the Banks of a Stream" (37), by Mr. L. Smythe; and in the contributions of Messrs. F. Walton, E. A. Waterlow, F. Dadd, A. Parsons, J. J. Curnock, A. F. Grace, Walter Field, F. Talfourd, H. Pilleau, C. J. Lewis, G. S. Walters, H. Hine, G. F. Glennie, A. Croft, and J. O. Long.

Drawings of considerable merit in which animals are of prominent interest are exhibited by Messrs. J. W. Bottomley and F. Williamson. Among architectural subjects we have to commend a Cairene interior by Mr. F. Dillon, "House of the Sheikh El Madi" (222), and the works of Messrs. T. R. Macquoid, H. M. Marshall, W. P. Burton, and R. P. Spiers. Some of the best still-life pieces are the flowers of Misses Helen C. Coleman and Isabella Green.

The portrait of Mr. Edward Baines, recently presented to the Corporation of Leeds, was painted by Mr. Richard Waller.

Mr. T. Brassey, M.P., has contributed £1000 towards a fund being raised for the purpose of enlarging Hastings Infirmary.

At Cambridge University the Smith prizes have been adjudged as follow:—First prize, Walker William Rouse Ball, B.A., Second Wrangler; second prize, George Stuart, B.A., Emmanuel, who was bracketed as Fifth Wrangler. The Rev. George Martin Straffen, M.A., of Christ's College, has been elected Hulsean Lecturer for 1874. The Hulsean prize has been adjudged to W. Cunningham, Trinity College.

A preliminary meeting, convened with a view to the raising of a fund in the city of London and throughout the country for the relief of the sufferers by famine in Bengal, was held, on Tuesday, at the Mansion House—the Lord Mayor presiding. A resolution was passed authorising a public subscription, and a committee appointed to carry out the object, the Lord Mayor being the chairman of the committee. The subscriptions received amounted to £1000, and the meeting was adjourned till Monday next. At a meeting of the Court of Common Council held at Guildhall, on Thursday, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, it was resolved unanimously to vote £1000 towards the fund.

During the week ending last Saturday 2318 births and 1411 deaths were registered in London, the former being 243 and the latter 323 below the average. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the seven preceding weeks had decreased from 1112 to 464, rose again last week to 512, which were, however, 102 below the average; 248 resulted from bronchitis, 150 from phthisis, and 71 from pneumonia. There was one death from smallpox, 48 from measles, 13 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 53 from whooping-cough, 20 from different forms of fever, and 8 from diarrhoea. The fatal cases of measles again showed an excess, whereas those of each of the six other zymotic diseases were considerably below the average. Of the 20 deaths referred to fever, 1 was certified as typhus, 16 as enteric or typhoid, and 3 as simple continued fever.

At a meeting of volunteer commanding officers, held on Saturday, at the rooms of the National Rifle Association, Pall-mall—the Marquis of Westminster in the chair—it was decided to be desirable to have a field-day on Easter Monday, as in former years. A committee was appointed to make the necessary arrangements, subject to the sanction of the War Office.—The ceremony of presenting the prizes to the Queen's Rifle Volunteers took place on Saturday evening in Westminster Hall. The Marquis of Westminster, Colonel of the regiment, presided; and the prizes, the aggregate value of which was £1000, were presented by the Marchioness, in the presence of a distinguished company and a large number of spectators. An adjournment was made to Willis's Rooms, where the annual regimental supper took place. The chair was taken by the Marquis, the Marchioness being on her husband's left. Sir Samuel Baker and Colonel M'Murdo were guests.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

If the entries for the spring handicaps were, numerically, not particularly satisfactory, no complaint can be made of the manner in which the handicappers have acquitted themselves in the difficult task of adjusting the weights. This is particularly noticeable in the Grand National Steeplechase, the City and Suburban, and the Chester Cup, in the first of which only 24 owners have declared forfeit out of 93; in the second, 36 out of 114; and in the last, 22 out of 79.

Taking the steeplechase first, we remark that Disturbance properly heads the list with the steady weight of 12 st. 9 lb. No horse has ever won the Grand National with any weight over 12 st.; and, good animal as Disturbance is, he is hardly likely to succeed where The Lamb and L'Africaine both failed. He, however, ought to beat most of the heavy weights, though we doubt his ability to concede 13 lb. to his stable companion, Furley, who, if piloted by Mr. Richardson, will very nearly carry off a second National for the powerful stable with which that gentleman is identified. Defence, we think, has a false reputation, and has been hardly treated; but Eurotas has fairly earned his weight; and, if he were not a novice over the Liverpool country, would look very like the winner at 11 st. 8 lb. Lower down we notice Casse Tête (11 st.), Footman (11 st.), St. Aubyn (10 st. 12 lb.), and Fantôme (10 st. 10 lb.); all exceptionally well treated—on paper. Footman, however, had such a severe fall in last year's chase that his courage may be somewhat impaired. If he comes to the post sound in wind, limbs, and nerves, there is no horse in the handicap which can beat him at the weights. This is a great "if," however, after such an accident. Of St. Aubyn we have formed a very high opinion. No horse ever learned his business so quickly, considering that he had no natural aptitude for jumping, and was at first regarded as an almost hopeless pupil. He has very fair speed and excellent stamina, and, with luck, is sure to develop into a first-class steeplechaser. Over the Liverpool country he is, however, like Eurotas, a novice, and at present is hardly likely to beat Casse Tête, who is a much better animal than his Croydon opponent Silvermere, and has already once found her way to the winning-post. When this mare was defeated last year it was through no fault of her own, as her bridle broke at the second fence, and of course it was useless to persevere with her further. Of Mr. Yates's powerful team, which includes Harvester, Cramoisie, Palmerston, and Clifton, it is not easy to guess which will prove the best, as all the four are so favourably handicapped. Harvester, who was a competitor when Casse Tête won in 1872, is, we believe, somewhat unsound; and the others, like Eurotas and St. Aubyn, are strangers to Liverpool; so, as the Aintree track is quite unlike any other steeplechase course in England, the champion of the stable may, after all, not prove a very dangerous opponent. Among the lightly-weighted horses, we think best of the chances of Columbine (10 st. 6 lb.) and Master Mowbray (10 st. 5 lb.), who ran third and fourth last year. On the whole, however, unless there is some unknown Salamander in the background, the heavily-weighted horses seem to have the best of the handicap.

For the first time in its history the City and Suburban will have to play second fiddle to the Lincolnshire Handicap, for a large number of horses are engaged in both races; and, as the handsome sum of £1000 is added to the earlier handicap, owners will naturally be induced to give it a preference. At the same time, as we said before, the weights for the Epsom race are admirably adjusted, and, where so many horses seem to have a chance of victory, we may be pretty certain of an interesting contest.

As usual, the numerically strongest lot is that of Alec Taylor, who has complimented the Admiral by accepting with no less than eight horses. As we are not a "racing prophet" we must decline to turn our brains thus early in the year by trying to discover "Taylor's best." Suffice it to say, that this trainer annually presents us with a very "hot favourite"—as the phrase is—for the City and Suburban, but never wins the race. But for this we should think that Royal George, with only 7 st. on his back, had a very taking appearance. The two Goats between them are represented by nine horses; and, seeing that Walnut is handicapped at 7 st. 12 lb., Fontarabian at 7 st. 9 lb., Lemnos (possibly the best horse of his year) at 7 st. 4 lb., and Hesselden at 6 st. 10 lb., they cannot complain of the manner in which they have been treated. Walnut will probably be the public favourite, but our choice would be Fontarabian, who last year at Brighton, over the six-furlong course, gave Trombone 9 lb. and beat him pretty easily. Now Trombone, at any distance under a mile, is very smart indeed, so that, in handicapping his conqueror at 7 st. 9 lb., it is possible that the Admiral has somewhat underrated his merits. Jennings has a team of four, and might win the race with Eole II. (six years, 8 st. 5 lb.), who, however, has hitherto shown to advantage only over a distance of ground. Cremorne, who made such a gallant fight last year with 9 st. 2 lb., is, we fear, now hors de combat; and Wenlock, with a heavier weight, will hardly prove an efficient substitute, especially as he has been in retirement ever since he won the Leger in 1872. Of Matthew Dawson's lot Andred (8 st. 6 lb.) will, no doubt, prove the best. He will run, however, at Lincoln, so that we shall know beforehand what sort of qualification he has for Epsom honours. Without wading through the other entries seriatim, we may conclude our remarks on the City and Suburban by observing that Pacha and Bull's Eye are fairly weighted at 7 st. 4 lb., and the Infanta colt and Lucy Sutton at 7 st. 2 lb.; that Spectator and fair Agnes will probably prove the best of the three-year-olds; that Little Agnes, as she has been let off with the ridiculous impost of 7 st., is no doubt known to be radically unsound; and last, but not least, that Mr. Hodgman's champion, in spite of his change of diocese—we mean training quarters—will still steadily decline preferment, and remain a life a "Perpetual Curate."

Admiral Rous has addressed a long letter to the Times on "Turf Prospects." We entirely agree with him in thinking that the outcry against two-year-old racing is raised by people who have no practical acquaintance with the subject. The excellence of the modern thoroughbred depends entirely—as the Admiral puts it—upon his "early education," and that the moderate racing of juveniles is not harmful is proved by the fact that the Derby winner is almost always a horse who has carried off one or more of the prizes of the previous season. We are not, however, quite sure that the Jockey Club did right in allowing the youngsters to commence their career so early as March 22. The 1st of May was generally accepted as a fair compromise, and the Admiral's strong language in defence of the return to the earlier date amuses but does not convince us. He objects, very properly, to the interference of Parliament in the affairs of the turf; but if it is once understood that the interested opinions of owners and clerks of courses are to have paramount sway in the councils of the club, he and his friends may unwittingly necessitate the very legislation they wish to avoid.

The University crews are hard at work training for the great race of the 28th proximo, and at Cambridge especially they are particularly forward.

MAKING VALENTINES.

The saint's day that is sacred to honest sweetheating happens to fall on this present Saturday. For this reason our publication may well include some illustrations of the processes by which those pretty missive gifts and letters are made, commonly sent upon this occasion to and from the young people who love each other in a pleasant and innocent way. We are much gratified to learn that this delightful trade, as well as that in Christmas and New Year's Day tokens of a like kind, has latterly increased among us. It helps to keep up good humour in the family. It prompts the children to remember absent friends, and proves to them how friends and kindred may use the post-office to remind one another of their mutual claims to affection. Good taste may be early formed in the choice of such ornamental devices as present a harmony of forms and colours; and this point should be attended to in the nursery at a very tender age. An infant of three years should have no ugly playthings. The love of the beautiful and graceful, as well as the practice of courtesy—and even of due gallantry between the smallest boys and girls—may be encouraged by their interchange of valentines. We do not want to say more. It is a subject not beneath the regard of the social legislator who cares for manners and minor morals.

Without further preamble, we shall now give the reader some information lately gathered concerning this branch of fancy manufacture, as carried on by Mr. Eugene Rimmel, of the Strand. That eminent perfumer, it is well known, fabricates, sells, and exports an immense variety of such dainty wares, catering not only for the pleasures of scent, but also for those of the eye. He is constantly inventing new combinations of decorative materials, and fresh devices for their most agreeable and significant presentation. One material, indeed, which seems an essential part of the great majority of St. Valentine's Day gifts, is supplied to Mr. Rimmel's hand by the fancy stationer. We have therefore visited also the establishment of Mr. George Meek, in Crane-court, Fleet-street, to look at the processes of gilding or silvering, cutting out, perforating, embossing, and otherwise treating paper, in imitation of lace-work or embroidery. These operations, with a scene in one of Mr. Rimmel's work-rooms, are represented by our illustrations.

But it would not be fair to omit all mention of the important work done by other houses of the highest repute in their different branches of artistic industry. Without the aid of the designer or draughtsman, the lithographer, the wood-engraver, the painter or the colour-printer, the cardboard maker, the artificial-flower maker, the workers in silk, feathers, glass, filigree, and lacquer, besides many others of diverse skill, we could not have these charming toys of the lovers' vernal festival. They are only arranged, composed, and put together and made delicious with fragrance by Mr. Rimmel. The productions of Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co., of Chandos-street, who are decorators or illuminators, engravers, colour-printers, and lithographers, also manufacturers of Russia and Morocco leather, as well as literary publishers recently of some importance, equally deserve mention. They are not so complex, indeed, as those which are fabricated of various materials and intended for various appliances. They consist mainly of pictorial and ornamental designs on paper, with suitable verses or mottoes; but their artistic beauty commands admiration; the pictures and the poetry are really good; and we take this opportunity to give them a passing notice.

The processes for the ornamentation of paper at Mr. Meek's establishment are first to be described. Most persons are, perhaps, aware that the gilding or silvering is done by previously putting moist varnish on the paper, and then laying gold-leaf or silver-leaf upon it, or else covering it with metallic powder. This naturally sticks to the parts which are touched with the adhesive varnish; and if that was put on, like printer's ink, by a machine supplied with a form of types or an engraved bas-relief, the letter-printing, pattern, or picture will appear in gold or silver, when the other parts of the metal-leaf are removed. They are simply rubbed off by hand, with a woollen or soft linen rag. Our first three illustrations show the laying on of the gold or silver leaf, in pieces about four inches square; the impressing it on the moist paper, by the use of a small hand-press; and the wiping off of the waste fragments of this shining tissue. In the next illustration, at the upper right-hand corner of the page, we see the cutting out of patterns in the paper by forcing it, with the pressure of a screw, upon a sharp-edged die beneath. A piece of zinc is interposed between the paper and the press. At the bottom of the page, in the middle, is a ponderous machine, called a "tympan," which reminds us of a steam-hammer; but the power that works it, instead of steam, is only the momentum of a huge iron wheel, having a weight of two or three tons, horizontally suspended. As the axle of this wheel rises or descends in a screw, its backward revolution, after having been wound up and raised a little, presently brings down the hammer with enormous force upon a kind of anvil solidly constructed below. This machine is used for embossing the paper, whether gilt or silvered, or plain, or cut in a pattern. After the embossing comes the process of lacing. The die, which is made of hard steel, has the paper yet sticking to its surface. It is placed on a bench, where a man with a file wrapped in sand-paper rubs away upon it, till every particle of paper raised on the protuberant points of the die is removed, leaving a number of little holes, and the remaining parts, sunk in the engraved hollow spaces of the die, form a perfect imitation of lacework. Several young women or girls are employed, lastly, in trimming and folding this ornamental paper, which is much in request for various occasions, as well as for valentine letters.

The larger engraving in the centre of our page displays a scene in one of Mr. Rimmel's busy and pleasant work-rooms. But these are very extensive, and from eighty to a hundred and fifty industrious females—the numbers varying with the season—may be found here engaged in most congenial work. It is an agreeable sight to watch their skilful fingers, and to notice how they enjoy the exercise of that natural taste for the pretty, the neat, and the convenient, which belongs to their clever sex. A more cheerful place and scene of labour can nowhere be visited; and the variety of nice little contrivances giving free play to an ingenious fancy is exceedingly amusing to the observer. This work, one would think, must have some resemblance to millinery—especially to the trimming of ladies' caps and bonnets—in respect of the faculties of mind, as well as of eye and hand, which it calls into activity; and we hold that millinery, with other departments of confectionery (to use that word in the French sense) is part of the vocation of woman. Mr. Rimmel directs all this company of fair artisans in their manifold tasks, and constantly devises novel artistic combinations, pleasing effects of grouping or colour, the unforeseen addition of strange and quaint materials, whimsical surprises, and practical jests, or useful adaptations of things really serviceable in the concoction of his different valentines. This last-mentioned quality, which he calls the utile dulci, may recommend some of his wares to persons of a practical turn. A needful article of the toilet, or of a lady's or gentleman's dress, such as a hair-pin, a breast-pin, a ring, a bow of silk ribbon, a necktie, a fan, a brooch, a locket, a scent-bottle, or even a garter (honi soit qui mal y pense), is cleverly introduced amidst the paper lace and filigree, the artificial flowers and real marabout feathers, the little painted cupids and cherubs, or loving human couples, that fill a shallow pasteboard box. Sometimes there is a scenic arrangement to show a verdant grove or flowery garden, with a flight of birds; or a lake of mirror-glass, with a swan upon its lucid surface; or a musical box, hidden beneath the decorative pieces, is suddenly heard in a sweet familiar tune. A lady's work-box, glove-box, jewel-box, or toilet-case, a cigar-case for a young man, a packet of bon-bons for a child, may lie concealed in the satin couch of a "practical valentine," surrounded with gold lace or floral garlands. There are such gifts to be purchased at different prices, from five shillings up to five guineas; and most persons are inclined, once or twice in their lives, to spend their money in a fond sentimental tribute, which may take this shape as well as any other. What Mr. Rimmel undertakes is to provide the article for a lover or friend to give. That it may be the more worthy of gracious acceptance, he racks his brain for devices, and ransacks the stores of every manufacture, the vegetable, mineral, and animal kingdoms of nature, the farthest countries, from Peru to Japan, the workshops of Bohemia, Genoa, and Pesh, for a diversity of materials. It takes a great deal of trouble to compose these mere trifles. One of the really beautiful things he has lately imported is the work of nuns in a Brazilian convent, who are accustomed to make artificial flowers entirely of the feathers of the gorgeous birds that haunt the South American forests. "It is Nature imitating Nature," says Mr. Rimmel; and it is true that no artificial colours would so vividly represent the hues of living growth.

The above description of the manufacture of valentines will apply, in some measure, to that of similar pretty "confections" for the gifts of Christmas and New-Year's Day, and for the contents of "Easter eggs." All this kind of business has of late years taken great extension among us, and we desire to see it turned to good account in educating the taste and encouraging the wholesome play of fancy. It would be an excellent pastime for young people to design and fabricate their own valentine or other gifts, buying the materials at the proper shops in town. In the mean time, those who are less industrious can purchase a variety of such things ready made, and we have told them somewhat of the making.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated July 4, 1871, with eight codicils, of the Right Hon. Cadwallader, Lord Blayney, late of Castle Blayney, in the county of Monaghan, who died on Jan. 13 last, at St. James's Hotel, Piccadilly, was proved on the 3rd inst. by Thomas Bates, the Hon. Walter Philip Alexander, Richard Key, and John Davis Garde, the executors, the personal estate being sworn £25,000. Among many other legacies, the testator bequeaths £1000 to the poor of Castle Blayney; £50 to the poor of St. James's, Piccadilly; nineteen guineas to the poor of Willesden; £5000 to purchase land, if practicable, within half a mile of the market house, Castle Blayney, and to erect almshouses thereon for twenty persons to be elected without reference to creed, and £15,000 to form an endowment fund for the same; £2000 to the sustentation fund of the Irish Church; £10,000 to be divided between the Molyneux Asylum, Dunne's Hospital, the Protestant Orphan Society, the Agricultural Society, and Queen's College, all at Dublin; and £200 each to the Charing-cross Hospital and St. George's Hospital, Hyde Park-corner. The residuary legatees are the Countess of Caledon, Thomas Bates, the Hon. Walter Philip Alexander, Arthur Sharman Crawford, testator's sister, the Hon. Mrs. Charles Gordon, and his niece, Mrs. Rolland. A correspondent suggests the possibility of there being an inheritor of the barony of Blayney, from the fact that the Hon. Sir Arthur Blayney, second son of the first peer, left three sons, Edward, Henry, and Arthur, and that of these sons, Arthur, living at the commencement of the eighteenth century, married twice, and had three sons by his first wife and six children by his second. Sir Henry Hope Edwardes, Bart., and Mr. Thomas Bates, of Heddon Banks, Northumberland, are the present representatives of the second son of the Hon. Sir Arthur Blayney, being descended from two of his daughters. We may, however, state that if no claim be actually made within a twelvemonth the barony of Blayney may be legally used as one of the extinctions required for the creation of an Irish peer.

The will and two codicils, dated respectively Oct. 14 and Nov. 8 and 25, 1873, of John Cowans, late of Hartlands, near Cranford, who died on Dec. 5 last, were proved on the 19th ult. by Thomas Wright, Jeannie Cowan Cowans, the relict, and Richard Rapier, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator leaves to his widow a legacy of £200 and his furniture absolutely, his residence, and an annuity of £1000 for life; at her death the mansion house and premises known as Hartlands are devised to his eldest son; and the residue of his personalty is given to all his children in equal shares.

The will, dated April 16, 1872, with two codicils, both dated June 21, 1873, of Major William Gabbett Beare, late of No. 34, Devonshire-place, Marylebone, who died on the 17th ult., was proved on the 5th inst. by Arthur Doveton Clarke, Robert Ruthven Pym, and Francis Douglas Boggis-Rolfe, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £60,000. The persons benefited by the will and codicils are the members of testator's family.

The will, dated Jan. 3 last, of George David Nestle, late of Commercial-street, was proved on the 2nd inst. by Nicholas Samuel Edward Steinberg, Jules Houdret, and James Edmund Huntsman, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths to the German Hospital at Dalston and the Commercial Travellers' School £250 each; and there are some other legacies. The residue of his property he gives to his son and daughter, William David Nestle and Ida Matilda Nestle.

The will, with seven codicils, of John Bawtree, late of Abberton, Essex, was proved on the 2nd inst. by John Bawtree, Francis Bawtree, and Edward William Bawtree, the sons, and James Inglis, the executors, the personalty being sworn under £45,000. The testator gives to the Eastern Counties Asylum for Idiots and Imbeciles, Essex Hall, Colchester, £100, to be applied for the benefit of the life case fund of such institution, and 50 gs. to the Essex and Colchester Hospital, both free of legacy duty.

The will of Robert Orr, late of Bedford Park, Croydon, was proved on the 3rd inst. by the executors, Mrs. Margaret Orr, the relict, Admiral Arthur Mellersh, O.B., Miles Balfield Filby, and John Henry, the personalty being sworn under £75,000. After legacies of £50 each to the executors, £200 to the widow, and an annuity of £200 to his niece, Mrs. Mary Orr Cauth, the testator bequeaths a life interest in the residue of his estate to his widow, and after her death the same is divisible amongst his nephews, nieces, and great-nephew.

THE MANUFACTURE OF VALENTINES.

"THE VALENTINE," BY W. HUNT.

"THE VALENTINE."

St. Valentine, whose festival occurs to-day (Saturday), is a saint who, like the Conservatives, though he has long been in the shade, is growing rapidly in popular favour. We do not know whether or not it is a device of the Romanist or Ritualist party to favour the introduction of confession (if so, pace Mr. Whalley, the device would seem innocent enough in itself); but certain it is that the practice of confessing love or jealousy, pique or hate, on St. Valentine's Day through certain thin veils or partitions of anonymity is yearly becoming more general. And the practice is not confined to silly love-sick boys and girls; for pater and mater families, whose own wooing has been long since over, now send "valentines" to their little ones, and vice-versa. Yearly the stationers' shop windows bloom out at this early spring season, this pairing-time of the birds, in more wonderfully profuse displays of painted flowers, of wedding favours of silver and lace and orange-blossoms, Cupid's and Hymen's hearts and darts, illuminated honeyed verses, and all sorts of more or less fanciful devices and surprises, to say nothing of spiteful caricatures and stupid burlesque doggerel. Yearly the postman has a more gigantic task to deliver all such missives, bulky as many of them are, on the sacred day. The making of the valentines is now, we understand, a quite distinct and flourishing branch of trade—should we not rather say of art-manufacture or applied art? Other speculative traders in light articles besides the stationers—such as perfumers, jewellers, and what not—have entered the field; and we are threatened with taxes as onerous on St. Valentine's Day as to the French are the étrennes of the jour de l'an. Is Cupid getting more mercenary, and so now prefers substance to shadow? We hear, at all events, of "valentines" in the shape of packets of scents, bonbons, trinkets, ornaments for hair and bonnet and hat, even gentlemen's neckties, initialed handkerchiefs, worked slippers, and smoking-caps. We look with dismay on this innovation; and we counsel all concerned to return to the simple sentimental practices of former days. The young gentleman who sat for the picture we have engraved was evidently of our way of thinking. He has not bought his valentine ready to hand; he is honestly committing himself to an effusion which, if not original, is autographic. He has not certainly good looks in his favour; still he may, by-and-by, be a successful suitor with such straightforward procedure as he practises as a boy. There is a sly twinkle in his eye which we ascribe to a secret consciousness of his own poetical and calligraphic ingenuity, not to any mischievous intention. Need we say, in conclusion, that the original drawing has all William Hunt's characteristic humour in the representation of rustic boys.

"THE DECAY OF THE TEETH AND GUMS arises from various causes; but principally it may be attributed to early neglect, ill-health, and the use of tooth powders, pastes, and washes containing mineral and other deleterious acids, which give a momentary whiteness to the Teeth, while they corrode the enamel. It is highly satisfactory to point out Messrs. BOWLAND'S OXYDOTE, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, as a preparation free from all injurious elements, and eminently calculated to embellish and preserve the dental structure, to impart a grateful fragrance to the breath, and to embellish and perpetuate the grace of the mouth."—Observer. THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINER ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Footboards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found distinct of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect. With 22 reeds. CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

SKETCHES IN MOSCOW, BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

ANCIENT VASE IN THE KREMLIN.

STAIRCASE IN THE ANCIENT PART OF THE KREMLIN.

SKETCHES IN MOSCOW.

The visit of their Royal Highnesses the newly-married Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh to the ancient historic capital of Russia, accompanied by her august parents, the Emperor and Empress, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Czarevitch and Czarevna, and the Imperial Crown Prince and Princess of Germany, is an interesting sequel to the recent wedding ceremony at St. Petersburg, which was illustrated last week by our Special Artist. Their Imperial Majesties and Imperial and Royal Highnesses arrived at Moscow on Thursday week, about midnight, by the railway from St. Petersburg. We give some illustrations of the Kremlin, which is the palace precinct of Moscow, in the centre of the city; but it has been fully described on some former occasions. It is surrounded by walls from 30 ft. to 50 ft. high, and 12 ft. or 16 ft. thick, with battlements and embrasures, many towers, and five principal gates. Within this inclosure are the restored old palace of the Czars and the new palace, rebuilt after the burning of Moscow in 1812, when the Russians set fire to their noble old city because Napoleon had captured it. The cathedral church of the Assumption, that of the Annunciation, that of St. Michael, and that of the Transfiguration, are worthy of note, as well as the Ivanovskaya belfry, the Imperial Museum, the Palace of the Patriarch, the Chadof monastery, and the Vosnesenskoi nunnery, with its tombs and relics of the Imperial family. The sepulchres of most of the Czars, to the death of Peter the Great, are in St. Michael's Cathedral. It is probable that Moscow was founded in the twelfth century. Its population is now about 350,000, comprising the Kremlin, the Kitai Gorod, or trading and shop-keeping quarter, the Beloi Gorod, or white town, containing the official mansions and residences of the nobility and the Zemlianoi, which lies outside, with suburbs beyond the last-mentioned quarter. The inland commerce of Russia is chiefly centred at Moscow. It is a city of picturesque and striking aspect, with its numberless towers and cupolas, its gilded bulbs, crescents, and crosses above the roofs, and the green colour of buildings, as they are painted.

In the most ancient part of the Kremlin is an old sacristy, in which is kept a very old vase. It is of copper, silvered over, and ornamented with mother-of-pearl. It is believed to contain a portion of the "costly pound of ointment" which was used by Mary Magdalene. The tradition is that it came from Byzantium, in the very early days of the Church. Every Lent a solemn ceremony is gone through by the Metropolitan of Moscow, assisted by his principal clergy. This is the preparation of the oil for baptismal unction, which is one of the important parts of the Russian-Greek rite of baptism. The finest oils are put into two boilers in the sacristy; white wine, gums, balsams, and spices are added, and a drop or two of the precious ointment is taken from the ancient vase and added to the whole. After being thoroughly incorporated a drop of the chrism is put back, and thus it becomes the source of an endless supply. This chrism is used at the coronation of the Emperor, at the consecration of all churches, and at the baptism of every orthodox Russian. Every drop used is supposed to have a portion, however minute, of the "costly pound of ointment."

THE MAGAZINES FOR FEBRUARY.

The Contemporary Review challenges principal attention among the periodicals of the month by the Premier's translation of Homer's "Shield of Achilles." We regret that a performance so honourable to Mr. Gladstone's love of letters should be more commendable on this account than from its intrinsic merit. The metre—a trochaic ballad measure, which might have been well adapted to scenes of hurry and bustle—appears to us very unsuitable to a piece of description; and the defect is not redeemed by any conspicuous excellence of style. The rendering is tamely accurate throughout, with many lapses in dignity and polish, and with scarcely a single really felicitous stroke. The introductory essay, on the other hand, is worthy of Mr. Gladstone's insight and scholarship, and contains a number of excellent observations, excellently expressed. Another member of the Government—Mr. Grant-Duff—appears as a contributor, with a sketch of his recent Egyptian tour, originally a popular lecture to his constituents, and which need hardly have aspired to a wider publicity. The continuation of Mr. St. George Mivart's essay on Contemporary (theological) Evolution is but rambling; and Mr. R. H. Horne makes his publication of Mrs. Browning's letters to him (of which this month he prints one) a mere vehicle for his own views about rhymes in general, and his correspondent's rhymes in particular. There is better, if tougher, matter in the Hon. Roden Noel's profound metaphysical paper; in the Rev. J. Hunt's plea for dogmatic laxity, against the legal stringency of a daily contemporary; and in Dean Stanley's free-and-easy way of settling disputes about the rubrics. Dr. Holland's objections to Sir H. Thompson's proposal for the incineration of the dead apparently resolve themselves into the question of taste.

The Cornhill is not remarkable this month; its chief claim to approval is the completion of the disagreeable story of "Young Brown." "Far from the Madding Crowd" evinces much knowledge of English peasant life; but the talk of the slow rustics is itself very slow, and the constant imitation of George Eliot is fatiguing. The critique on Mrs. Gaskell is sound, but not brilliant; and the "French Press," "Missives in Masquerade," and "Cruelty to Animals" do not aspire beyond the rank of respectable "padding."

Macmillan's new Irish story, "Castle Daly," has the disadvantage of being laid thirty years back, and accordingly belonging to a class of fiction already largely represented. It promises, however, to be racy of the soil. The letters of Mendelssohn published in this number are, for once, less interesting than Dr. Ferdinand Hiller's accompanying text. The present instalment of the letters on Spain treats of the religious condition of the country. Mr. Matthew Arnold's address to the elementary teachers at Westminster (already somewhat fully reported in the newspapers) treats chiefly of our educational condition as compared with America, and of the religious difficulty. A paper on the late Sir George Rose is chiefly devoted to a record of his good sayings, some of which have an inimitable professional flavour. "When," for example, "a singularly matter-of-fact gentleman had related a story in which the listeners had failed to detect the slightest spark of humour, Sir George accounted for the circumstance at once. 'Don't you see?' he said. 'He has tried a joke, but reserved the point.'"

"Disorder in Dreamland," in Blackwood's, is one of those peculiar and characteristic stories with which this magazine is wont to favour us, rather a curiosity than a great performance, but exceedingly well worth reading, and quite out of the common track. The number of short articles suggests that Mr. Gladstone's unexpected move has had the effect of suppressing the usual political harangue, which has given place to a hurried postscript. Two papers among the medley, however, are remarkably interesting—"The Two Speransky," recording the career of a Russian statesman alternately exiled to Siberia and appointed to the government of the country; and an account of the education now being imparted to the young Prince of Mysore, to fit him for the throne he is one day to occupy under British protection.

Mr. Richard Jefferies, who is making a name as an authority upon agricultural subjects, contributes a remarkable paper to Fraser's, entitled "John Smith's Shanty," embracing a picture of the miserable existence of the agricultural labourer where no improvement has taken place in his condition, but at the same time an encouraging account of the operation of the tendencies now at work to raise him in the social scale. Mr. Jefferies does not anticipate that the immediate effect of the recent agitation for an advance of wages will be considerable. A paper on Petronius Arbitrator is also an excellent contribution, the work of one endowed with the faculty of looking below the surface. Mr. Edmund Gosse conveys much valuable information on Norway in a very pleasing style. General Cluseret's information respecting the origin of the present ecclesiastical conflict in Switzerland may be essential to a full understanding of the matter, but refers too much to bygone transactions to be interesting, even if we could thoroughly trust the informant. "Christian Brothers and Their Lesson-Books" is an exposure of the disloyal character of the instruction given in the schools chiefly patronised by the Roman Catholic priesthood. "Modern Comedy" is an attack upon the pieces of Mr. Gilbert and the late Mr. Robertson. "From Cobourg to St. Malo" and "A Christmas in India" are lively descriptive papers.

The Fortnightly, solid in matter, is solid also in its claims to attention. The most important article is that by Mr. Fawcett on the prospects of co-operation, to which he looks with more confidence than any other economic agency as a means of social amelioration. Mr. Cliffe Leslie's paper on the incidence of taxation on the working classes appears at a propitious juncture. If Mr. Gladstone is guided by Mr. Leslie's suggestions, the principal incidence of taxation will henceforth be upon real estate. Mazzini's posthumous notice of Rénan's work on the moral decadence of France is interesting as the writer's last production, but contains no novel ideas. It is principally an impeachment of the modern French school of history, from the point of view of an exalted morality. Belli's satirical sonnets in the patois of the Roman people, described and partly translated by Mr. H. Sotheby, are a most unique embodiment of the humour of an intelligent though uneducated populace. The impossibility of an adequate rendering is no fault of the translator. Mr. F. Harrison's imitation of the political surveys in the Revue des Deux Mondes can hardly be considered felicitous. The charm of these elegant compositions consists in their suavity and apparent impartiality, traits above all others remote from Mr. Harrison's uncompromising sternness of conviction.

"The Sherlocks," Mr. John Saunders's story in Saint Paul's, is so far a characteristic instance of his homely power and simple fidelity to nature. A paper on Mr. Fitzjames Stephen and his brother, by Henry Holbeach, affords vigorous expression to truths rather intuitively apprehended than logically reasoned out by the writer. There is nothing else remarkable in the magazine; nor in Belgravia, though the latter is lively throughout.

Two numbers of Scribner's Monthly claim our attention. The January one is the best it has ever published, containing, among other valuable matter, the completion of Mr. Froude's history of the Abbey of St. Alban's, an excellent original novelette by Bret Harte, an interesting sketch of the American Senate, and a beautifully illustrated description of Texas. The sequel of this paper is the most attractive part of the February number.

The most important articles in the Transatlantic are a history of the recent panic in Wall-street, from "Old and New," and the conclusion of Mr. Welles's vindication of President Lincoln, from which we learn that the President's wise and magnanimous step after the second battle of Bull Run, in overlooking General McClellan's notorious misconduct, and appointing him to the command of the army as the only man equal to the situation, originated entirely with himself, and was contrary to the opinion of his Cabinet.

Mr. Francillon's Olympia, in the Gentleman's Magazine, promises to be one of his happiest creations. The character of the gifted, sensitive, original child is powerfully conceived, and the writing is brilliant. Mr. Cowden Clarke's recollections of Keats have for the most part been already given to the world, but there is still sufficient flavouring of novelty to render them very acceptable. It is interesting, for instance, to learn that the splendid line in the sonnet on Chapman's Homer "Yet did I never breathe its pure serene," originally existed in the far inferior shape, "Yet could I never tell what men could mean." Dr. Kenealy is not without substantial claims as a poet, but these are much exaggerated by his critic, Dr. Leary.

The Month contains several papers evincing learning and research; but nothing of much general interest except an account, biased in fact, though fair in intention, of the revolution which initiated the third French Republic.

The feature of Temple Bar is the commencement of "Patricia Kemball," a new serial fiction by Mrs. Linton, which certainly makes an excellent début. Patricia is the niece of an old sea captain on the Cornish coast; her sweet and natural character captivates the reader from the first. Her uncle is vigorously drawn; and the wild coast scenery, with the incidents of a perilous cruise along it, are depicted with graphic power. There is nothing else of special note in the number except a very good article on Chateaubriand.

The most important contribution to Tinsley is Mr. Justin McCarthy's "Linley Rochford," which promises to be an excellent novel of its class. "My Greatest Fright" is an amusing burlesque tale. In the Argosy we have to note "Johnny Ludlow's" characteristic "Pitchley's Farm," and the very graphic description of a night passed in the monastery of the Grand Chartreuse.

London Society commences a series of semi-poetical pictures of fascinating women, by Mr. Arthur O'Shaughnessy, entitled "Portraits Charmants." The elegance of the first instalment, "Alice," is remarkable. "Modern Mysteries" is an account of some recent réances, corresponding to those described by Lord Amberley, but from an opposite point of view to that adopted by his Lordship.

We have also to acknowledge the St. James's Magazine, Once a Week, the Monthly Packet, the New Monthly, the Irish Monthly, the Victoria Magazine, Good Words, Good Things, the Sunday Magazine, and Cassell's Magazine.

The most entertaining article in the Quarterly is a charming sketch of the life of Winckelmann, the most interesting review of Mill's autobiography—prejudiced in some respects, we must consider, but fair in intention, and evincing much loftiness of feeling. The notice of Prosper Mérimée's letters is the work of one well qualified by his social knowledge to revise the Frenchman's impressions and anecdotes, especially of English society. "Sacerdotalism" affords the theme of an acrimonious attack on the Ritualistic party, especially as regards the practice of confession. "Russian Songs and Folk Tales" is a very pleasant paper. The article on Mrs. Somerville is very poor, and that on "The Difficulties of the Liberal Party" is extinguished by the general election.

MUSIC.

The chief event occurring since our last week's record was the commencement of a new series of M. Gounod's concerts at St. James's Hall. The inaugural performance, on Saturday evening, brought forward his music composed for M. Jules Barbier's drama, "Jeanne d'Arc," which was produced with great success at the Paris Gaieté Theatre last autumn. The pieces, twelve in number, were given on Saturday for the first time in England, conducted by the composer. An orchestral prelude, of charmingly pastoral character, with many obligati passages for oboe solo, leads to a "chorus of fugitives," the vocal phrases of which are somewhat too deliberate in style for the due expression of terror and flight. Then follows the music of the Vision, in which a celestial chorus is heard, interspersed with solo passages for St. Catherine and St. Margaret, encouraging Jeanne in her heroic mission. A bright chorus of ladies (in the scene of Agnes Sorel's court) and a piquant ballad for the Page lead to a very effective minuet in the true antique style. A bold and spirited patriotic chorus, "Dieu le veut," closes the second act; and an equally characteristic chorus of French soldiers opens the third act, and is followed by some lively dance music. This scene of camp revelry is strongly contrasted by the choral prayer sung before the battle, which ends the act. A very graceful dialogued chorus for female voices (sung in tribute to Jeanne) is succeeded by a jubilant coronation march and chorus, which form a triumphal close to the scene. The last act opens with Jeanne d'Arc asleep in the prison. Soldiers are heard carousing, and their choral revelry is interspersed with the voices of the two saints encouraging the condemned heroine. There are some capital effects of contrast here, which, however (as in many other cases), depend largely on the stage situation. A sombre funeral march and a closing chorus of angels, with a recurrence of some of the music of the first finale, end the work, throughout which the well-known grace and power of M. Gounod's style and his skill in orchestral writing are successfully manifested. The first part of Saturday's concert consisted of a performance of M. Gounod's "Messe Solennelle (St. Cecilia)," with a new offertorium—a charming piece of graceful orchestral writing. The composer (who conducted throughout the evening) was enthusiastically received. A full and powerful chorus and a highly-efficient band gave great effect to both the works referred to. Dr. Stainer was the organist. The names of the solo singers were not given in the books.

Last Saturday's Crystal Palace concert was devoted to a performance of Handel's "Theodora," of which little-known work we spoke on the occasion of its revival at one of the concerts of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society in October last. The oratorio was very effectively given on Saturday with the co-operation of the Crystal Palace choir, the solos by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Misses Sterling and Dones, Mr. Cummings, and Signor Agnesi, conducted by Mr. Manns. At the concert of this (Saturday) afternoon Herr Joachim is to make his first appearance this season.

At this week's Monday Popular Concert Dr. Hans von Bülow reappeared and was heard in some pieces by Handel for piano solo; in Beethoven's sonata in C (from op. 102) for piano and violoncello, with Signor Piatti; and in Molique's trio in B flat (repeated by desire). The concert began with Mozart's divertimento in B flat, for string quartet, with the addition of two horns (Messrs. C. Harper and Standen) and double bass (Mr. Reynolds). Herr Straus was the leading violinist; the other members of the quartet having been, as usual, Messrs. I. Ries and Zerbini and Signor Piatti. Madame Patey was the vocalist. Dr. von Bülow will play at the afternoon performance of to-day (Saturday) for the last time this season. At next Monday's concert Herr Joachim will appear.

The fourth concert of the Wagner Society's second season was to take place last (Friday) evening, when the programme included (besides other pieces) a long selection from "Lohengrin," for chorus, orchestra, and solo voices. Of the performances we must speak next week.

Mr. G. A. Macfarren's oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," is to be performed, for the first time in London, by the Sacred Harmonic Society on Friday, Feb. 27.

Mr. Willem Coenen has announced three interesting concerts of chamber music, to take place at the Hanover-square Rooms on the evenings of Feb. 20, March 4 and 18. The programmes include some important instrumental works of the most modern German school.

THEATRES.

On Saturday a new experiment was made at the Lyceum with a new piece, suggested evidently by one of Balzac's novels, and forming a melodrama in four acts, each culminating with a tableau, with little of incident and less of dialogue. The drama, entitled "Philip," by Mr. Hamilton Aidé, is a skeleton not yet covered with the flesh and blood of poetry, but inspired with a grim interest all the more impressive, perhaps, from its bareness. The action derives some effect from the scene—the opening one—representing the exterior of an ancient Moorish castle in Andalusia, the parapet of which overlooks the Guadalquivir, painted and set with pictorial skill by Mr. Hawes Craven. Count Philip de Miraflore (Mr. Henry Irving) and Count Juan de Miraflore (Mr. John Clayton) are both attached to the same lady, one Marie (Miss Isabel Bateman)—a young maiden bred in a convent, but now the poor companion of the Countess (Miss G. Pauncefort). The family are poor but proud, and the stern mother is indignant when told by her younger son that his brother Philip designs to wed her dependant. He himself manifests less worthy intentions, and loves the girl in a wicked fashion of his own. Turned adrift by the Countess, the poor orphan takes her departure; but Juan attempts to follow her. Philip resists; whereupon Juan aims a blow at him with his stiletto, and Philip in return fires at Juan with his gun. Juan falls, and Philip makes his escape. Thus ends the first act. Eight years are supposed to elapse between it and the next. We then find Marie acting, in Paris, as companion to Madame Provoisin (Miss Virginia Francis)—a fashionable lady who lives on her debts, and is visited by all manner of notabilities. Among these is Count St. Leon, who is, in fact, our old friend Count Philip returned from America with a fortune. The lovers recognise each other, come to an understanding, and the curtain falls on their betrothal. But the Count has not told his wife of having slain his brother; so when, in the third act, an apparently old man relates at the breakfast-table the tale of Count Philip having murdered his brother Juan, Marie is naturally shocked, and an altercation takes place in their mutual feelings. Marie seeks an explanation from the stranger, who visits her in the fourth act, and, having thrown off his disguise, proves to be the still living Juan. Basely he pleads for a recognition of his love, which she disdainfully rejects; and, expecting her husband's return, shuts him up in her oratory. Count St. Leon enters, full of jealousy, though, as it appears to us, without sufficient motive, and acts towards his wife in an exceedingly arbitrary manner. Suspecting that she has a lover concealed in the oratory, he makes her swear to the contrary; then produces Balzac's romance, and proposes, in imitation of its hero, to wall up the closet, and summons the masons, who are already at work in the grounds, for the purpose. Here one might think that Marie would exclaim that it was his brother, and so prevent the threatened mischief; but she does nothing of the kind, and leaves him to alter his mind, which is to give the delinquent the chance of a duel. He therefore unbars the oratory; and, behold! his brother Juan stands visibly before him. His wonder is only exceeded by his satisfaction at the fact, and he exclaims that "the stone of remorse is thereby lifted from his heart." And so all parties are made happy, and the curtain falls on their common safety. Very little power of language is shown in the dialogue, but some constructive skill in the situations, and upon these the success depended. The new play was received with applause but cannot claim either much originality or high rank. The placing of it on the boards, with some fine scenes by Messrs. Craven and H. Cuthbert, and the acting, are all first-rate, and the triumph clearly belongs to the artists engaged in the representation.

Another morning performance at the Gaiety included Mr. Phelps and Mr. Toole in the performance of "The Rivals" on Saturday, as well as Mr. Hermann Vezin and Miss Carlisle, Mrs. Leigh, Mr. Charles Harcourt, and Mr. Lionel Brough. The whole went off remarkably well.

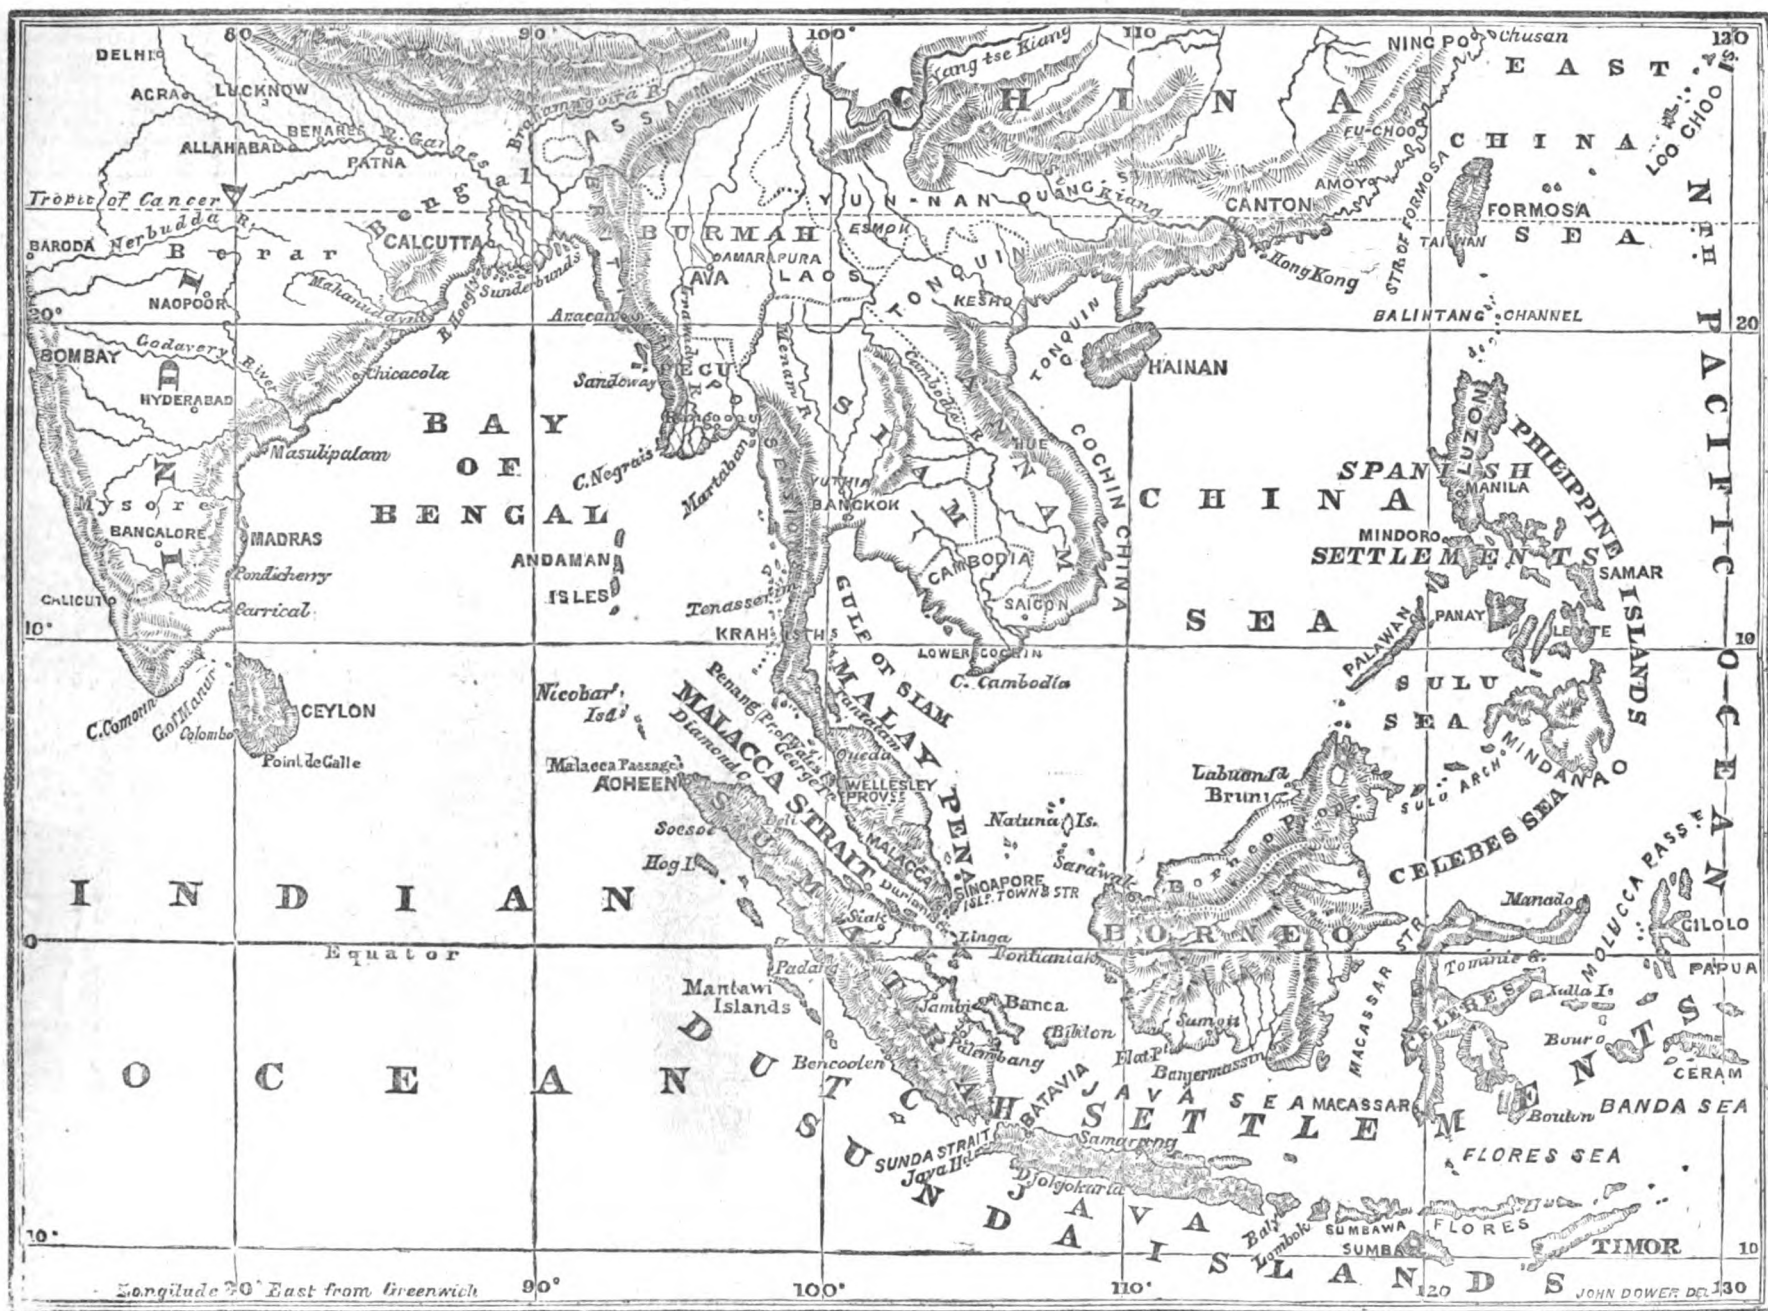

Such has been the success of the late Mr. Robertson's comedy of "School," that on Saturday it attained its 500th night of representation. It still continues to attract full houses at the Prince of Wales's Theatre.

Miss Braddon's "Griselda" having run its appointed course at the Princess's, Mr. Guiver has judiciously fallen back upon the most popular of Mr. Tom Taylor's historical dramas, in which Mrs. Rousby resumes her original character of the Lady Elizabeth, Mr. Rousby appearing as Bishop Gardiner, and Mr. W. Rignold as Lord Courtney. The play will continue to be acted every evening until the 23rd inst., when it will be withdrawn, to make way for Mr. W. G. Wills's new drama, "Marie Stuart," in which Mrs. Rousby will impersonate the Queen of Scots and Mr. Rousby the redoubtable John Knox.

The season of French plays at the Holborn Theatre has been replete with novelties and well-deserved revivals. "Tricouche et Cacolet" and "Le Réveillon" have never failed to draw good houses. "L'Infortunée Caroline," another of the same class, has been produced for the first time. "Les Inutiles" is also announced.

THE STRAIT OF MALACCA.

The political recriminations that Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli have lately exchanged with each other in their election speeches and letters, have more than once referred to a distant but important geographical topic, which our Map will help to explain. The Dutch Government is now engaged in a warfare against the Sultan of Acheen, which is a Mohammedan Malay State at the northern extremity of the large island of Sumatra. The Dutch were bound, till very lately, by a treaty with the British Government, not to acquire any new territorial possessions along that coast of Sumatra which extends a length of five or six hundred miles opposite the western shores of the Malay Peninsula; these shores of the continent fronting Sumatra with the British mercantile colonies of Penang, Malacca, and Singapore. The Strait of Malacca, which is the maritime passage between the Malay Peninsula and the Island of Sumatra, has a direction from north-west to south-east, between latitude 5 deg. 20 min. N., longitude 97 deg. 30 min. E., and latitude 1 deg. 15 min. N., longitude 103 deg. 40 min. E. At its northern end the strait is nearly 180 miles wide, but southward it grows narrower, till, opposite the town of Malacca, its width is but thirty-six miles, and both shores, though rather low, are visible from mid-channel. The promontory of Acheen, being situated at the north-western point of Sumatra, must be distant, as Mr. Gladstone said, not less than 300 miles from the Asiatic mainland. The greater portion of the island shores opposite to Malacca does not belong to Acheen, but to several petty States, dependent more or less upon the Sultan of Siak, which is the part nearly opposite the commercial settlement of Singapore. The Dutch possessions in Sumatra lie on the western shores of this island, consisting of the five regencies of Palembang, Lampong, Bencoolen, Padang, and Ayer Banghis, including the port of Baroo. Since the beginning of the seventeenth century there has been a rivalry between the Dutch and English for trade, and sometimes for dominion, in this part of the world. The Portuguese had begun to occupy it nearly a hundred years before, but they had to give way to the Dutch. The three British settlements on the mainland shore of the strait are of great value to us, especially that of Singapore. This was founded in 1819; but that of Penang in 1786: they are both on small islands, yet close to the mainland. The Dutch settlement of Malacca was ceded to Great Britain in 1824, when that treaty obligation was imposed, which has recently been set aside in exchange for our acquiring the Dutch settlements on the Gold Coast of West Africa. The aggregate value of yearly exports and imports at the three British settlements in the Strait of Malacca is nearly twenty-two millions sterling, and the aggregate tonnage of vessels arriving there exceeds a million tons' burden in the year.

The Strait of Malacca is also the way for our maritime commerce to China, as is shown by the Map.

A correspondent at Brussels (Mr. R. Thelluson) sends us some particulars relating to Rubens's masterpieces in Antwerp Cathedral, which we think will be of interest to artists and the public generally. There having been some grounds for supposing that these famous works were being injured by damp in the cathedral, a Commission was lately appointed by the Belgian Government to inquire into the condition of the paintings, and lovers of art will be glad to know that it was found they had suffered no material injury. The examination led, however, to a further inquiry and discussion as to whether the pictures belonged to the cathedral authorities or to the State. At a meeting of the Town Council of Antwerp last month the following facts were adduced:—It is known that Rubens painted, in 1611, the picture of "The Descent from the Cross" for the Society of Archbishops of Antwerp; and they some years afterwards placed it in a chapel in the cathedral belonging exclusively to the society, with which the cathedral authorities could not interfere. During the French Revolution Rubens's pictures were carried off from Antwerp Cathedral and, with many other of the art-treasures of Europe, were deposited in the Louvre; and, in 1793, the French National Convention, after suppressing all churches and corporations, made a decree to the effect that the property hitherto belonging to churches and corporations should belong to the nation. Belgium was annexed to France in 1795, and, although the churches were restored to the clergy in 1802, Rubens's pictures still remained in Paris. It was only after the Treaty of Paris, in 1814, that the pictures were restored to the King of the Netherlands. By a decree dated 1815 the King directed them to be deposited in their former places, and the care and surveillance of them was "intrusted" to the "Government Commissioner of Arts and Sciences." The facts having been verified by eminent jurists, the Antwerp Town Council contented that the Government of 1815, having only deposited the pictures with certain individuals, and reserved the surveillance of them to a Government official, the Government has never parted with its rights of property in them, but has treated them as belonging to the State. This right being established, the Antwerp Council have now under consideration the propriety of removing the pictures to the Museum of Antwerp, where so many other fine works of the master are preserved.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian hears that the fortune which has been left by Baron Meyer de Rothschild, though not so large as was generally expected, is likely to exceed three millions sterling.

Mr. John Wilkinson, proprietor of Oakenshaw Printworks, Clayton-le-Moors, near Accrington, was caught by some revolving machinery in his own establishment last Saturday. Before the engine could be stopped his life was gone, his body being frightfully mutilated.

The Dublin Corporation has resolved unanimously to memorialise the Government for the appropriation of the Irish Church Surplus Fund to the widening of Carlisle Bridge, the construction of a new street leading to Christ Church Cathedral, the drainage of such parts of the country as may require drainage, the reclamation of waste lands and other purposes, the adornment and improvement of the city, and the advancement of the material prosperity of the country generally.

The closing ceremony and distribution of prizes of the Cambridge Industrial Exhibition took place at the Guildhall, Cambridge, on Monday evening, under the presidency of Mr. Alderman J. Death, the Mayor. The exhibition, which has been visited by upwards of 20,000 persons, has resulted in a great success; and a resolution was passed with acclamation (on the motion of Mr. Judge Beales, seconded by Mr. T. H. Naylor), declaring that it had been a public benefit to the town, and affirming the desirability of promoting a similar exhibition in the course of about two years or so. The prizes were distributed by Mrs. W. H. Thompson, Trinity Lodge.

METROPOLITAN BOROUGH ELECTION SKETCHES.

The first general election of Parliamentary representatives that has ever been conducted by the machinery of the ballot was certainly attended with less disorder than we have seen upon former occasions. This cannot be ascribed to popular indifference and apathy, for the numbers actually voting were greater than usual, and conversation ran as freely upon the chances of one or another result as in the old days of the open poll. We have made up two pages of Engravings from the sketches taken by our Artists in several boroughs of the London district while their different elections were pending. They are meant only to show the humorous characteristics of such a frank expression of English popular feeling as is commonly drawn forth by this exciting procedure. In this respect both the contending political parties seem pretty much alike in every town of the kingdom, but there is more liveliness of speech and behaviour among the working-class crowd in a London street than in some provincial cities, and here also they know better how to keep their temper. The true Londoner is a lover of fair play, and has little of the bully or "rough" in his disposition. We have seen in some Lancashire towns—never in Manchester—the most ferocious violence used at election times, with a savage wantonness that one would be glad to chastise as it deserved, and without the slightest pretext or provocation. In towns of the south and west of England, though few heads are broken, and actual fighting is rare, we have often heard a candidate or his supporters assailed with the foulest insolence of ribald language, and denied permission to speak an audible sentence on the hustings. Londoners set a good example to the country, we are glad to say, in their comparative regard for the civilities and decencies of an election; but there is plenty of harmless fun, and plenty of earnest activity, with that tolerance and forbearance which is the need of all.

Taking the metropolitan boroughs all round—and it was a matter of course in the city of London—they performed this grand political operation very quietly on their polling days, and the meetings previously held by the partisans of both sides were seldom maliciously interrupted. Among the Prime Minister's constituency of Greenwich—which includes Deptford, Woolwich, Charlton, and Plumstead, with a population of 170,000, and 16,000 electors—the work of getting in their votes, on Tuesday week, was carried on with much spirit from eight o'clock to four. Nineteen polling-booths were erected in the different townships; and the ballot-boxes, at the close of the pole, were conveyed to the central polling-place, at the Greenwich Lecture-Hall. The artisans and labourers employed in Woolwich Arsenal were allowed to leave their work at noon in order to record their votes, and they were not obliged to return to work that day. The leisure of street-loungers was beguiled with a variety of diversions. One was exhibited at Greenwich, in a mild sort of dog-fight between two arrant curs, which bore on their collars the labels of "Whig" and "Tory," and the bystanders were much edified by this practical lesson, intended to show that the indulgence of party spite has a ridiculous and odious aspect. There were not two, but three, conflicting parties in the case of the Greenwich election; for while Mr. Boord and Mr. Liardet, the Conservative candidates, made common cause, hoisting the same colour, Mr. or Dr. Baxter Langley, as an uncompromising Radical, appeared in direct competition with the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. The Premier's colour was blue; and that of Dr. Baxter Langley, in compliment to his Home-Rule Irish supporters, was green; the Conservatives sported crimson, and many persons wore their rosettes of these different hues, which showed that they at least did not care to take the benefit of secret voting. The placards which were displayed about the town bore reference, on the one side, to alleged excessive parsimony at the Admiralty and War Office, which had deprived Greenwich, Woolwich, and Deptford of their former gains from the naval and military expenditure. On the other side, Mr. Boord's commercial pursuits as a distiller exposed him to the reproach of profiting by the vice of drunkenness. Nobody seemed to remember that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his public capacity, had gone shares in the profits of selling all kinds of intoxicating liquor, thereby gaining nearly all the boasted surplus of revenue; and that the licensed publicans, with their customers, had really supplied Mr. Gladstone's prosperous Budget. "Gin and Misery," indeed, was a cry that had too much sad truth in it; and if that was the theme of the poor woman's oratory who is shown by our sketch in the act of exerting her right of free speech, it is very likely that she knew but too well what she was talking about. This is, however, a graver consideration than we are now minded to discuss in our passing glance at the scenes of the late election. The gathering of people at the Greenwich Lecture-Hall, to wait for the declaration of the poll, is the subject of an Illustration; but the process of counting the votes was not finished till an hour after midnight.

In the boroughs of Southwark, the Tower Hamlets, and Chelsea, where the polling took place on Thursday week, there were many characteristic incidents; and we need only refer to our sketches in those parts of London, which scarcely need explanation. The well-known name of Odger as the "working-man's candidate" in Southwark was a spell to conjure by; and in the peculiar form of hat and out of beard affected by some of his supporters one might recognise the tokens of adhesion to the Democratic Republican faction of Continental malcontents. A cab retained for Colonel Beresford, the Conservative candidate, seems to have got into the thick of the throng at Bermondsey, where its progress was sorely impeded; but that was a trifle to what the poor driver had to suffer. In the western borough of Chelsea-cum-Kensington, it will be observed, a pair of Radical Baronets found themselves opposed by one Conservative barrister, and, still worse, embarrassed by the unwelcome pretensions of a third Liberal candidate. The "Chelsea sandwich," composed of a piece of man between two slices of placard, was seen walking about that part of town all day, so that one might run and read. Everybody could tell who was meant by "the People's William;" but the other warning, "Don't be cajoled by a lady," shall receive from us no further comment, unless we may retort with the natural question, "Why not?" In the Tower Hamlets, on the day after the voting, when Mr. Ritchie, the Conservative, was returned at the head of the poll, his carriage was drawn through the streets in triumph, men volunteering to do the work of horses, which is a custom that we should wish to have left in disuse.

The barque Lady Havelock, of Liverpool, 855 tons, Wood master, bound from Dalhousie to Hull, was wrecked on the Goodwin Sands on the 10th inst. The first intimation of the wreck was the firing of signals from the Goodwin and Gull light-ships at half-past four o'clock in the morning, while a gale of wind was blowing from the E.N.E., accompanied by thick snow squalls, the weather being very cold at the time. Promptly the Ramsgate harbour steamer Aid and life-boat Bradford and the Broadstairs life-boat of the National Institution proceeded out in response to the signals of distress. The steamer and first named life-boat made direct for the Goodwin light-ship through a heavy sea. On reaching her the bearings of the wreck were ascertained; and on arriving near the vessel the anchor was let go to windward. The ship was full of water, and the sea was breaking completely over her. The master and crew of fifteen men were with great difficulty taken into the life-boat Bradford and safely landed in Ramsgate harbour.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

IMPORTANCE OF VENTILATION.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., began his fourth lecture, on Tuesday week, by describing the changes which the air undergoes during respiration—viz., the loss of oxygen and the gain of carbonic acid, heat, moisture, and putrescible organic matters. In reference to the cause of death in asphyxia, he described experiments showing that death may be produced either by increasing the amount of carbonic acid in the blood, although the amount of oxygen be not diminished, or by diminishing the amount of oxygen without increasing the amount of carbonic acid. The carbonic acid is a narcotic, producing drowsiness, and finally insensibility. When death results from carbonic acid poisoning there are no convulsions. When, on the other hand, it results from oxygen starvation, death is preceded by convulsions, as in ordinary cases of suffocation; hence the inference that deprivation of oxygen is the cause of death in such cases. The slight effects from breathing air vitiated by respiration, such as headache, lassitude, and general ill-health, may be due not only to the deficiency of oxygen, but also to the accumulation of carbonic acid and putrescible organic matter derived from the air-passages, as well as from the skin. In speaking of the necessity for ventilation, the Professor said that, just as there is continual renewal of the air within the air-cells of the lungs by means of what is nothing more than an automatic ventilating apparatus; so there should be in every apartment a similar renewal of the air; for it is nothing more than a large air-cell, as the nose is to a certain extent a good indicator of the purity of air. Air should not be breathed which has a disagreeable odour; this, in respired air, being due to organic matter exhaled from the lungs. If a person were placed in a room containing 1000 cubic feet of air (that is, a room 10 ft. high and 10 ft. square), the air ought to be changed three times in an hour to keep it pure; with a smaller amount of air, still more frequently, and vice versa. Such complete ventilation is seldom obtained in our climate, on account of cold. The outlet and inlet of air should be so arranged as to prevent sensible draughts. In ordinary cases the chimney, when there is a fire, is a sufficient outlet; but the inlet in winter is apt to be neglected. An aperture at the top of the window, covered with wire-gauze and muslin is excellent as regards the change of air, but it may reduce the temperature of the air too much. The Professor expressed his preference for Captain Galton's method, whereby the external air is conveyed in pipes to chambers surrounding the chimney or stove, and thereby warmed before entering the room. The ventilation of sleeping-chambers is generally most neglected, through their small size and the erroneous idea that a fireplace is sufficient, even when there is no fire, to create a draught. It is essential that there be a distinct aperture for the inlet of the outer air, or of the air from other parts of the house. An open window can be seldom endured in the night in this country; but a hole in the top or bottom of the door, or in the wall above the door, can always be borne, if it be covered with wire gauze to diffuse the air and prevent draught.

EXTINCT REPTILES AND THEIR TIMES.

Professor Duncan, M.D., F.R.S., began his fourth lecture on Paleontology, on Thursday week, with details of the structure of the iguanodon, the great lizard with birdlike combinations, whose remains have been so abundantly found in the clay and sand of the Wealden of Sussex, together with impressions of the three toes on its hind foot. It was probably harmless and herbivorous, and kangaroo-like in its movements. Some remarkable contemporaries of the iguanodon, belonging to the same intercalary group of dinosaurs, were next considered, these being the hylæosaurus, or wood-lizard, and the megalosaurus, or great lizard, both possessing reptilian and ornithic characters. The former had a defensive crest running along its back, and also scales, and its teeth show it to have been a vegetable feeder; while the megalosaurus, with its massive head and huge lacertilian teeth, was doubtless carnivorous, and the terror of its neighbours. The extinction of this group, and the presence of numerous jaws of small marsupials in the Wealden-Purbeck deposits, were referred to changes in the physical geography of the very limited delta of the great river of the age. The Professor then explained how the crust movements which terminated the marine deposits of the preceding (Jurassic) age, the condition of the old land-surface of the Purbeck, and the oscillations which prevailed during its deposition had influenced the distribution of animal forms. Finally, the subsidence of the whole district let in the sea, and its deposits gradually covered up the Wealden—which, indeed, was a very small spot on the world's surface, though it contained such a large amount of animal life. A corresponding land-surface which existed long before the Wealden, in the midst of the Jurassic coral sea, was pointed out to have been formed at Stonesfield, in Oxfordshire. The remarkable mammalian fauna there found, so marsupial and Australian in its character, was accompanied by sharks and shells with corresponding affinities; and the flora was proved to have been southern also. Dwelling in the surrounding sea were the great fish-lizard (ichthyosaurus), a large predaceous creature, which may have spouted like the whale; and the plesiosaurus, which possessed the head of a lizard, the teeth of a crocodile, an enormously long neck, a trunk and tail like an ordinary quadruped, and the ribs of a chameleon. By means of its paddles, like those of a whale, it probably gained its living on the sea-shore. The pterodactyle, a flying saurian, was the last creature described, and the lecture concluded with comments on the geological history of the time.

ANALOGIES OF THE HEART AND THE STEAM-ENGINE.

Alfred H. Garrod, Esq., at the Friday evening meeting, on the 6th inst., began his discourse by stating that the sphygmograph, invented by Marey to describe the state of the pulse, had not yet been sufficiently appreciated as a method of research. In every maintained circulation, like that of the blood, two points have to be considered—one being the action of the pump itself and its adjuncts, such as the valves and piston; the other, the forces which sustain the action. To the further elucidation of the former most physiologists have given attention; yet the latter is of primary importance, and much information respecting it may be learned by means of the sphygmograph trace. In many engines that do work, such as pumping, there is no arrangement by which the intensity of the source of heat which supplies the boiler is capable of modifying itself, according to the work required of it. In the locomotive the waste-steam pipe, by opening into the chimney of the furnace, to a certain extent varies the draught, according to the amount of work that is being done. In this case, however, there is a great waste of heat, and it is necessary, in looking for a more economical employment of fuel, to find an instrument of different construction. Mr. Garrod then showed by experiments how it is possible to construct a steam-engine in which efficiency for doing work shall vary with the work to be done. A small high-pressure steam-pump was made to pump coal gas into an elastic bag with tubes, one of which led into an empty gas-bag and another to the gas-lamp which heated the boiler. The leakage into the gas-bag could be regulated by a tap, and it was made evident that the more ready was the flow through the tap the less was the pressure in the elastic bag, and therefore the less the size of the flame which supplied the boiler. When the flow through the tap was diminished the pressure in the elastic became greater, and when the flame heating the boiler increased the steam pressure became greater. It was then shown that the same principle of action is to be seen in the working of the heart. First, the anatomical arrangement of the heart shows that it is quite possible; as the coronary vessels, which convey the blood to the heart, are direct branches of the aorta itself. Secondly, the sphygmograph traces prove that such is the case. In it each pulse gives indications of the duration of the systole (contraction), and of the diastole (dilatation) of the ventricles, and it is as easy to measure the length of the one as of the other. By so doing it is found that the pulse-rate is not dependent on the pressure of the blood in the arteries; consequently, the time occupied by the heart in performing each systolic act is independent of the amount of work that is done in that act. This can only be explained on the assumption that the nutrition of the muscular walls of the heart varies directly with the blood-pressure in the arteries, just in the same way that the size of the flame of the lamp employed in the engine above described varies with the pressure that has to be attained in the bellows of the pump. It was shown that still more is to be learned from the sphygmograph trace. The time of diastole (that is, the time during which the coronary arteries are supplying blood to the cardiac tissue) can be proved to influence the length of the systole. For, though the length of the systole in the arteries does not vary for any given rapidity of pulse, yet it varies as the cube-root of the pulse-rate. This law, when taken in connection with another law respecting the length of the cardiac systole itself, enables it to be proved that the nutrition of the walls of the heart varies (approximately, at least) as the square root of the time of repose between each beat. These principles were fully illustrated by experiments. Dr. Warren De la Rue, F.R.S., Vice-President, was in the chair.

KANT'S MENTAL AND MORAL PHILOSOPHY.

Professor Croom Robertson began his fourth and concluding lecture on Kant's Critical Philosophy, on Saturday last, by distinguishing the positive and negative sides of the results arrived at by Kant in his "Transcendental Analytic." On the positive side an exposition was given of true objective knowledge. Negatively, the result was that knowledge is confined to phenomena—to matter of actual or possible experience. Phenomena, no doubt, portended the existence of Noumena or things in themselves; but, as these are given in no experience, there can be no knowledge of them. Metaphysics is impossible as a science of such hyper-physical entities: yet metaphysics, though declared impossible as a science of the supernatural, is a natural and ineradicable tendency of human reason. It is necessary to subject the faculty of reason (as opposed to understanding) to express criticism, in order that the ground of this natural division of knowledge may be, once for all, discovered. Reason has the function, with respect to knowledge attained by understanding, that it brings this to the highest unity. This it does through the general notions, called ideas, which Kant connected with the logical forms of syllogism, but which he found in previous metaphysical systems, especially the system of Wolff:—Soul, World (Cosmos), God. Kant showed how through each of these ideas Speculative Reason gives only an illusion of knowledge. The Professor followed Kant through the Paralogisms of Pure Reason in regard to Soul; the Antinomy of Pure Reason, as to the nature of the World as a whole beyond experience; and the Ideal of Pure Reason, which made everything dependent on a most real and perfect Being, God. The ideas have, in truth, only a regulative and not a constitutive function, as regards our knowledge. Of immortality, free-will, and God there can be, according to Kant, neither theoretic proof nor disproof. It was then indicated how Kant was able to establish all three as necessary postulates of Practical Reason for the explanation of the fact of moral duty. Towards the close of the lecture the Professor dwelt upon the unsatisfactory nature of Kant's doctrine of the Noumenon. He said that Kant has decisively shown that verifiable knowledge is confined to the region of phenomenal experience, and has thus done a work in the interests of science which can never lose its value. In his analysis of knowledge he has raised questions which yet await their answer from psychology; and it greatly concerns English psychology of the present day to give heed to them.

PROPAGATION OF DISEASE THROUGH THE AIR.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., began his fifth and concluding lecture on Respiration, on Tuesday last, by describing the matters suspended in the air we breathe, including not only inorganic and dead organic substances, but also living amœbiform particles of protoplasm resembling the germs or spores of fungi and the minute animalcules named bacteria. By the passage of these through the air, he said, disease may be propagated. Like the seeds of plants, these germs can retain their vitality for a long period, and only spring into activity when they meet with suitable conditions. In relation to this, the Professor described the decomposition of a piece of meat and the early presence of bacteria, saying that the more rapid putrefaction of a piece of fresh meat brought into the tainted atmosphere was probably due to the increased numbers of the animalcule. He stated that the propagation of smallpox, fevers, and other diseases is now attributed to poison in the form of particles of bacterial protoplasm being carried through the atmosphere; and he stated that sheep have taken smallpox through breathing air passed through clothing which had been worn by persons having that disease. The poison is probably solid, as it clings to the walls of rooms, and clothing. From these germs, of whose nature we have as yet no positive knowledge, although always floating in the air and entering our lungs, we probably derive no harm in general, because they are either not sufficient in number, or because our organism is in a condition unfavourable to their development. As a precaution when entering contaminated atmospheres, the Professor alluded to cotton-wool respirators; but he was not sure whether bacteria and other germs would be intercepted by them, and he suggested their trial, and said it would be interesting to know whether the germs are killed by the action of chlorine, sulphurous acid, or ozone. The latter part of the lecture was devoted to the structure and office of the skin and its appendages, including its respiratory function and its regulation of the temperature by sensible and insensible perspiration. Death, which is the result of varnishing the skin, he attributed to the suppression of that organ's excretory function rather than to the loss of heat.

Professor Tyndall will, on Tuesday next, begin a course of six lectures on Liquids and Gases. The discourse next Friday evening will be given by Mr. Vernon Heath on the Autotype and other Photographic Processes and Discoveries.

Colonel F. R. Elrington, C.B., commanding the brigade dépôt at Winchester, and Colonel W. Gordon, C.B., commanding the brigade dépôt at Hamilton, have been selected to receive distinguished-service rewards.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE EARL OF HOWTH, K.P.

The Right Hon. Thomas, third Earl of Howth and Viscount St. Lawrence, and twenty-ninth Baron of Howth in the Peerage of Ireland, Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Dublin, Vice Admiral of Leinster, and a Knight of St. Patrick, died at Cannes on the 4th inst. He was born, Aug. 16, 1803, the only son of William, second Earl, by Margaret, his second countess, daughter of William Burke, Esq., of Keelogue, in the county of Galway, and succeeded to his Peerage honours at the death of his father, April 4, 1822. His Lordship married, first, Jan. 9, 1826, Lady Emily de Burgh, daughter of John Thomas, thirteenth Earl of Clanricarde; and, secondly, Feb. 27, 1851, Henrietta Digby, only child of Peter Barfoot, Esq., of Landenstown, in the county of Kildare, and Midlington House, Hants. By his first wife (who died Dec. 5, 1842) he had one son, William Ulrick Tristram, Viscount St. Lawrence, born June 25, 1827, whose election as M.P. for Galway is rendered null by his accession to the Irish Peerage, and four daughters, Lady Emily Gaisford, who died in 1868, Lady Catherine Wheble, Lady Mary St. Lawrence, who died, unmarried, in 1864, and Lady Margaret Domville. By his second wife Lord Howth leaves, with two daughters, Henrietta and Geraldine, one son, Thomas Kenelm Digby, born in 1855, who was one of the Prince of Wales's pages at his Royal Highness's memorable installation as a Knight of St. Patrick. The family of St. Lawrence is of great antiquity and historical eminence. There exists on the Patent Rolls in Ireland an entry to the effect that the lands of Howth were granted to "Almerico Sancto Laurentio" by King John.

LORD ST. JOHN.

The Right Hon. Andrew Beauchamp, fourteenth Lord St. John, of Bletsho, and a Baronet, died, on the 27th ult., at Melchbourne Park, his seat near Higham-Ferrers, Bedfordshire. His Lordship was born Nov. 8, 1811, the only son of St. Andrew, thirteenth Baron St. John, by Louisa, his first wife, eldest daughter of Sir Charles William Rouse Broughton, Bart., and represented the senior branch of the very ancient family of St. John, of Staunton St. John, Oxfordshire. He succeeded to the family honours at the decease of his father, Oct. 15, 1817; and married, March 12, 1838, Eleanor, second daughter of Vice-Admiral Sir Richard Hussey Hussey, K.C.B., of Wood Walton, Huntingdonshire, by whom he leaves three sons and two daughters. Of the former, the eldest, St. Andrew, now fifteenth Lord St. John, was born Oct. 5, 1840; and married, April 25, 1868, Ellen Georgiana, youngest daughter of Edward Senior, Esq. The late Lord St. John, who was D.L. for Bucks, possessed considerable Church patronage.

LORD COLONSAY.

The Right Hon. Duncan McNeill, Baron Colonsay, of Colonsay and Oronsay, in the county of Argyll, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, P.C. and LL.D., died at Pau, Pyrenées, France, on the 31st ultimo. This able lawyer and eminent Judge was born in 1793, the second son of John McNeill, Esq., of Colonsay, and derived his descent from a younger branch of the old Northern family of MacNeill of Taynish. His education he received at St. Andrews, where he was highly distinguished, and he completed his studies at Edinburgh. In 1816 he was admitted to the Scottish Bar, and in 1824 was appointed Sheriff of Perthshire. From 1834 to 1835 he was Solicitor-General for Scotland, and again from 1841 to 1842. In the latter year he succeeded to the important office of Lord Advocate, which he held until the resignation of Sir Robert Peel's Government in 1846. In 1843 he was chosen Dean of the Faculty of Advocates; in 1851, a Lord of Session and Justiciary; and in 1852, Lord Justice-General. He retired finally in 1867, and was raised to the Peerage in that year. He had sat in the House of Commons for Argyllshire from 1843 to 1851. Of late years Lord Colonsay took a full share of legal occupation as one of the Law Lords. He has died unmarried, and with him his peerage expires.

SIR W. P. CAREW, BART.

Sir Walter Palk Carew, eighth Baronet, of Hacombe, in the county of Devon, High Sheriff in 1846, died, at Marley House, near Totnes, on the 27th ult. He was born July 2, 1807, the eldest son of Sir Henry Carew, seventh Baronet, by Elizabeth, his wife, only daughter of Walter Palk, Esq., of Marley, in the county of Devon; and was the representative of a distinguished line of the great house of Carew. He succeeded his father in 1830, and married, Jan. 23, 1837, Anne Frances, eldest daughter of Major-General Taylor, C.B., of Ogwell House, Devon, by whom he had issue one son, Walter Palk, Captain in the Royal Horse Guards, who died without issue, June 14, 1873; and two daughters, Elizabeth Anne and Beatrix.

GEORGE HENRY WARRINGTON CAREW.

This gentleman, a magistrate and deputy lieutenant for Somerset, late a Captain in the 1st (King's) Dragoon Guards, and Lieutenant Colonel 2nd Battalion Somerset Rifle Volunteers, died at his seat, Crowcombe Court, Somerset, on the 24th ult., in the forty-fourth year of his age. He succeeded to the Carew family estates—the barony and castle of Carew, in Pembroke; and Crowcombe Court, Somerset—and to the Warrington family estate of Pentrepant, Salop, on the death of his father,

A small quarto volume, containing twenty-five curious liturgical tracts, issued during the reigns of Edward VI., Elizabeth, and James I., among which was included "Psalms and Hymns of Praier and Thanksgiving, made by William Barlowe, Bishop of Lincolne," privately printed, 1613, has been sold by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson for £72.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1874.

The latest accounts from the Gold Coast leave little room for doubt that the Ashantee War has by this time been brought to a successful conclusion. When they were sent off Sir Garnet Wolseley was within thirty miles of Coomassie, awaiting only the bringing up of supplies—one of the chief difficulties with which he has had to contend. King Koffee Kalcalli had sent all his European captives into the General's camp, and, no doubt with a view of preventing a march of the British troops upon his capital, had intimated his readiness to accede to proffered terms of peace. The King was evidently under sore discouragement. The auguries in which he and his people put great faith had steadily pointed to ill fortune. The army which had ravaged the country beyond the Prah had been dispersed. The mortal remains of a large number of Ashantee chiefs had been borne to their last resting-place through the streets of Coomassie. Sir Garnet had met with no military obstruction, scarcely of any signs of it, from the hour of his crossing into the enemy's territory. The Ashantees were known to be deficient in ammunition. Every family in the capital was reported by prisoners to be making slugs out of stones. The general conviction among the officers and press correspondents in Sir Garnet's camp was that no fighting of any serious importance was to be anticipated. The date was fixed for entering into, and taking possession of, Coomassie. It was confidently anticipated that the expedition would be at an end and the British troops re-embarked for home by the beginning of March. Of course, it has to be borne in mind that conjectures are not equivalent to facts. "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." Unforeseen events may upset even the best-founded calculations. But, taking a reasonable view of the data in our possession, we think we are warranted in assuming that by this time the war is over, and that the Ashantee King has acknowledged, in some way which his subjects are not likely to misinterpret, the superiority of British power.

On this assumption one cannot but reflect upon the mischance of the outgoing Ministry. Whatever may have been the burden of their responsibility in sending out the military expedition to the Gold Coast, there cannot be two opinions as to the completeness and efficiency of their preparations to make it successful. In some few respects they may have been misled by the information which they had collected; and, in some few, singular good luck may have contributed to the results achieved. But, on the whole, the official authorities charged with the conduct of this enterprise are fairly entitled to the credit of so adapting the means to the end as to have brought to a close what appeared to be a somewhat doubtful and highly dangerous expedition within a limited space of time and without any great sacrifice of life. Their arrangements for the health of the troops in a deadly climate have been admirable. Their economy of European labour and life has proved the exceeding care and scientific ingenuity with which all their movements were planned. No doubt a large sum of money has been spent, and the people of this country will have to pay the bill. But if the assurances of members of the late Cabinet may be trusted, and if any judgment can be formed from the materials within reach, the affair, even financially considered, can hardly be regarded as very serious, and the administrative ability displayed may well satisfy the demands of the public.

The country at large will be exceedingly well pleased with this early and honourable termination of the dispute. It can hardly, however, be other than matter of regret that they who have so gallantly sustained the weight of responsibility should be deprived of the due reward of their success. We know not how far the news which has just arrived might have favoured the Cabinet now out of office if it had reached this country at a date prior to the general election. Our opinion is that it would not have made much difference in the decision of Parliamentary constituencies. Here and there it may have turned the scale to the advantage of Liberal candidates. But the Ashantee War never took very deep hold upon the interests of electors. Had Parliament met according to original appointment, it might have furnished a topic for keen debate, and, perhaps, for a close division. It was, however, little thought of, or, when thought of, speedily dismissed, amid the turmoil of a sudden electoral struggle. The late Administration will gain nothing from the success of Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition. The matter, it is to be feared, will be summarily set aside and forgotten. Even the political benefit which might have been extracted from it in the form of some general rules for the government of our relations to neighbouring barbarous tribes will perhaps be lost, or at any rate incompletely realised. England will have saved her reputation, but beyond this she will probably have derived no good, material or moral, from the war with Ashantee.

We should rejoice to find that in this latter conjecture we have been mistaken. The incoming Administration would do well, we think, to make the most which can be made for the future wellbeing of the United Kingdom by treating the war on the Gold Coast as a basis upon which to found a more definite policy for the government of our colonial settlements. A searching inquiry into the causes in which the war originated; a thorough investigation into the nature and limits of the powers intrusted to dependent Colonial Governments; an intelligible exposition of the objects at which we are aiming, or should aim, in assuming a quasi-protectorate of barbarous tribes; and the drawing of a clear line of demarcation between the duties imposed upon us by imperative interests, and those which we occasionally undertake for ideal and romantic ends, would, perhaps, be the best compensation which the people of England can expect from the anxiety, trouble, and expense to which they have been put by the wanton invasion of Fantee territory by King Koffee Kalcalli. Whosoever may succeed to the office of Colonial Minister will do a service to his country by moving for a Parliamentary Committee, or by appointing a Royal Commission, for the purpose of passing in review the whole train of occurrences connected with the Ashantee War, and of founding upon it well-considered advice tending to obviate any such misfortune in future. We ought not to be exposed to the possibility of being dragged into inglorious and expensive conflicts with semi-civilised nations, owing to the uncertain character of our policy in regard to them, or to the rash or mistaken ideas and impulses of the governors of our foreign settlements. We should distinctly know what we are about. Our Administration at home should be held definitively responsible for all wars, "little" or great, in which we become involved; and, above all, our Colonial Office for the time being should clearly understand the policy by which its officers are to be guided in forming, maintaining, or breaking off relations with those barbarous races and tribes of the human family to which our commerce may extend, but over which we can exercise no direct civilising control.

The vacancy in the Council of India caused by this appointment has been filled by the selection of Sir George Campbell, the present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, for a seat in that body.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

The Calcutta telegrams of Wednesday last inform us that no cases of actual starving to death have yet been reported in Bengal; but the people suffer greatly from want of food, and many are seen to be sadly emaciated. The administration of charitable relief by the Government officials has been commenced in the provinces of Tirhoot, Bhagulpore, Mongheer, and Purneah. Two hundred thousand persons are employed on the public relief works, besides many employed, with the aid of loans, by private landowners. The Government had ordered irrigation works in Tirhoot and a tramway of forty-four miles. There has been more rain, which has done great good to the crops throughout the country; but the prices of rice and other grain are steadily rising at Calcutta. The railway carries 2500 tons daily, and five steam-boats bring grain from Patna. The Governor-General, Lord Northbrook, has appointed Mr. Inglis at Allahabad to organise relief arrangements, as Sir R. Temple is doing in Bengal; and Mr. Simson at Benares, to inspect the condition of the provinces. The relief committees are instructed not rigidly to enforce the labour test. It is considered that South Behar will be saved the worst effects of famine. North Behar will require 180,000 tons to June 15, which will be supplied from the Government stores at Calcutta.

An influential City meeting was held on Monday, at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, to promote the subscription for the relief of the famine sufferers in Bengal. The Queen had already subscribed £1000 to the Calcutta fund, and now sent a letter, written by her order, to announce her patronage of the city of London fund. Miss Nightingale sent £100, through Sir Bartle Frere. Lord Lawrence was the leading speaker at this meeting; he advised that the money raised here should be sent out to the Government of India, to be used as that Government might think advisable. He was sure that Lord Northbrook would use it to the best advantage, as Lord Mayo had done on a similar occasion. The Hon. Robert Bourke, M.P., and Mr. Nathan de Rothschild, M.P., also spoke at the meeting. The executive committee had a meeting next day, and resolved to send out £10,000 to the Calcutta Relief Committee. The Lord Mayor has addressed a circular to all the municipalities in the United Kingdom asking their co-operation in a national effort.

The scene delineated in our front page Engraving is an illustration of the mode in which the Hindoo people may be seen, upon any occasion of great prevailing distress, to implore the aid of one of their deities. This illustration is drawn by an Artist who has travelled and resided in India, and has studied the Indian forms and ideas of religion. The idol in the form of a bull is called Nandi, and is the Vahan or vehicle ridden by Siva or Maha-Deo, one of the three original divinities, at once the destroyer and producer of life. Every one of the gods—and there are thirty-two millions of them—has a vahan, upon which he or she is supposed to ride. Nandi, the ox, bull, or cow, as the vahan or bearer of the Maha-Deo, is a great object of adoration. This bull is the type of justice, "whose body is Parameswarra, and whose every joint is virtue;" his three horns are the three Vedas or Bibles, and his tail ends where Adharma or injustice begins. It will not escape the reader's memory that the bull was worshipped also in Egypt and Assyria. In the Mithraic sculptures the bull is represented as being sacrificed. But what is sacrificed in one religion becomes in another religion an animal too sacred to be killed, or even a god. No Hindoo, though dying of starvation, would kill an ox, and when the Europeans first entered this country they were denied the use of beef. The Hindoos appeal to the bull for the relief of their wants because they regard that beast as the emblem of the reproductive power in nature. The source of the Ganges, high amidst the snowy peaks of the Himalayas, is considered the head of Nandi. It is called Guy ke Mookh, or the Cow's Mouth. That great river, which along a thousand miles and more is worshipped for its fertilising power, is believed to be a gift of the gods through Nandi. Hence, in seasons of drought and famine the people turn to this idol and pray to it for that life-giving moisture without which the world becomes a desert and the abode of death. A figure of the Bull Nandi is to be found in all the Brahminical temples; one of colossal size, and ancient, is placed in the inclosure of the Golden Temple at Benares, which is dedicated to Maha-Deo. The bull is figured with ornamental trappings and with a bell hung from his neck. In the scene our Artist has drawn we see people, young and old, before this idol in agonies of prayer. The mother, in despair, holds up her bucha or child to Nandi, and begs for kana—that is, food. She exclaims, "Hum burra bhookha hai! (We are very hungry!) Humara bucha burra bhookha hai! (My child is very hungry!) Hum log morghia hai! (Our people are dead!)" Such are the cries of lamentation that may too soon be heard in India. The Bull Nandi may be deaf to them, but not the English John Bull.

A LECTURE AT THE CHARTERHOUSE.

The pencil of that famous and popular English artist, Mr. George Cruikshank, who has amused and instructed successive generations of his countrymen during more than sixty years, is still held by him with a firm hand and guided by a keen eye. It has drawn for us this week's illustration of a scene the other day at the Charterhouse, when the first of a course of lectures, for the entertainment of the Brethren in residence there, was delivered by Dr. B. W. Richardson, F.R.S. We know the respectful interest with which the public is accustomed to regard those secluded pensioners of a venerable and beneficent institution. Our sympathy with the black-gowned Brotherhood was greatly enhanced by Thackeray's touching description of good Colonel Newcome's retirement from the world. For this reason, and for the interest that belongs to such a labour of love as the drawing contributed by Mr. George Cruikshank, we have thought it worth an Engraving. The subject of Dr. Richardson's lecture was the scientific researches of Stephen Gray, F.R.S., who was one of the Brethren of the Charterhouse from 1719 to 1735-6. He was one of the most remarkable men of the last century, and did a great deal for the promotion of electrical science in its early days. Dr. Richardson has devoted much time to collecting the works of Gray, and has rescued his name from comparative obscurity to place him in a high rank among the benefactors of mankind.

But little is known of the personal history of Stephen Gray. He seems to have been following astronomical pursuits at Canterbury from 1692 to 1706; then he disappears till he is found in the Charterhouse in 1719. In 1720 his first paper on electricity appears at the Royal Society. After a lapse of ten years he reappears at the Royal Society again on electricity, and continues with reports on his original work from time to time in the succeeding five years. For his work the society award him the first Copley medal in 1731, repeat the award in 1732, and elect him a fellow. He is still busy at his work almost to the moment of his death, on Feb. 15, 1736—138 years ago.

Dr. Richardson's lecture was purely a series of experimental demonstrations. It was a mere repetition of the processes of investigation performed by Stephen Gray himself. All these experiments were carried on with the most simple apparatus. A glass tube 3 ft. 6 in. long and a little more than an inch in diameter, a rubber, a fir stick, a fishing-rod, a metal rod, an ivory ball, a length of packthread, a cake or two of resin, a wooden pole, some silken thread, a few down feathers, and some brass leaf, were the greater portion of the instruments for research at the command of Gray. With these limited means that original investigator so advanced the science of electricity that, without him, the bases on which the science has been so rapidly developed might have remained to this day unknown. Gray discovered that electricity could be communicated from certain substances to other substances; that it could be conducted through various media, as through packthread and metallic wires; and that it could be insulated, and, when perfectly insulated, could be conveyed through proper conductors for long distances, and practically instantaneously. The original experiment proving these facts of insulation and conduction was demonstrated by the lecturer; and a beautifully artistic diagram, by Mr. George Cruikshank, illustrating Gray's great experiment of sending an electrical communication 650 ft. through a pack thread, insulated on silk bearers, supported by poles, added much to the interest of this part of the lecture. This first great event in electrical communication occurred on July 14, 1729, in the grounds of Granville Wheeler, Esq., at Otterden, near Faversham, in Kent. The electricity was excited on a glass tube; a piece of pack-thread attached to the excited tube was the conductor; the silk bands stretched across the poles were the insulators; and an ivory ball, attached to the other extreme end of the pack-thread and suspended on silk across one of the windows of the house, was the terminal at which the electric communication was taken, by the simple process of presenting brass leaf to the ball, and observing the attraction that followed when the tube was excited.

Our illustration shows how an experiment was made by Gray with a soap bubble. A bubble is blown from a common pipe, the pipe is insulated by a silk band, and when an excited glass tube is brought near the pipe, the bubble has an electric attraction.

The Dowager Marchioness of Westminster has presented a donation of £100 to the Cabmen's Benevolent Association, Soho-square, as a contribution to the annuity fund for aged or infirm cabmen who are members of the society.

A banquet was given and presentation made, last week, at the Pier Pavilion, to Mr. T. Ross, who has been five times Mayor of Hastings. The testimonial, which was subscribed for by all classes in the town, consisted of a massive silver salver, together with a tea and coffee service.

M. Louis Rozsavolgyi, jeweller, was, on Tuesday, fined £5 and costs for pledging a brooch value £200, the property of a gentleman named La Jeunesse, by whom it had been intrusted to him to be made up. The magistrates acquitted the pawn-brokers of all blame, and ordered the brooch to be restored to the owner.

Against the protest of many influential friends, the shareholders in the Civil Service Supply Association have, by a large majority, agreed that the profits of the business be divided, instead of being applied, as heretofore, to reducing the prices of the commodities sold. Several gentlemen of note have in consequence retired from the committee of management.

The thirty-second annual ball of the friends of the French Benevolent Society took place, on Monday, at Willis's Rooms. A large number of ladies and gentlemen, including the Comte de Paris and M. Garrard (Minister Plenipotentiary of the French Embassy), were present. The institution was founded in 1842, by the Comte de St. Aulière, for the purpose of affording temporary relief to distressed foreigners in search of employment. During the evening a number of presents, received from influential supporters of the charity, were disposed of by means of a lottery held in one of the ante-rooms.

Last week 2363 births and 1597 deaths were registered in London. After making due allowance for increase of population, the births were 187 and the deaths 90 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 4 from smallpox, 53 from measles, 14 from scarlet fever, 4 from diphtheria, 71 from whooping-cough, 31 from different forms of fever, and 7 from diarrhoea. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been but 464 and 512, further rose last week to 607, and exceeded the corrected weekly average by 40; 274 resulted from bronchitis, 177 from phthisis, 103 from pneumonia, and 20 from asthma. The fatal cases of pneumonia showed the largest proportion: excess. Different forms of violence caused 52 deaths: 44 were the result of negligence or accident, including 18 from fractures and contusions, 8 from burns and scalds, 5 from wounds, and 10 from suffocation. Four cases of suicide and 2 of infanticide were registered.

THE LATE BARON MEYER DE ROTHSCHILD.

THE LATE MR. HERMAN MERIVALE, C.B.

THE LATE BARON MEYER DE ROTHSCHILD.

We recorded the death of Baron Meyer Amschel de Rothschild last week. He was a younger brother of Baron Lionel de Rothschild, late M.P. for the city of London, and of Sir Anthony Rothschild, Bart. (also a Baron of the Austrian Empire), who was sometime M.P. for Aylesbury. Their father was Baron Nathan Meyer de Rothschild, of Frankfort, who was the founder of the great London banking house which is conducted by these brothers. The late Baron Meyer Amschel de Rothschild was in the fifty-sixth year of his age. He had sat in Parliament for Hythe since 1859. His country house at Mentmore, in Buckinghamshire, was famous for its collection of works of art. He was also an enterprising patron of horse-racing, and won the Derby, the Oaks, and the St. Leger in the same year. We have engraved his portrait from a photograph by Messrs. Barraud and Jerrard, Gloucester-place, Portman-square.

THE LATE MR. HERMAN MERIVALE.

The death of this gentleman was mentioned in our obituary last week. He was a son of Mr. Commissioner Merivale, formerly Judge of the Exeter Court of Bankruptcy. He was educated at Harrow, and at Oriel College and Trinity College, Oxford, where he gained high University honours. He practised at the Bar some years on the Western Circuit, and was the second occupant of Mr. Henry Drummond's chair of political economy at Oxford. His lectures in this professorship were afterwards developed in a work on colonisation, which led to his appointment by Lord Grey as Under-Secretary for the Colonies, in 1847. In 1858, at the request of Sir C. Wood, he was appointed Permanent Under-Secretary at the India Office, where his remaining official years were passed. His contributions to historical and political literature are of considerable value. The biography of Sir Henry Lawrence, begun by Sir Herbert Edwards, was completed by Mr. Herman Merivale. He also wrote the "Life of Sir Philip Francis." Mr. Merivale was sixty-eight years of age. The portrait we give of him is from a photograph by Mr. Dickinson, of New Bond-street.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, Feb. 19.

The members of the Extreme Left of the Assembly will interpellate the Government this afternoon concerning the application of the obnoxious new municipal law, and we are promised another disorderly Parliamentary mêlée such as the whilom theatre of the Palais de Versailles so often witnesses. It is generally believed that the Cabinet will come out of the struggle victorious, but badly bruised. The manner in which the Loi des Maires has been carried into effect has excited general indignation throughout the country. Upright and irreproachable Republican functionaries have been removed from their posts without the slightest pretext, and replaced by Royalists and Bonapartists, whose appointment presages a return to the corrupt practices of the Empire, and many of them already openly announce their intention of compelling their fellow-citizens to return the reactionary candidates at the next elections. Innumerable protestations flow in from every department; the municipal councils are preparing for open war with the delegates of the Government; but the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues pursue their course heedless of the conflagration they have kindled, which threatens to become very general. They may obtain the support of the Assembly, but they will never gain the confidence of the country, and their arbitrary policy will eventually bring them the reward they have done their best to deserve.

The protracted debate on the new taxes came to a close last Saturday, the Assembly having agreed to increase the duty on sugar, to reimpose the duty on salt, and to tax pianos and cheques. The elections of the department of Vaulx are convoked for March 1 to elect a deputy, and M. Ledru Rollin has formally come forward as the Republican candidate. The event has caused a considerable sensation, especially in Ministerial circles, the Government straining every nerve to prevent the election of the veteran democrat. It is rumoured that M. Gambetta is not particularly pleased with M. Ledru Rollin's candidature, being jealous of any ascendancy which the latter, if elected, would be likely to gain over the extreme Republican party. M. John Lemoine has been urging on the Government, in the columns of the Journal des Débats, the withdrawal of the French frigate Orénoque from Civita Vecchia.

The Duc de Padoue, who is endeavouring to organise a formidable Bonapartist demonstration on the occasion of the Prince Imperial's ensuing birthday, has been soundly taken to task by the Journal de Paris, which points out, sensibly enough, that the Second Empire lost France Alsace and Lorraine, and that the third would most probably lose it France-Conte.

The Carnival, which is just over, has been unusually dull and gloomy this year. The rain poured incessantly during the three days—Les jours gras, as our French neighbours call them—and the few bals masqués announced were but thinly attended. The discontinuance of the traditional bouff-gras procession after the siege dealt the Carnival a severe blow, from which it never recovered, and the recent burning of the Opera House, where it was accustomed to be celebrated with music and dancing, has been its coup-de-grâce.

A grand ball is to be given by the Parisian press in honour of Marshal MacMahon, at the Palais de l'Industrie, on March 15. The fête is to be strictly non-political, and, being especially organised with the view of giving an impetus to Parisian trade and commerce, which are sadly suffering just now, journals of all shades of opinion have given in their adhesion to the project, and between £20,000 and £30,000 have already been subscribed to carry it into effect. The gorgeous gatherings of the Tuileries and the Hôtel de Ville, under the Empire, it is said, will be eclipsed by the splendour of this fête, to which no less than 20,000 invitations will be issued.

The Paris Court of Appeal has been occupied during the last few days with an action brought by a Captain Adelbert de Bourbon, of the Dutch army, against the Count de Chambord, the object being the setting aside the certificate which records the death of Louis XVII. in the Temple. The plaintiff is none other than the son of Naundorff, the clock-maker and pseudo Duc de Normandie, whose pretensions created such a sensation some fifty years ago. He and his whole family are recognised as the descendants of Louis XVI. and Marie Antoinette in Holland, where several of them occupy State offices. M. Adelbert attends the sittings of the Court clothed in evening dress, and salutes the spectators as a King might his subjects. When he arrives at the court and when he leaves of an afternoon he is always preceded by a huissier, who makes way for him through the crowd and escorts him to his seat or to his carriage. He is not unlike Louis XVIII. in features, and one of his daughters bears a striking resemblance to Marie Antoinette. M. Jules Favre pleads his case, which revives the old story of the escape of the Dauphin from the Temple.

M. Raspail, the well-known Republican writer and physician, has been condemned to two years' imprisonment and 1000*fr.* fine, and his son to six months' imprisonment and 500*fr.* fine, for having published in the Almanach Méteorologique an apologetic history of the Commune.

ITALY.

After a warm debate in the Chamber of Deputies, the House, by a large majority, approved a motion, proceeding from the Left and Centre, and accepted by the Ministry, for passing to the discussion of the articles of the Government bill relating to the paper currency.

SPAIN.

The siege of Bilbao by the Carlists continues, and Berge is being bombarded. General Moriones appears to have effected a junction with General Primo de Rivera, and their combined forces, 6000 strong, is posted on the heights of Somorrostro. The Carlists have twenty battalions to oppose them with, but reinforcements are still being sent to Moriones.

An engagement has taken place in Cuba between 3000 of the troops and 5000 of the insurgents. The latter are said to have been defeated.

GERMANY.

When the new military law for the empire came on for discussion in the German Parliament, on Monday, Field Marshal von Moltke made a speech in defence of the measure, in which he said:—"What we acquired in the space of six months we shall have to protect by force of arms for half a century. France is imitating all the German army arrangements? How, then, can we give up what our opponents are adopting? Germany is opposed to any kind of offensive action: it is her duty to act on the defensive." Count von Moltke proceeded to enumerate the measures taken by France for increasing her armament, notwithstanding the fact that the majority of the French people were convinced of the necessity of peace. He concluded by saying:—"We have become a powerful nation, but we remain a peaceable people. We require an army, but not for purposes of conquest." The Military Bill was then referred to a committee of twenty-eight members. The Military Bill and Herr Schultze Delitzsch's motion relative to the remuneration of the members passed the third reading on Wednesday.

The fifteen deputies from Alsace-Lorraine took their seats on Monday in the German Reichstag. They entered in a body, and placed themselves on the Extreme Right, next the table of the Federal councillors. Seven of them wore clerical costume. After an unsuccessful application on Wednesday for leave to address the House in French, Herr Teusch, in the name of the deputies from Alsace-Lorraine, read a translation of his speech in support of the motion for a plebiscite in the captured province on the question of its incorporation with the German empire. The language provoked loud cries of "Shame!" and the motion was rejected by an overwhelming majority. The scene ended by the Alsatians marching out of the House in a body.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The bills announced in the Speech from the Throne respecting a reform in the system of taxation were introduced, on the 13th, in the Chamber of Deputies of the Austrian Reichsrath. The most essential modifications are a more graduated scale of progression in the assessment of the income tax, the taxation of funded property which has hitherto enjoyed exemption, and an extension of immunity from taxation in favour of newly-built working men's dwellings. The Ministerial bills further enact that half of the members of the commission assessing taxes be henceforth elected by the taxpayers themselves.

The Foreign Minister of Austro-Hungary has directed preparations to be made for an international congress on sanitary matters and quarantine, to which he proposes to issue invitations to the Powers.

RUSSIA.

By the arrival of the Austrian Emperor in St. Petersburg a fresh impetus has been given to the festivities of the Russian Court and capital. His Majesty arrived at St. Petersburg yesterday week. He was met at the Gatchina station by the Czar and Czarevitch, who escorted him to the city, where a splendid state reception was given him. Among the distinguished persons who joined in his welcome were the Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Arthur. The streets of St. Petersburg were festively decorated, and the two Emperors, as they drove together to the Winter Palace, were fervently cheered by the people. On his arrival at the Winter Palace he paid his respects to the Czarina, and was then conducted to the Hermitage, where the two Imperial suites were presented. The first day closed with a dinner en famille. On Saturday the Emperor paid a visit to the tomb of the late Czar, and laid upon it a wreath of laurel. Subsequently he held a diplomatic reception, which was attended by all the Foreign Princes and foreign Ministers in St. Petersburg. At night a state dinner was given by the Czarevitch, and the day concluded with a state performance at the opera. On Sunday the two Emperors amused themselves with a military parade at the Riding School. In the evening a state banquet was given at the Winter Palace, covers being laid for over seven hundred. The Czar, in proposing the health of his illustrious guest, coupled with it loving allusions to the German Emperor and Queen Victoria. The friendship of the four Sovereigns would, he declared, preserve the peace of the world. In alluding to Queen Victoria the Czar turned courteously towards the Prince of Wales, who bowed his thanks. The Emperor Francis Joseph replied that he re-echoed those gracious sentiments from the bottom of his heart. The Emperor of Austria received the members of the diplomatic body on Monday afternoon. Special audiences were given to the Ambassadors and the Austrian Minister, the other foreign representatives being received in a body. His Majesty dined with the Grand Duke Constantine and the members of his family. A ball was given by the Czarevitch, at which the Emperor Francis Joseph and the distinguished foreign visitors were present. On Tuesday the Austrian Emperor received a deputation from the inhabitants of St. Petersburg and Odessa, who presented an address. The Emperor, together with the Russian officers in attendance upon him and the members of the Legation, dined at four o'clock, at the residence of the Austrian Minister. The Czar has treated his Imperial and Royal guests to a bear-hunt. A large party, including the Prince of Wales and the Grand Dukes, travelled by special train to Mali Wicher on Tuesday evening, and drove next morning to the Imperial forest, about twelve miles distant. Two bears were bagged, one of which fell to the rifle of the Emperor of Austria. The party returned on Wednesday night to St. Petersburg, and was present at a ball given by the club of the nobility.

The Globe correspondent at Berlin states that the Czar will leave St. Petersburg at the beginning of the Russian April, and will be absent about a month. His Imperial Majesty will stay in Berlin two days and in England eight days. He will also attend the wedding of the Grand Duchess Vera of Stutgardt. Privy Councillor de Novikoff, the Russian Envoy to the Court of Vienna, and Baron de Langenau, the Austrian Envoy to this capital, have been raised to the rank of Ambassadors. Adjutant-General Count Lüders, one of the Russian heroes of the Crimean campaign, has died, at the age of eighty-four.

GREECE.

The Chamber of Deputies has assembled, and M. Zaimis, the candidate of the Opposition, has been elected President by 87 votes, against 71 obtained by the Ministerial candidate.

TURKEY.

The Grand Vizier has been removed from office, and Hussein Pasha appointed in his place. The new Grand Vizier at the same time retains his present post of War Minister. Edhem Pasha, a member of the Imperial Council, has been raised to the Ministry of Public Works. Ismail Pasha, who hitherto occupied that post, has been appointed Prefect of Constantinople.

A brilliant ball was given, on Tuesday evening, at the French Embassy, Constantinople, at which the Grand Vizier, the Ministers, and many of the foreign residents were present. There were altogether 500 guests.

The South Australian Parliament has voted £20,000 for emigration during the current half-year. We learn from Melbourne that Colonel Egerton Warburton has reached Perth, in Western Australia, overland from Adelaide, which latter place he left about a year ago. He has explored parts of Western Australia previously unknown.

THE NEW PARLIAMENT.

The following is a List of the Members who have been returned to serve in the next Parliament, distinguished as Conservatives, Liberals, and Home Rulers. Those who did not sit in the late Parliament are indicated by an asterisk. The Conservatives returned are 351, and the Liberals, counting Home Rulers, 302; but this number includes a double return for Athlone.

The new volumes of Debrett's Illustrated Peerage and Illustrated Baronetage and Knightage for the year 1874 have been published in good time for the needful use of their information during the season of Parliamentary and fashionable society now commencing. Their records of living personal and family connections of the aristocracy have been corrected to the 20th ult. The compact single volume of Dod's Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage (with Courtesy Titles) of Great Britain and Ireland is also ready, and will be found extremely serviceable. It specifies with minute precision a variety of particulars relating to birth and parentage, school and university education, professional or official employments, public services and honorary distinctions. The arrangement is very convenient for reference, and there are several treatises upon matters of precedence or etiquette.

Reference may perhaps be made cursorily to the departure of some notable members. It is believed that Mr. Adair had given up that attention to the private business of the House to which he was once devoted, so that he may not be so much missed as he would have been a year or two ago; but having until the end of last Session held so distinctive a place as Chairman of Ways and Means Mr. Bonham-Carter's disappearance will, so to speak, cause a distinctive vacuum. As an arbitrator and adviser of the House, and of late as a dangerous skirmisher on the flank of the Government of which he professed to be a follower, Mr. Bouverie was continuously prominent, and by so much will his absence be noticed by those who were his Parliamentary contemporaries. By no means in other respects a member of mark, Mr. Edgar Bowring achieved a reputation for being a most persistent sitter and the most complete vote-giver in the last Parliament; but probably in the next he will create no recollection. The departure of Mr. Jacob Bright is not of much consequence, for, though he occasionally strove, with much travail, to be original, his position in the House was of a cautious and reflected character. A dogmatic Radical who pushed himself into notoriety, Mr. Candlish has, for some seasons best known to himself, not sought re-election; while the "didactic" Mr. Rylands, who seemed to think that he was the incarnation of political and legislative wisdom, has been ousted at Warrington, and an ambitious attempt which he made on one of the divisions of Lancashire has been thoroughly defeated. In Mr. Thomas Collins the House loses one of its most jollily and good-humouredly turbulent members. Well known, certainly, but it can hardly be said charmingly known, was Mr. E. Craufurd, to whom the Ayr burghs has given his soubriquet; and the mirth of the House has suffered some eclipse by the vanishing of Mr. Delahunty, who was so very amusing

THE CHURCH OF THE ASSUMPTION, MOSCOW.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

"OTHELLO AND DESDEMONA," BY W. S. HERRICK.

FINE ARTS.

The Queen has conferred on Mr. Oswald Brierly the appointment of Marine Painter in Ordinary to her Majesty, vacant by the death of Mr. Schetky. Mr. Brierly has often made long ocean voyages in different parts of the globe, and has studied all that belongs to ships, both at sea and in the dockyards. He went to Australia in Mr. Benjamin Boyd's yacht, the Wanderer, then joined Captain Owen Stanley's naval surveying expedition in H.M.S. Rattlesnake, in the North Australian archipelago, and was afterwards in the Alexander, with Captain (now Admiral) Keppel, in various parts of the Pacific. During the Russian War Mr. Brierly was with our fleet in the Baltic, on board the St. Jeanne d'Acre, and contributed many sketches to the Illustrated London News, representing the capture of Bomarsund and other actions. He was afterwards with our Black Sea fleet, and at the siege of Sebastopol, for which he received the war medals. He attended the Royal yacht at the Spithead naval review, to make sketches by the Queen's command. In 1864 he accompanied the Duke of Edinburgh's cruise, in the Raccoon, to the coast of Norway and the Lofoden Islands. He was privileged afterwards to be one of the Duke of Edinburgh's suite on board the Galatea, commanded by his Royal Highness, in his voyages round the world. In 1869 he was attached to the suite of the Prince and Princess of Wales, in their trip up the Nile and to the Crimea. Mr. Brierly has made a large number of drawings for her Majesty and their Royal Highnesses. He has exhibited some at the rooms of the Old Water-Colour Society, which elected him a member in 1872; also at the International Exhibition. We have published engravings of several of these works.

The council of the Society of Arts have resolved to offer the society's gold and silver medals in connection with the International Exhibition of 1874. A gold and a silver medal is offered in each class, and these medals will be given for any object exhibited which, in the opinion of the council, shows paramount or very great excellence, whether in respect of the final result, the machinery or method of production, or novelty.

Mr. Mitchell, of Bond-street, has sent us three lithographs of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. The one representing the Royal pair together is likely to be the most popular.

The officers of the Print-Room at the British Museum have been lately occupied in arranging an interesting and extensive collection of studies, designs, and sketches by Hilton, which were given to the nation some time ago.

The annual Exhibition of Selected Water-Colour Drawings by Deceased and Living Artists, at Messrs. Agnew's gallery, in Waterloo-place, was opened on Monday last. The collection, though not large, attains and maintains almost throughout a very high standard of merit. The examples are, with few exceptions, of choice quality; and so widely and generally, so adequately representative are they, that the gallery affords an instructive compendium of the history of British water-colour art at its best.

Her Majesty's Commissioners for the London International Exhibition, 1874, request information as to the present possessors of pictures by the following artists:—J. Coney, who died in 1833; J. S. Cotman, in 1842; A. W. Pugin, in 1832; and F. Mackenzie, in 1842. The subjects of the pictures by these artists are for the most part architectural.

An elaborate and massive marble monument of the late Captain Vaughan, R.N., C.B., who so greatly distinguished himself in the Black Sea before Sebastopol, and more recently as chief in command of the Naval Brigade at the relief of Lucknow during the Indian Mutiny, designed by Mr. E. J. Physick, has been erected near Dublin.

The Lord Lieutenant and Countess Spencer opened the Exhibition of the Royal Hibernian Academy on Monday. Their Excellencies pronounced the Exhibition the best they had ever seen in Ireland.

A statue of John Bunyan, the author of the "Pilgrim's Progress," who was a native of Bedford, is about to be given to that town by the Duke of Bedford. The sculptor is Mr. E. J. Boehm. It has been cast in bronze by Messrs. Young and Co., of Pimlico. The figure is 10 ft. high, upon a pedestal raised 7 ft., and ornamented with four bas-reliefs of subjects from the "Pilgrim's Progress."

On March 6 next year it is intended to celebrate at Florence the 400th anniversary of the birth of Michael Angelo Buonarroti. Meanwhile, the committee appointed for the purpose of this celebration are desirous of forming as complete a catalogue as possible of the works of the great master. With this laudable object in view they appeal to English collectors for aid. The committee announce that they would be very grateful to the possessors of any drawings, terra-cottas, or other works by Michael Angelo, if those possessors would forward a list of the same to the care of the Italian Legation, London. We may add that such a catalogue of the master's acknowledged and reputed works would facilitate the production of a more critical as well as more complete account of Michael Angelo's works and life than we at present possess.

The National Picture Gallery in Berlin, after remaining for several years without any additions, has just received an accession of twenty-seven new pictures, some of them of considerable importance, the result of a Parliamentary grant of 200,000 thalers. The most interesting picture, historically considered, is a life-size painting of "Pan with Nymphs and Shepherds," by Luca Signorelli, the precursor of Michael Angelo, and whose remarkable remaining frescoes in the Cathedral of Orvieto mark a distinct step in early Italian art. The picture, which was purchased in Florence, is believed to be the only extant example of this artist in a profane subject and on canvas. Among other additions of importance are examples of Lorenzo Leonbruno, Schiavoni, Moroni, Velasquez (a fine portrait, supposed to be of Alessandro del Borro, a famous captain in the service of Ferdinand II. of Tuscany, and afterwards of Philip IV. of Spain), Nicholas Poussin, Ruysdael, and Cuyper.

One of the first acts of the Marquis de Chennevières, the new Director of Fine Arts in France, is the foundation of a new art-school, designed to be intermediate between the École des Beaux Arts (which corresponds to our Royal Academy school) and other art-schools already open in the various arrondissements of Paris. In the new school students will be taught different branches of art as applied to industry—such as painting on porcelain, painting on glass, artistic photography, copying of pictures, wood carving, &c.

Mr. Milmore, a promising young American sculptor at Rome, has executed a bust of the Pope, of which report speaks in high terms.

Both the interior and exterior of the cathedral of Strasbourg are almost entirely restored. The new Palace of Justice is completed, and the new Prefecture makes rapid progress.

A bronze statue of the German painter Cornelius, by Herr Donndorf, is to be erected at Düsseldorf.

It is announced that there will be an international exhibition at Geneva next year. The building will include a huge dome, to be the largest of its kind; and a special feature will be a colossal column in the interior, from which visitors will have a bird's-eye view of the whole of the exhibition, and a panorama of Lake Lemman, the mountains of the Jura, the Swiss Alps, and Mont Blanc. The exhibition will be close to the lake, and piers will project into the water. On these will be erected summer-houses and refreshment-rooms.

"OTHELLO AND DESDEMONA."

The picture by Mr. W. S. Herrick which we have engraved was in the last exhibition at the Royal Academy, and in the catalogue of that exhibition are quoted, in connection with the title of the picture, the words of Othello, "My life upon her faith," which serve to recall the exact moment of the tragedy here rendered so sympathetically. To realize more fully the pathetic situation, and, as certainly, the best possible commentary on the picture, we will also give a few preceding and following lines. It will be remembered that the Moor is commanded by the Duke of Venice to immediately undertake the defence of Cyprus against the Turks or "Ottomites;" that he is to start that very night; and that it has been arranged between Othello and Desdemona that she shall follow the fortunes of her lord as soon as possible. Othello is now leaving the council chamber, where he has made his noble apology for having wedded Desdemona, and he has even somewhat pacified her father, though the querulous parent cannot refrain from casting a parting reproach at his undutiful daughter. The Duke, addressing the Moor, says:—

Othello, leave some officer behind,
And he shall our commission bring to you;
With such thanks else of quality and respect
As doth import you.

Oth. Please your Grace, my ancient;
A man he is of honesty and trust;
To his conveyance I assign my wife,
With what else needful your good Grace shall think
To be sent after me.

Duke. Let it be so.
Good-night to everyone! And, noble Signior, [To Brabantio]
If you true no delighted beauty lack.
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.

1 Senator. Adieu, brave Moor! Use Desdemona well.

Brabantio. Look to her, Moor! Have a quick eye to see;

She has deceived her father, and may thee.

[Exit Duke, Senators, Officers, &c.]
Oth. My life upon her faith! Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leave to thee;
I pray thee, let thy wife attend on her,
And bring them after in the best advantage.
Come, Desdemona, I have but an hour
Of love, of worldly matter and direction,
To spend with thee: we must obey the time.

We have only to add that Mr. Herrick's picture, which has the merits of grace and nobleness of expression in a high degree, is now in the exhibition at Glasgow.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co. have just published Mr. G. A. Macfarren's new oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," in a neat, portable, large octavo volume, at the moderate price of four shillings. The successful production of the work at last year's Bristol Festival was recorded by us at the time. We lately noticed its equally favourable reception at Manchester. That these provincial successes are genuine is proved by the acceptance of the work for performance in London at the next concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society, on Feb. 27. The same firm has also issued, in similar form, Schumann's "Requiem," one of his latest works (op. 148), and containing much that is characteristic of the composer's individuality. In both these publications the vocal score is given complete, and the orchestral accompaniments are represented by a skilful adaptation for the pianoforte.

Messrs. R. Cooks and Co. are among the most plentiful providers of drawing-room music, both vocal and instrumental. Of the former kind we have from them several pleasing songs and ballads. "Lost in the Wilderness," by Franz Abt, is an impressive piece of a sacred character, and will suit a mezzo-soprano or baritone voice of moderate compass. Mr. J. L. Molloy's "The Ride" is a spirited song that admits of effective declamation; and "The Brook and the Wave" (by the same) has considerable grace. Another well-known name is that of Mr. Alfred Scott Gatty, whose song, "Only a passing thought," will not detract from his reputation. Mr. T. Wrighton's two songs, "The Blessing of Flowers" and "What Chants the Nightingale," have well-defined melodies, and will please both singers and hearers. Mr. Louis Diehl has produced several very successful songs, with which his "Dear England" (to some patriotic lines by Dr. Charles Mackay) may well be paralleled.

Messrs. Duff and Stewart are also active caterers for drawing-room vocalists and pianists. The former will find Mr. E. L. Hime's song, "I'm a fairy free and light," worthy their attention. "Nellie" (written and composed by M. E. Glover) is a pleasing, simple ditty that will make its effect, if properly interpreted. Of Mr. W. C. Levey's "The Magic Spell" it is sufficient to say that it has been repeatedly sung with success by Miss Russell at Drury-Lane Theatre. Miss Virginia Gabriel's song, "The Haunted Chamber," to Longfellow's words, has a dreamy, legendary character well suited to its subject. Among their other merits, all the songs above referred to have that of lying within a moderate compass of voice. "Romance" and "Impromptu Polka," both by R. Winternitz, are two effective pianoforte pieces. The first affords good practice for left-hand arpeggios, and the other is a lively dance movement in the style implied by the title.

"The Maiden's Sigh," reverie for the pianoforte, by Lillie Albrecht (Duncan Davison and Co.), is a graceful little piece by a juvenile pianist whose clever performances have lately attracted much attention. The same publishers have also issued a pretty vocal duet, "Evening" (with French and English words), the music by Herr Reichardt, who is favourably known both as a performer and a producer of vocal pieces.

A "Winter Song," written and composed by Mrs. Harvey (J. B. Cramer and Co.), evinces nice poetical taste and much feeling for melody. The voice part lies within moderate compass, and the accompaniment is easy. The B natural in the latter (last bar of the third line, and afterwards in repetition) is probably an engraver's error; and the harmonic progression between the ninth and eighth bars from the close of each verse needs revision.

Mr. E. Jenkins, M.P. for Dundee, has been appointed agent of the Canadian Government for emigration and other purposes in London.

We are glad to find we were in error, in stating, last week, that Mr. Ralph Disraeli, the only brother of the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, was dead. He is still a Registrar of the Court of Chancery, is married, and has a son.

A memorial reading-desk has been recently presented to Christ Church, Leeds, by Mr. George Braithwaite.

The chancel of the parish church of All Saints, Clifton, Bedfordshire, was reopened on the 5th inst. The expense of the restoration has been borne by the Rector, the Rev. H. H. Miles, aided by Mrs. and Miss Miles, Downfield, Herefordshire.

Last week the Bishop of Nottingham laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Martin, a populous hamlet of Timberland, near Sleaford; and on the same day the Hon. Mrs. Newdigate laid the stone of some buildings for the poor in Wellclose-square.

Yesterday week the Bishop of Exeter reopened the parish church of St. Erth, near Hayle, after a restoration so extensive that the only part not rebuilt is the tower and one of the nave arcades. The cost of the restoration is about £1800, and the works have been carried out under the direction of Mr. Sedding.

Dulverton church, Somerset, which was restored about twenty years ago, has been considerably improved during the past year. A handsome reredos of Bath stone, with appropriate symbols and tablets illuminated on zinc, has been erected at the cost of Mr. B. M. Collyns, who, presented the fine organ.

The Bishop of Ely was on Tuesday presented by his old parishioners and fellow-townsmen at Leeds with a service of plate, worth 600 gs., and four illuminated addresses. The Bishop, in acknowledging the gift, said he was glad to hear that Nonconformists had subscribed to the testimonial—a proof that the Nonconformists of England liked men who were outspoken.

NEW BOOKS.

AMONG THE MUSES.

Variety is a very noticeable quality in the contents of On Viol and Flute, by Edmund W. Gosse (Henry S. King and Co.). The author himself divides his book into three distinct portions, labelled respectively allegro, andante, and adagio; and in each division he plays some pleasant, dreamy pieces on his chosen instruments. There are in the very title both softness and quaintness, and the softness and quaintness permeate nearly all the compositions. Howbeit, not everybody will be able to catch the author's meaning or to derive more pleasure than a listener might receive from a graceful fantasia when the original air is quite strange to the hearer, or the theme is not clearly marked by the executant. The author, probably, has some definite ideas; but it is not every reader to whom they will appear other than hazy, indistinct, intangible, inapprehensible. To many a mind they will present a picture like the merely ornamental pattern upon an elegant article of dress, or the figures produced by twirls of the kaleidoscope. Of colour, of form, of harmony, there are abundance; but what, if anything, there is of moral purpose, intellectual enlightenment, spiritual interpretation, or poetic story, is not so plainly discernible. The author has clearly an eye and a heart for Nature at all seasons and under all aspects; a store of fancies and a power of trilling them forth; a vein of romantic sentiment and a due sense of the bliss that rhymes to kiss. So far we can all go with him and enjoy his songs; but in the effusions, and they are many, in which he appears to be in a sort of didactic, or enigmatical, or allegorical, or phantasmagorical, or prophetic, or simply emotional mood, it will not be easy for ordinary readers to discover the purpose. In a clever "study in grotesque," entitled "The Mandrakes," the author apostrophises, with eloquent admiration, the celebrated Blake, poet and painter; and that fact speaks volumes. "Like master, like man;" and, whatever Blake may have been, he was certainly not easily understood.

Easy, flowing verse, with spirit and vigour stirring it—like a rapid, rushing stream with a goodly wind to ripple it—carries one cheerily through the greater part of Waves and Caves; and other Poems, by Cave Winsom (Basil Montagu Pickering); and it is not until a perusal of the principal and most ambitious attempt in the whole collection has made a highly favourable impression that one is confronted by what is generally considered the melancholy and fatal fact that the author has written a prize-poem. One great charm which the writer possesses is the faculty of making himself intelligible to the meanest capacity; and another is the art of combining simplicity with considerable fervour of expression. Metrical and other mechanical appliances he manages with no small skill and with a wise regard for those occasional breaks and changes of rhythm which afford relief and keep attention alive. The longest poem bears a sort of family resemblance to "The Corsair" and similar romantic tales narrated in the form of verse; and to those who are weary of the æsthetic, brooding, contemplative, analytical, metaphysical, and purely thoughtful styles so much in vogue at the present day it is quite delightful to get aloft again with the handsome but lawless young rover of the seas, and commence once more a career of activity and even crime, so that it be followed by remorse and repentance. There is plenty of movement and excitement in the scenes and deeds; and the verses are correspondingly instinct with life and fire and, where the theme requires it, with tenderness. Some of the smaller poems are pretty, graceful, vivid, tuneful, though they cannot be called strikingly original.

If covers could confer immortality, there would be a very fair chance for Arlon Grange, and a Christmas Legend, by William Alfred Gibbs (Provost and Co.), whereof the white and gold on the exterior are enough to constitute that thing of beauty which, as we have been very and almost too frequently informed, is a joy for ever. The author, in some introductory verses, gives cheerful, good-humoured permission to whosoever feels inclined to blame him, condemn his style, laugh at his limping muse, say "Nothing, surely, could be worse," doubt his reasons, abuse his rhymes, maltreat him in every imaginable manner, but pleads, "Prithee, do not tell my story!" So be it. The story shall be untold, but it is not necessary, likewise, to take advantage of the liberal leave granted in other respects. It is bare justice to say that a simple but romantic tale, in which Love fulfils his part triumphantly and a sanguinary duel is fought in the melodramatic style by moonlight, is straightforwardly, pleasantly, and even forcibly told in more than tolerable blank verse, and that the blank verse, which serves as a vehicle for the conveyance of a great many good, wholesome, graceful, and noble sentiments, is agreeably interrupted by some pretty, unaffected bursts of song, tastefully arranged as regards metre and rhyme.

The student it is whose possible desires and requirements were chiefly consulted in the compilation of English Sonnets: edited by John Dennis (Henry S. King and Co.); for it is stated, and truly no doubt, that sonnets are not such compositions as one would care to read one after another without stint; must be studied at intervals and without haste; and contain a wealth which, in consequence of condensation and other special qualities, is not often to be acquired without long inspection and some toil. From the first half of the sixteenth century to the latter half of the nineteenth, from the Earl of Surrey to Alexander Smith, through the long space of more than three hundred years, the editor has hunted up sonnets; but for reasons given, of more or less weight, living writers have not been called upon for contributions. Men differ so, that of course some sonnets will be said to have been undeservedly admitted and others equally undeservedly excluded; but it is possible to comfort oneself in such case with a reflection similar to that which was so consolatory to the gentleman who held that in England justice was done on the whole, because, though a great many people who ought to have been acquitted were found guilty, still a great many who ought to have been found guilty were acquitted. At any rate, the student of sonnets will find in the collection enough, and more than enough, to begin upon, and in the notes some helpful hints and quotations.

A combination of the peculiar gifts for which Job and Belshazzar are still respectively celebrated would, perhaps, enable one to discover quite a galaxy of poetical beauties in the volume which an anonymous writer has published under the title of Cosmos (Henry S. King and Co.). Even common flesh and blood, with a tendency towards irritability, cannot fail to acknowledge that the anonymous author is good enough to occasionally diversify his dark and mysterious utterances with luminous and happy expressions, and relieve the syntactical Erebus with bright examples of perfectly plain construction; but, on the whole, nine readers out of ten are likely to experience such a sense of bewilderment as generally supervenes upon an oracular remark or a remark made in oracular language. Under the circumstances, it would, of course, be rash to make any positive statement as to the contents of the poem. There is reason, however, to believe that the author, under the pretext of a brotherly discourse addressed to the as yet unborn poet of the future, delivers a lecture concerning all creation, animate and inanimate, past, present, and to come. Facts (or fictions) connected with the "ologies" and the "ologists" are naturally introduced, and hopes are held out of a good time coming, when posterity will know

What takes a star like Sirius,
Big as a thousand times our mighty sun,
To gravitation self-impervious,
And keeps it shooting space as lightning run.

Perhaps it will at the same time be known whether anybody or anything can be said to be "impervious" to "gravitation;" and whether a license will be required for "shooting space." It should be added that the lecture is written in lines of ten syllables each, save in the few cases in which there are one or two more or less; and that, though they are "rhymed tens," the usual restrictions as to the number and order of lines rhyming together are not adhered to.

The author of "The Art of Pluck" would probably have written something, if he had attempted versification, better than Lays of Modern Oxford, by Adon; illustrated by M. E. Edwards, F. Lockwood, and the Author (Chapman and Hall); and the author of "Mr. Verdant Green" might be expected to be about "bracketed" with "Adon." In other words, the "lays" are such as would deservedly be termed "deuced good" by very young undergraduates, or "not at all bad," by the don to whom Oxford is all the world, and who relishes the very smallest joke with a savour of "Oxford mixture." The versification, in which several well-known styles are parodied, is good enough; and the last "lay" is elegant and pathetic. On the whole, however, the verses are very little above doggerel; but the illustrations have a great deal of spirit and character and are very amusing, but by no means numerous.

LAW AND POLICE.

TRIAL OF THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT FOR PERJURY.

The Lord Chief Justice dealt, yesterday week, with the defendant's proceedings in getting up the action of ejectment. The questions specialised referred to defendant's non-recognition of his relations at the Law Institution; the getting up of the affidavits in his favour; Major Fraser's snuff-box; the defendant's prevarication as to the Chili commission; his sudden return from Rio; and his correspondence with the Ortons, which the Lord Chief Justice showed had been dropped, and resumed again when the Orton theory was introduced. The defendant's letter to Lady Tichborne, in which he announced the receipt of a lock of his hair from Melipilla, was set before the jury as a matter which, if credited by them against his subsequent denial, would decide the case. Once or twice Mr. Holmes's conduct as defendant's adviser demanded remark from his Lordship. His connivance at the manufacture of affidavits was declared discreditable to him professionally; and his inducing the defendant to sign a will at Southampton, before starting for Chili, was pronounced disreputable. Towards the close of the sitting the learned Judge entered upon the question, which he remarked was one of the main issues, whether the defendant was or was not Arthur Orton. On this point, he said, the most important witness was Mary Ann Loder, who, having felt an attachment for Arthur Orton, was not likely to forget his features, and who, not being likely wilfully to state what was not true, had told them that the defendant was that person.

On Monday, his Lordship, in continuing his summing up, resumed that part of it which dealt with the evidence bearing on the identity or non-identity of the defendant with Arthur Orton. He commented at some length on the incidents of Orton's residence at Melipilla, and quoted portions of the Castro correspondence as throwing considerable light upon this part of the case. After drawing the attention of the jury to the testimony as it affected the movements of the defendant in other places; and, having referred to the circumstances surrounding the defendant's marriage, the making of the Wagga-Wagga will, and the Richardson letter, the learned Judge glanced at the evidence for the defence so far as it bore upon the defendant's identity with Orton. The Court adjourned until Wednesday, in consequence of some important business obligation of one of the jurors.

In his exposure of discrepancies in the evidence for the defence on the Orton question, the Lord Chief Justice, on Wednesday, showed that James Gardner, Poole, and other witnesses who professed to have known Arthur Orton in Australia, were contradicted by the actual record of his movements, and even by the defendant's own statement. The occurrence of Arthur Orton's hieroglyphic in defendant's early letters was pressed upon the notice of the jury; also the entry in the Wagga Wagga pocket-book about the arrival of "R.C.T." in Hobart Town. Sharp censure was passed upon Mr. Guildford Onslow's championship of the defendant. Mr. Biddulph's account of his first interview with the defendant, and the test questions he put about Roger and he having smoked together in an hotel at Bath, was scrutinised with a view to show that neither were the questions so unexpected nor the answers so spontaneous as appeared at first sight. Reverting to the evidence respecting Roger Tichborne's physique, his Lordship suggested strong doubts about the reality of the twitch in the face and other peculiarities ascribed to him.

On Thursday the Lord Chief Justice continued his analysis of the evidence of the Hampshire witnesses. He reviewed the evidence given by Charles Lewis, the linendraper's apprentice at Alresford, and next dealt with the statements of the Upton witnesses. Coming to Miss Braine, he said he thought heavier ordnance had been directed against her than the importance of the case demanded. With respect to Mr. Bulpitt, the banker, his Lordship thought that, except as to the sealed packet, his evidence was not of much moment. Having briefly commented on the evidence given by Lady Burrows, his Lordship passed to the defendant's Carabinier witnesses, and said that several officers who had made affidavits in his favour had not been called, and that Sir Talbot Constable, Mr. Marx, and others, called at the last trial, had not appeared in the box.

Baron Amphlett was "rung out" of Lincoln's Inn yesterday week, after a breakfast given in the hall of that honourable society to the retiring Benchers. The ceremony will, in all likelihood, never be repeated, as the new Judicature Act sweeps away such quaint and cumbersome traditions of the law.

Mr. Pallett, the Irish Attorney-General, has accepted the vacant office of Chief Baron of the Irish Court of Exchequer.

Mr. H. B. Poland, of the Home Circuit, has been appointed Recorder of Dover, in succession to Sir W. Bodkin, who has resigned the office on account of ill health; Mr. Chapman Barber has been appointed Judge of the County Courts in the East, West, and North Ridings, in succession to Mr. W. Raines, deceased; and Mr. J. S. Dugdale, of the Midland Circuit, has been appointed Recorder of Grantham, in succession to Mr. J. W. Mellor.

Mr. Harrison, of Clifton Hampden, has obtained, in the Court of Exchequer, a verdict of £43 against the Great Western Railway Company for the value of a portmanteau lost by the defendants. He was travelling on their line to Birmingham, in August last, and in going to the luggage-van to claim his portmanteau a lady stopped him to ask a question. He was detained about a minute, and on reaching the van his portmanteau was gone, having been carried off by another passenger. The verdict was for the full value of the property lost.

An action was tried, yesterday week, in the court of Exchequer, in which the plaintiff, Margaret Skettler, a fruiterer and florist in Oxford-street, sought to recover from the widow of Sir David Salomons and his nephew, Sir Lionel David Salomons, the sum of £96 for various articles, including bouquets, nectarines, and asparagus, alleged to have been purchased at the shop, and never paid for, by the deceased Baronet. The claim was resisted on the ground that it was quite inconsistent with the characteristic habits of the deceased to suppose that he incurred such a debt for such articles. The present Baronet, who was examined, said his uncle was most punctual in his payments, and that he and the widow had made a careful search through all the deceased's papers, and could find no record or memorandum relating to what formed the ground of the claim. The jury stopped the evidence by saying that they had made up their minds; and a verdict was returned for the defendants.

An American courier, Cooper Grant, who was charged at the Mansion House with embezzling £325 belonging to his employer, Mr. N. W. Hunt, pleaded guilty, restored part of the money, and escaped with six months' hard labour.

For the forgery on Messrs. Baring Brothers, Antonio Antoniadis, the young Greek, was, on Monday, committed for trial by the Lord Mayor, who expressed an opinion that the Foreign Office ought to take action in the matter.

Before Mr. Newton, at Marlborough-street, on Tuesday, Mr. Charles Semple, late of the 93rd Highlanders, was charged with a serious assault on Mr. Frisby, a stockbroker, and was remanded on heavy bail.

Mr. Arthur Forster, Government clerk, who is under commitment for trial at the Central Criminal Court for an assault on an hotel-keeper in Piccadilly, was, yesterday week, bailed out by his friends. Mr. Alderman Carter accepted two sureties in £1000 each, and Mr. Forster's own recognizances in £2000.

Mr. Arthur Walker, of Pembroke road, Kensington, has had to pay £5 and costs for having a dog at large without proper control in Kensington Gardens. The dog rushed at a policeman and bit him severely in the leg.

A youth of seventeen, who had thrown a ginger-beer bottle from the gallery of the Elephant and Castle Theatre, and struck an occupant of the pit with the missile, was sentenced at Lambeth, on Wednesday, to a month's imprisonment, with hard labour.

Several milk-dealers were, on Wednesday, fined at the Wolverhampton Police Court in various sums, varying from £1 to £5, for selling adulterated milk.

A desperate case of burglary has occurred at Colchester. Four men who had broken into Mr. Stannard's mill were surprised by the arrival of the owner, with his foreman and two sons. Several shots were fired by the burglars, which Mr. Stannard returned. One burglar was captured.

JOHN CHRISTIAN SCHETKY.

This artist, who died on the 29th ult., at the great age of ninety-five, had almost passed out of the memory of the present generation, though he was a favourite marine-painter of George IV., William IV., "the sailor king," and her present Majesty; and though his life was marked by many interesting associations, our space will not permit us to dwell upon them. He came of an ancient Transylvanian family, and on the mother's side he was related to the artist family of Reinagle. He was the contemporary, at the High School of Edinburgh, of Walter Scott, Lord Brougham, Leonard and Francis Horner, and others who were afterwards the great men of their day. When a boy, Robert Burns, his father's friend, begged him off a flogging for playing truant to sail toy ships at Leith. "Christopher North" mentions him more than once in "Notes Ambrosianæ." In after life Sir Walter Scott and he were intimate friends, and among his companions were the Ettrick Shepherd, Sir William Allen, Sir Charles Paget, Lord Lyons, Clarkson Stanfield, and David Roberts. At seventeen he was already earning his living by teaching scene-painting. In 1801 he and his friend Francis Horne (afterwards, as Colonel Horne of the Guards, the brave defender of Hongkong) walked from Paris to Rome, and accomplished the last 104 miles in two days. On his return from Italy he took up his residence at Oxford as a teacher of painting. Subsequently he was successively Professor of Drawing at the Royal Military College at Marlow (now Sandhurst), at the Royal Naval College, Portsmouth (a position he held for twenty-five years), and at the dissolution of the college, in 1837, he was appointed Professor at the Hon. East India Company's College, Addiscombe, where he closed his public career by retirement in 1855. Visits to the Spanish peninsula when Wellington was there, to Ireland in the suite of George IV., and cruises with Queen Victoria, were among the incidents of the artist's long life. He published some works illustrated by engravings, photographs, and chromolithographs from his paintings and drawings, and his marine pictures are in various collections. Like Van der Velde, his predecessor in the office of Royal marine-painter, Schetky was a left-handed artist; and we should add that he was an accomplished musician and vocalist as well as painter.

THE ASHANTEE WAR.

There is news from the headquarters of Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley to the 26th ult., when it was expected that the British troops would march into Coomassie on the 23rd. Our Special Artist furnishes several illustrations of the march from Cape Coast Castle to the banks of the river Prah. The stages and military road stations, in this distance of less than eighty miles, are Inquabim, Acooful, Dunquah, Mansu, Sutah, Yancoomassie, Assin, Barraccoe, and Prah-su. Of these stations Dunquah, Mansu, and Prah-su are the most important. The places named were spoken of in our Artist's letter of Jan. 1, describing his journey from Cape Coast Castle to Prah-su, the letter which we published a fortnight ago. Inquabim, the first stage from the coast, distant only seven miles from the town of Cape Coast Castle, is but a small station. Its whipping-tree, however, is an institution of most needful discipline for the multitude of Fantee baggage-carriers and others hired to convey stores of food or ammunition to the front. Any negro porter who has been guilty of theft or desertion, or has wilfully dropped his load and refused to go on, is bound closely to this tree of sorrow by the rope usually coiled round its trunk, and is there flogged by a police-sergeant of his own race, under the orders of an English officer. The camp at Mansu, which is forty-three miles from Cape Coast Castle, is the furthest point yet reached by the electric telegraph. It is stated that extraordinary exertions were made to remedy the break-down of the transport arrangements on Jan. 12. A raid was made some miles down the coast, where native carriers, who had deserted, were believed to be hiding. A party arrived before daylight, and, finding all the inhabitants asleep, succeeded in capturing 170 men, who were brought to Cape Coast Castle and pressed into the service. Her Majesty's ship Bittern has made two trips to the westward and brought back 600 women, who have been enrolled as carriers at 1s. 3d. per day. The Argus had brought up 200 carriers from the eastward, and thus the transport difficulty was gradually being solved. The Druid and Simoom, however, had sailed for Sierra Leone and Cape Palmas to raise carriers, the Druid to bring them back.

In the View of Prah-su, our Artist has shown the camp of huts and tents on the bank of the river, with the General's flag above the head-quarters' residence, and the bridge of planks, constructed by four men of the Royal Marines, with the assistance of native labourers, under the direction of Major Hume. The battery of native artillery, with three small guns, is seen crossing the bridge. We described the guns and gun-carriages when they were sent off from Woolwich Arsenal. The native gunners have been instructed by Royal Artillerymen in the details of their work.

The subject of our Extra Supplement Large Engraving has a painful interest, connected with this West African campaign. It is the embarkation, at Cape Coast Castle, of a number of invalid British officers and soldiers for the voyage home, or to Madeira, or some other place of sanitary treatment. The health of the English troops and sailors employed on the Gold Coast has indeed, up to this time, suffered less from its pestilential climate than was expected, and if they can get away before March the mortality will scarcely have exceeded its usual rate in a campaign elsewhere. But several young officers of high social and professional distinction have been among the earliest victims, and the friends of many others will anxiously expect their return, as we hope, in a vigorous condition, to tell the short but stirring tale of the Ashantee war.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-
GUINIA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case, Five Octaves, and Two Footboards.
 The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free and instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.
 The Instruments now offered to the public will be found distinct of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which renders the quality rich and original.
 Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by leaving the bellows.
 The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.
 CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE BURNING OF THE PANTECHNICON.

THE FIRE, SEEN FROM THE ROOF OF RICE'S STABLES.

THE MOTCOMB-STREET FRONT.

THE FIRE, SEEN FROM BELGRAVE-SQUARE.

BURNING OF THE BELGRAVE PANTHECON.

A fire took place yesterday week, in the fashionable quarter of Belgravia, which destroyed a vast amount of costly property, household furniture, pictures, statuary, porcelain, and other works of art, carriages, plate, and rare wines, belonging to many private families of the upper class. Such were the various goods stored in the Pantheon, an extensive block of buildings, having a wide frontage in Motcomb-street, Belgrave-square, and extending back to Lowndes-square on the north, and to Lowndes-street and Kinnerton-street on the east and west respectively. The building, which belonged to Messrs. Smith and Radermacher, was constructed of "fireproof" materials, and was used as a miscellaneous repository for property of all descriptions. It was of vast size, and was built round the four sides of an open yard, being in some parts five and six stories high. Open communication existed throughout, and within a very short time after the outbreak of the fire, it had spread through the buildings and lofts to so great an extent as to preclude all hope of saving any considerable amount of the warehoused property.

The outbreak of the fire was discovered at half-past four in the afternoon. There was a strong smell of burning, and it was traced to a warehouse on the second floor in the northern extremity of the building, where some goods were found to be on fire close to the wall. The foreman and the workpeople—twenty or thirty of them—got out their manual engine and tried to extinguish the flames; but they had difficulty in getting water, and were unable to effect any good. All the iron doors were shut, except those by which the men could escape, and heavy tarpaulins were thrown over all the goods on the ground floor. Immediately on the alarm of fire being raised, messengers were sent to the nearest telegraph stations to give notice to the Fire Brigade. Others proceeded to the Westminster engine station, in Victoria-street, a distance of half a mile, where the "call" was given. No time seems to have been lost by the Fire Brigade. In less than a quarter of an hour several steam and manual engines, with a number of firemen under Captain Shaw, were on the spot. The fire at that time was not very large, but the place was very difficult of access, the smoke was overpowering, and the water supply, at first, was extremely short. All these circumstances prevented anything material being done to extinguish the fire; but the engines went speedily to work, and every effort was made, though without success, to subdue the flames. The alarm had been sent to the Knightsbridge, Chelsea, and Wellington Barracks. Detachments of the Coldstream Guards, headed by Lieutenant Clark-Kennedy; of the Scots-Fusilier Guards, under Captain the Hon. R. Stapleton-Cotton, and of the 1st Life Guards, under Lieutenant Lord Grimston, with one or more of their engines, arrived soon after the Fire Brigade. The soldiers were set to work to remove the carriages in the front building; and Belgrave-square, Wilton-crescent, and the adjoining streets were soon crowded with the vehicles taken from the Pantheon. The horses, and those in an adjoining livery-stable, belonging to Mr. Rice—about 150 in all—were also rescued in time, and taken to a place of safety. The books of Messrs. Smith and Radermacher were removed by their clerks and others to the offices of Messrs. Trollope, builders, in Motcomb-street. Meanwhile the fire was rapidly spreading from room to room and from warehouse to warehouse, iron doors and walls notwithstanding. The Fire Brigade, whose force was increased every few minutes by the arrival of a fresh engine, had to retreat from their positions again and again as the flames and the smoke gathered upon them. The reflection by this time was visible for miles round—even, it is said, as far as Twickenham—and drew to the neighbourhood an immense crowd. A large body of police attended, and were formed in line across the entrances to the streets surrounding the fire. An abundant water supply was at length obtained, and the firemen, assisted by the soldiers, the salvage corps, and many volunteers, plied their hose from the roofs of adjacent houses and from every position from which the building could be reached. From six o'clock until ten in the evening the fire raged with unabated fury, and the whole of London was lit up with the reflection of the flames. During those hours the flames spread throughout the entire building, except the north-west corner in Kinnerton-street. Shortly after ten o'clock a large portion of the roof of the south building suddenly fell in. A party of twenty men of the Fire Brigade, who were working close by, had a narrow escape. The force of the fall closed the iron door of the room in which they were at work, and prevented their exit, but by a desperate effort they managed to force the door open and escape. The engineer in charge of the party, Alfred Holmden, was considerably hurt, and one of the soldiers had a leg broken. At eleven o'clock the remaining portion of the building took fire, and it was then thought every minute that the surrounding houses in Motcomb-street would also be destroyed; but the wind happened to change, and the danger was over. About half-past one o'clock in the morning the fire had gone down very much, and by four o'clock, or shortly afterwards, it was so much reduced that one half of the brigade, with their engines, were sent back to their stations by Captain Shaw. Throughout Saturday and Sunday seven steam-engines, in charge of sixty firemen, were kept at work on the ruins.

The Pantheon was the largest, and esteemed the safest, "fireproof" warehouse for miscellaneous articles in London. It was commonly used by the occupiers of West-End mansions, not a few of the nobility and members of Parliament, who are accustomed to shut up their town houses from July to February, and who prefer to remove their most valuable household goods, during the absence of the family, for greater safety. The premises were built in 1830 by Mr. Seth Smith, grandfather of one of the present proprietors, on a large plot of ground of which he held the freehold, extending from Motcomb-street on the south to Lowndes square on the north, a distance of 1500 ft. The building covered nearly two acres. On the western side the wall of the building ran straight along the entire length, but on the eastern side the boundary of the premises took a zigzag direction, here extending quite into Kinnerton-street, but elsewhere half or a quarter of that width. There were two main entrances, one in Motcomb-street and the other in Kinnerton-street, the latter being the place at which the vans were laden and unladen. The north building was esteemed the completest in its way ever constructed, and neither ingenuity nor expense was spared to render it perfect for the purposes for which it was intended. By means of peculiarly formed and solid iron pillars a complete iron support was produced from the ground through the intervening floors to the roof. The whole of the ceilings were lathed with iron rods, and covered with a composition which it was hoped would resist the fiercest fire, and would not crack or fall if water was thrown upon it while hot. The boarded floors were covered with iron plates laid upon patent felt to preserve the under side of the iron from rust, and to deaden the sound. The rooms were separated from each other by brick walls and wrought-iron doors, and all the stairs were of stone. All the chimney flues were lined with cast iron, and there was not a piece of wood exposed in any part of the building itself. Several hundreds of tons of iron were used in the erection of this portion of the premises. The south building was similarly constructed. The basement was formed into cellars for the storage of wines, and no less than 3000 pipes of wine, on an average, were kept there. The ground floor was set apart for the reception of carriages, of which at the time of the fire there were some hundreds on the premises. There was in this portion of the building a large strong room for the deposit of plate and jewellery, and in other parts there were rooms for the storage of pianos and musical instruments and of works of art, exposed for sale or otherwise. A considerable business was done in the conveyance department in Kinnerton-street, in connection with which a large number of vans and between fifty and sixty horses were kept daily on the premises.

The building was not uniform in height, but it mostly reached four stories. At four different points, to ensure greater safety, an iron wall was built across the entire width, from east to west, the theory being that in case of fire the communicating doors could be shut, the progress of the flames stopped, and the damage confined to a portion of the building. Again, in their turn, these compartments were subdivided into warehouses, each distinguished by a letter of the alphabet; and these, again, into a number of blocks or rooms, differing in size according to the bulk of the contents, each of which had thick iron walls and doors, and was, so to speak, entirely isolated from the rest. The owners or renters had separate keys, and they and the proprietors of the building firmly believed that their goods when in the Pantheon ran as little risk from loss by fire as by theft. It may also be stated that the building was lighted in the daytime by four or five large skylight wells from floor to roof, and that, with the exception of the offices at the main entrance (which are now uninjured), there was not a gaslight on the premises. The building was, as a rule, closed at dusk, and the only lights allowed afterwards were safety-lamps carried by the men, and lighted in a room set apart for that purpose alone. There was a water-tank of great size on the roof, while there were smaller tanks on the various floors, and hose ready for use and a manual fire-engine were kept on the premises. There were, however, as it happens, no hydrants in the building, from which water could have been on an emergency procured, and to this circumstance may be attributed, in all probability, the great extent of the disaster.

The proprietors of the building, Messrs. Smith and Radermacher, are insured in the Royal Exchange Office. Two houses in Motcomb-street, and the livery stables of Mr. T. H. Rice, were more or less damaged. The backs of the houses of Major Charles Hall, Sir Andrew Fairbairn, Mr. C. Cox, Lady Wood, Lord Newport, M.P., Mr. Nathaniel G. Lambert, M.P., Miss Robertson, Miss McCreery, Lady Flower, Mrs. Wilder, Mrs. E. C. Tuffnell, Major Evan Macpherson, and Major the Hon. G. A. Browne, in Lowndes-square (numbered from 17 to 23 inclusive), were also damaged. Mr. Spencer Perceval's house in Lowndes-street sustained some damage; also the French Minister's stables in William's-mews, and a tavern in Kinnerton street.

But the contents of the Pantheon, which are mostly destroyed, were of enormous value. The building was filled, as we learn, from end to end and from basement to roof with goods, some of great price, belonging to hundreds of owners, including many members of both Houses of Parliament; so that had it happened three weeks hence the fire would not have been, in all likelihood, half so disastrous, as by that time much of the furniture would have been removed. The proprietors of the Pantheon say they know little or nothing of the actual contents of the private strong rooms or of their value. As regards the insurance of the articles, the understanding with customers was that the firm were only responsible for safe custody, and that the insurance must be made apart from them. They fear, however, that the customers had such faith in the building being fireproof, that many of them would feel it unnecessary to insure their goods. There can be no doubt, notwithstanding, that the insurance companies will be heavy losers by the disaster.

Among the noblemen and gentlemen who have suffered the greatest losses are Sir Richard Wallace, who had in the Pantheon a library, a collection of armour, and a store of plate, with some pictures and art-curiosities, valued altogether at nearly £150,000, of which £28,000 only was insured; Mr. Wynne Ellis, Sir Seymour Fitzgerald, and the Earl of Cadogan, each to a very large amount; Mr. Walter Cave, Sir F. Sykes, and others. It is said that Sir Garnet Wolseley's furniture was there. The total number of depositors was more than two thousand. It is hoped that some of the plate and jewels in the strong room may have escaped injury. A youth named Scott was killed, on the Saturday afternoon, by the fall of a wall in the ruins.

Another fire took place, early on Sunday morning, in Carnaby-street, Regent-street, in the house of an Italian named Monaco, who kept a shop for cooked fish, and also let lodgings. Mrs. Lord, one of the lodgers, was killed in getting out of a bed-room window, and a man named Migler was burnt to death; the woman's husband and child, too, were severely injured.

A meeting of the subscribers to the Cooke memorial was held in the Chamber of Commerce, Belfast, on Tuesday, when it was resolved that the statue of the late Rev. Henry Cooke should be erected in front of the General Assembly's College.

Mr. Alderman A. B. Walker, the Mayor of Liverpool, paid a state visit, on Sunday, to St. Andrew's Scotch Church, Rodney-street, on the occasion of an appeal on behalf of the Seamen's Orphanage. His Worship was accompanied by many members of the town council and the corporate officials. The collection realised £280.

Prizes were on Tuesday presented to the gentlemen cadets of the Woolwich Academy, by the Commander-in-Chief, before a large gathering of officers and ladies, in the School of Arms. His Royal Highness took occasion to acknowledge the distinguished services rendered by the Royal Engineers—and, in a less degree, by the Royal Artillery—in the Ashantee war.

Archbishop Manning, in his Lenten pastoral, strikes a political key-note and proclaims that "the Church is harassed," that "Christian Europe is sick unto death." Having enjoined his people to choose out some work of piety, penance, or self-denial for Lent, he pleads for destitute Catholic children, of whom he says there are 1500 in the workhouse and district schools. Under arrangements with the guardians priests are now admitted to teach these children for an hour a day, and the Archbishop states that funds are greatly wanted for the support of such chaplains. He also invites liberal subscriptions to the parochial schools.—Cardinal Cullen, in his Lenten pastoral, repeats his denunciation of secret societies and Freemasonry. In this category he includes Fenians and Good Templars. Among the sources of evil which are most rampant he specifies "degraded theatres," immoral poetry, and reports of divorce cases. As an antidote to such pernicious matter he recommends scientific, literary, and historical works written without "anti-Catholic prejudices."

MUSIC.

The return of Herr Joachim has for some years past been one of the musical events most anxiously looked for by the English public. His first reappearance this season was at the Crystal Palace Concert of last Saturday, when the great violinist played Spohr's seventh concerto (in E minor) with that grandeur of tone, refinement of style, and finished execution which are well-known characteristics of his performances. These were again displayed in his own arrangement of Brahms's Hungarian dances, a series of characteristic pieces originally written for two performers on the piano, and transcribed by Herr Joachim for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. These charming movements pleased so greatly that an enthusiastic encore was the result of their admirable execution, in which, as pianist, Mr. Franklin Taylor's share was of considerable importance. The orchestral works on Saturday were Schubert's overture in the Italian style (in C), that to Wagner's "Tannhäuser," and Beethoven's symphony in C minor, all magnificently played by the band, conducted by the principal violinist, Mr. Wedemeyer, who acted in lieu of Mr. Manns, absent on account of a family bereavement. Madame Elena Corani sang with much effect the scena, "Ah! fors'è lui," from Verdi's "La Traviata," and Mr. Randegger's "Marinella;" and Signor Agnesi gave, with fine style, the "Agnus Dei" from Mozart's first mass and the aria "Non più Andrai" from Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro." The selection for this week's concert is of high interest, comprising the whole of Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music; the same composer's motet for female voices, "Surrexit Pastor Bonus;" Schubert's twenty-third Psalm, "The Lord is my Shepherd;" Beethoven's overture to "King Stephen," and a chorus from his incidental music to that drama; and a new overture, "Le Cid," by Mr. Alfred Holmes.

The fourth of the second series of the Wagner Society's Concerts took place yesterday (Friday) week, and again, like the third concert, included choral performances. The selection from Wagner commenced with the orchestral prelude to "Lohengrin," and included "Elsa's Dream," "Einsam in trübem Tagen," and her song "Euch Lüften"—well rendered by Madame Elena Corani—Lohengrin's farewell to the swan, "Nun sei bedankt," and his song to Elsa, "Athmest du nicht," very expressively given by Mr. Bernard Lane; the concluding piece having been the highly dramatic duet, "Das Stille Lied verhallt," for Elsa and Lohengrin, in which Mr. Wallace Wells was an efficient coadjutor with Madame Corani. The "Lohengrin" selection also comprised the fine scene, from the first act, descriptive of the arrival of the hero (encored), the beautiful music of the bridal procession scene, with chorus of nobles and warriors, the brilliant orchestral introduction to the third act (encored), and the subsequent nuptial chorus. The whole selection excited an interest which shows that the time has come for the production of this and other works of Wagner in their dramatic form. The other items of the concert referred to were Gluck's overture to "Iphigenie en Aulide;" that by Berlioz, entitled "Le Carnaval Romaine;" Bach's aria, "In Deine Hände" (from the Church cantata, "Gottes zeit"), very expressively sung by Miss Sterling; and List's "Fest Marsch," composed for the jubilee festival held in honour of Goethe at Weimar. The orchestra was, as before, of the highest efficiency, and the chorus singing displayed such large improvement as left little, if anything, to be desired. Mr. Dannreuther again conducted with care and skill. At the next concert, on March 13, selections will be given (also including choral music) from Wagner's "Rienzi," "Tannhäuser," "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," and "Lohengrin."

On Monday Herr Joachim was the leading and solo violinist at the Popular Concert. In the former capacity he was heard in Beethoven's tenth string quartet, op. 74, in E flat; and in the same composer's third pianoforte trio, in C minor. His unaccompanied piece was the first of Bach's six sonatas for violin alone, the enormous difficulties of which were surmounted with the calm ease of thorough mastery. This performance called forth an enthusiastic encore, which was responded to by repeating the last movement. The quartet party was completed, as usual, by Messrs. L. Ries and Zerbini and Signor Piatti. Miss Agnes Zimmermann played with much effect in Schubert's solo sonata in A major, op. 120, and in the trio. Mdlle. Victoria Bunsen was the vocalist, and Sir Julius Benedict occupied his accustomed post as conductor. It has been announced that, owing to an attack of rheumatism, Madame Schumann (who was to have played at next Monday's concert) will be unable to appear this season.

The eminent pianist, Dr. Hans von Bülow, played for the last time during his present visit to London at the Popular Concert of Saturday afternoon.

The ninth subscription concert of the season of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society took place on Wednesday evening, and consisted of a performance of "The Messiah;" the solo vocalists having been Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Signor Agnesi.

Mr. John Boosey's London Ballad Concerts have been pursuing their successful career at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evenings, with an intermission this week, their resumption being announced for Wednesday next.

Yesterday (Friday) evening Mr. Willem Coenen's first chamber concert was to take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, the programme having included Rheinberger's pianoforte quartet in E flat, Brahms's string quartet in C minor, and a fantasia by Rubinstein for two pianos.

The nineteenth season of Mr. Henry Lealie's choir commenced on Thursday evening, when the programme comprised a selection from Mendelssohn, including some part-songs for the first time, the psalm "Hear my prayer," and other interesting music. The second part of the concert was devoted to English composers.

The second of M. Gounod's new series of concerts is to take place this (Saturday) evening, when his music to "Jeanne d'Arc" is to be repeated, in consequence of its successful reception at the first concert, as already noticed.

In order to allow time for thorough preparation and rehearsal, the production of Mr. Macfarren's oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," by the Sacred Harmonic Society—originally announced for Friday next—has been postponed to March 20.

We have already stated that the Royal Italian Opera will open on Tuesday, March 31. Of the arrangements made by Mr. Gye for his forthcoming season we shall soon be informed by the publication of the official programme. A rumour is in circulation that Mr. Mapleson may probably commence his season of Her Majesty's Opera, at Drury-Lane Theatre, with performances in honour of the Royal marriage, about the middle of March. Sir Michael Costa will continue to act as conductor and musical director, and the company will, it is said, include, among several new singers, Mdlle. Lodi, from Milan, Mdlle. Singelli, from Berlin (soprano); and Signor Paladini (tenor), from La Scala, of all of whom report speaks highly. Balfe's posthumous opera, "Il Talismano," promised last year, is to be positively produced this season, with Madame Nilsson-Rozaud in the character of the heroine.

THEATRES.

Very little change has taken place in the programme of the different theatres. At Covent Garden the manager has produced the drama of "Rip Van Winkle," in which he himself sustains the title-role, assisted by Miss Rose Massey in the part of Annie. At Drury Lane Miss Edith Stuart has enacted Amy Robsart in the place of Miss Wallis, who is indisposed.

On Monday Shakspeare's comedy of "Much Ado About Nothing" was revived at the Olympic, with new scenery by Mr. Julian Hicks. This is, perhaps, the most perfect of Shakspeare's comedies, a complete work of art, and as full of wisdom as of wit. The parts of Benedick and Beatrice require first-rate artists, and we were glad to find in Mr. Henry Neville and Miss Fowler such adequate representatives of two such difficult characters. The former was somewhat too fast, however, in his delivery. A slower style of elocution would more distinctly have conveyed the point of the antithetical sentences which abound in the dialogue. Miss Fowler rose with remarkable ease to the level of the witty fancies in which Beatrice revels, and never missed an effect. Her great scene with Benedick, when she demands from him the death of Claudio, was delivered with remarkable force and without any exaggeration. Miss Marion Terry's Hero was good, and so was Mr. W. H. Fisher's Claudio. We have seen a worse Dogberry than Mr. Righton, and Mr. G. W. Anson was decidedly good in Verges. The cast was, indeed, throughout efficient; and, but that it is intended to endure for a limited time only, the performance ought to command full houses for many weeks. The audience, though not numerous, was appreciative, and we trust will continue to increase. The merit of the acting certainly justifies public patronage.

A new farce has been produced at the Strand, by Mr. Gilbert & Beckett, entitled "Lending a Hand," a lively affair, which is likely to hold the stage. It is well acted, and the story is amusing. The sorrows of Mr. Muddles, and the ingratitude which he so diligently earns, provoke rather merriment than commiseration. The part is sustained by Mr. H. J. Turner. Mrs. Cowley's comedy of "The Belle's Stratagem" still retains possession of the boards.

At the Court Theatre a poetical play has been ventured (the work, it seems, of more than one author), with scenery by Mr. Walter Hann. The piece is entitled "The White Pilgrim," and the story is suggested by a tale of De la Motte Fouqué, called "Sinttram." The tone of the play is serious throughout. The action turns upon a terrible oath taken by a young Norwegian chief, named Harold, who lived at the early Christian era, and whose temper is decidedly hostile to the new religion. He is encouraged in his prejudice by a deformed pagan, Sigurd, and his heathen companions. This man induces Harold to take the oath, which is one that an ancestor of his had aforetime taken; swearing

That should foot of Norman knight that day
Cross but the threshold of his castle home,
And seek a knightly hospitality,
Within one month that trusting guest should die—
By his host's hand struck to the earth and slain.

Harold is taunted by Sigurd that he has so far turned Christian that he would fear to take the prescribed oath. Stung by the insinuation, Harold, being in drink, dares the imprecation, and lays a wager on the result. They are visited that night by Sir Hugo and Lady Isabelle, his wife, as travellers from Normandy, who have been wrecked upon the coast. With this Lady Isabelle Harold falls in love, and in her presence forgets the gentle Thordisa, to whom he is affianced. After a month's absence Thordisa returns, and a day only remains for the fulfilment of her lover's rash oath. Sigurd, impatient of delay, seeks to bring on a quarrel between Sir Hugo and Harold; but Thordisa intervenes, and averts the danger. She, moreover, prevails ultimately. Sir Hugo is made acquainted with Harold's inhospitable purpose. The guilty man, invited to a duel, breaks his sword and makes expiation. The supernatural machinery of the White Pilgrim might, perhaps, have been better managed—a character designed to represent the Spirit of Death, and to assert the philosophic doctrine that Death is but a birth to a new life; but the audience missed the point. Miss L. Moodie, as Thordisa, showed artistic power, and Mr. Vezin, as the fanatic Sigurd, was carefully emphatic. Mr. G. Rignold was exactly suited to the passionate and moody Harold. The drama is written in sonorous blank verse, and is not without poetic fire; but the performance was unequal, and accordingly unsatisfactory.

Lord Alfred Paget presided, on Monday afternoon, at a meeting of the committee having charge of the arrangements for giving a complimentary benefit to Mr. Benjamin Webster and presenting him with a testimonial. There was a large attendance of professional and other gentlemen. The noble chairman congratulated the meeting on the success which had attended their efforts. The "School for Scandal" would be placed on the stage with, perhaps, an unprecedentedly powerful cast. Mr. Andrew Halliday, honorary secretary, said one of the most interesting features in the performance would be the appearance of Mr. Webster on the stage with his fellow-labourers, when an address, written by Mr. Oxenford, would be read by Mrs. Keeley. Previous to this Mr. Henry Irving would recite "Eugene Aram."

Mr. Leeman, M.P., has been elected chairman of the North Eastern Railway Company, in succession to Mr. H. S. Thompson.

At the annual meeting of the Belfast Chamber of Commerce, on Monday, Mr. Elias Thompson was elected President for the ensuing year, as successor to Mr. John Preston.

Dr. Beke claims to have discovered the real Mount Sinai, with sacrificial bones on the summit, Sinaitic inscriptions on its sides, and other proofs of its Mosiac character. Its site is about a day's journey, with ease, of Akaba, and its Arab name Jebel el Mir.—A committee has been formed for the purpose of testifying to the high appreciation in which the valuable life-long services and labours of Dr. Beke are held. It is therefore proposed to present him on his return to England from his journey to Mount Sinai with a public testimonial.

Mr. Cardwell has forwarded to the commission on officers' grievances an elaborate minute on their report. The latter showed that no compensation had been made to officers for the loss of gratuitous steps, which, under the old system, they would have been entitled to sell; that officers on half-pay had lost the benefit of vacancies which might have led to such gratuitous steps; and that poorer officers were seriously affected by the abolition of the old practice with regard to exchanges. In reply, Mr. Cardwell sends the commissioners a series of tables indicating the number of gratuitous steps granted during the ten years preceding the abolition of purchase; the number of vacancies on the full-pay list during the same period; the actual promotions, and the unattached promotions. He enters historically into the operation of the causes which had given rise to non-purchase steps; and concludes with a list of new benefits which the abolition of purchase has conferred on officers.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

LIFE IN THE AGE OF THE NEW RED SANDSTONE.

Professor P. M. Duncan, F.R.S., began his fifth lecture on Palaeontology, on Thursday week, by describing the strata of the new red sandstone or Trias in England as being a sedimentary deposit of sand and clay, owing its red colour to the peroxide of iron, and including stones marked by ripples, rain-drops, and footprints resembling a hand. An explanation was given of the theory advanced by Mr. Godwin-Austen, some time ago, that these strata were more or less lacustrine; and allusion was made to the succession of the Bunter and Keuper in England and the presence of marine deposits between these in Germany and England. The Professor then noticed the geographical extension of this old land surface and sea-floor into Asia, India, South Africa, New Caledonia, and New Zealand. After describing the geological position of the Trias between the Permian and the Jurassic, the Professor commented on the vast interest of the Trias to palaeontologists, because it was formed after two great physical changes had altered the fauna and flora of the palaeozoic age, and because the fossils of the Trias are very suggestive in their character, being intercalary, linear, and characteristic types. Remains of all the great groups of existing mesozoic reptiles are found in the Trias, except serpents and tortoises. Among these creatures the Professor specially noticed the dicynodon, a lizard-headed creature with double dog-teeth; and some remarkable amphibia with piscine affinities. The mammalia are represented by rarely-found teeth of marsupialia or pouched animals. The gigantic batrachian named labyrinthodon, from the remarkable windings shown in the section of its teeth, was described as an air-breathing, froglike creature, with a crocodile-like head and limbs, ending with five digits like our hand, of which impressions are found, and which led to its being named cheirotherium (hand-beast). The congeners of this animal, who lived in the Permian and coal ages, were next noticed, and the Professor showed that the coal labyrinthodons are linear types between the ganoid fish and the labyrinthodons of the Trias. The singular beak-headed lizard named rhynchosaurus was noticed, and comments were made on the interesting and suggestive resemblances of the ancient lizards of the Trias with the sphenodon, a recent lizard of New Zealand, and also on their relation in structure to the protosaurus of the Permian strata. The dinosauria first appeared in the Trias, were persistent in the Wealden, and then died out; but the crocodiles, which also appeared in the Trias, have lasted, with certain modifications, to the present time. After noticing the differences between the Triassic and post-Triassic plesiosaurs Professor Duncan concluded by describing the flora, climate, and extension of land of this interesting period in the history of the earth.

THE OPPONENTS OF SHAKSPEARE.

Dr. Doran, F.S.A., at the Friday evening meeting on the 13th inst., after commenting on the little knowledge we possess of the life of Shakspeare, and the absence of any MSS. or other literary remains, characterised Dryden as his first and greatest opponent, than whom no one had more disparaged Shakspeare, although no one had spoken of him in higher terms of praise. The Monarchy and the stage fell together; but Shakspeare was re-throned at the Restoration, and then Dryden began his jealous attacks—at first, by mutilating and horribly debasing "The Tempest," and then justifying himself in his vigorous pamphlet, "The Defence of the Epilogue," in which he speaks of Shakspeare as uncultivated by education or by converse with courts. This work had a disastrous effect on dramatic literature and criticism, and especially on Shakspearean literature; since it brought into existence the long line of "improvers," who invariably in their mutilations lost sight either of Shakspeare's object or moral, or both; examples of which may readily be found in Davenant's "Macbeth," and in the altered versions of other plays by Howard, Otway, Tate, Lord Lansdowne, and others. Amongst the critics Rymer, the antiquary, was remarkable for his vituperation of Shakspeare, and even Shaftesbury considered his wit superannuated. Dryden also was the founder of the school of infamous dramas which Jeremy Collier so justly lashed in his "Histriomastix." This led Dryden to profess remorse; but he soon returned to his old style. The endeavour in the last century to raise Fletcher above Shakspeare was frustrated by "the Shakspeare Ladies' Association," who nobly restored the original text and prepared the stage for the coming of Garrick. After mentioning Addison as one of the opponents of Shakspeare in his preference for the dramatic unities, exemplified in his "Cato," Dr. Doran adverted to the long and bitter opposition of Voltaire, who, after translating what he termed "pearls extracted out of Shakspeare's mire," became warmly jealous of their success. Eventually, however, Shakspeare succeeded in France even on the stage, beginning with "Othello," and aided by Talma as his interpreter; and his last crowning triumph in French literature is the valuable literal translation of his works by François, the lately deceased son of Victor Hugo. William Spottiswoode, Esq., LL.D., Treas. R.S., the secretary and vice-president, was in the chair.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF MOHAMMEDANISM.

Mr. Bosworth Smith, M.A., gave the introductory lecture of his course on Mohammed and Mohammedanism on Saturday last. He began by remarking that the great historical religions of the world were moral rather than theological in their origins. Judaism began by giving the Israelites a national life and a moral code; Buddhism was originally an attack upon Brahminism and its evils; and Christianity, if we recur to the very words and deeds of its Founder, prepared men to receive a higher notion of God by the enthusiastic love which His life and example developed in them, first to Himself and then to all mankind. Whatever view may be taken of Mohammedanism, its vital power will depend, not on its originality, but on its adaptability to the spiritual wants of the time. If the origin of language, of civil society, and of life is wrapped in mystery, still more is the origin of religion. We cannot get beyond certain elements. Mohammedanism is the only religion we can trace accurately, and Mohammed is the only founder of a religion whose whole life is revealed by history and by what may be termed his autobiography. It is a question how far our full knowledge of one religion may explain the growth of others. After noticing some points of comparison between the Bible and the Koran, Mr. Bosworth Smith commented on the problems connected with Mohammed's character and their deep human interest; and then, rapidly reviewing the conquests of the Arabs and the spread of their religion till the taking of Constantinople, he adverted to the present state of Mohammedanism, its geographical extent, and the religions it has overthrown. In regard to its being still a living religion, he referred to recent events in Yun-Nan, to its progress under Yakoub Beg in Chinese Tartary, to its advance in the East Indian Archipelago, and to its extraordinary success in Africa. He then enlarged on the great variety of benefits conferred by it upon the negro race and the sublimity of its teaching. Contrasting with these benefits the desolation wrought till lately by European Christians in their African settlements, especially by the Portuguese, he remarked that it was not surprising that a religion so represented had failed to convert the Africans; and that Christians should rejoice that, if their own religion failed, the next best to it should be successful. The revival of Mohammedanism in Anatolia and its attitude in India were then noticed. Passing in review the various explanations of the success of Mohammedanism, the lecturer remarked on the difficulty of our getting rid of our national and religious prejudices. There must be very much that is good, he said, in a religion which has achieved so much. The distinctions of kind ordinarily drawn between one religion and another tend to hide this, and imply that there is no relative element in religion, and that man can grasp absolute truth. The language even of sacred books cannot stereotype religious thought, and it is well that it cannot. In regard to the question whether broad views of the science of religion are adverse to missionary effort, the lecturer contended that there are methods of proselytising and results to be arrived at at once desirable and attainable. The one model given in the New Testament of a missionary dealing with the faith of a cultivated people had not been sufficiently copied by Christians. The spirit and essence of Christianity, rightly set forth, is of universal applicability, and may influence and elevate all other faiths, if it cannot supplant them. The next lecture will be devoted to various questions connected with Mohammed himself, the circumstances that prepared the way for him, the nature of his mission, his inconsistencies, his faults, and his sincerity.

PHYSICAL PROPERTIES OF LIQUIDS.

Professor Tyndall, D.C.L., F.R.S., in beginning the first of six lectures on the Physical Properties of Liquids and Gases, on Tuesday last, stated that he proposed, in this course, to examine their mechanical texture and illustrate some of their mechanical applications. Liquids are distinguished from solids by their extreme mobility and by taking the shape of the vessel that contains them. That they are not absolutely incompressible was shown by Lord Bacon in a remarkable experiment described in his "Novum Organum," fifty years before the celebrated Florentine experiment. After hammering and squeezing some water in a leaden globe till it exuded through the metal like a fine dew, Bacon says, "I then computed the space lost by the compression, and concluded that this was the extent of compression which the water had suffered, but only when constrained by great violence." Professor Tyndall then described and fully illustrated the conclusive experiments of Canton, Perkins, Herbert, Ersted, Regnault, and others on this interesting subject. In reference to the absence of attraction, usually given as one of the definitions of a liquid, he referred to Professor Joseph Henry's idea of first weighing the drop suspended from a soap-bubble, then determining the thickness of the bubble from its colour, and thence deducing the cohesion per square inch. Experiments with the scale-pan had shown the cohesion of water to be about 53 grains per square inch; but Henry found it to be in reality several hundred pounds. That this tenacity is not due to the soap Dr. Tyndall clearly proved in a series of beautiful experiments with pure water-films, in accordance with the researches of Savart. Some of these films, in the form of convex and concave bubbles, had a most brilliant appearance when illuminated by the electric light. An umbrella of water was thus exhibited. Liquid jets were next considered; and when a vertical vein of water was illuminated it appeared to be a solid, continuous stem. After commenting on this and other examples, the Professor, by very ingenious arrangements, showed how a liquid vein may be resolved into a series of drops. He then considered the phenomena which ensue when the continuous portion of a vein cuts the surface of water, and when a discontinuous portion cuts it. In the former case, when the apparatus is well adjusted, there are no bubbles and no sound; but, in the latter case, bubbles are formed with sound. When the velocity is great and the impact against the water surface is violent air enters, as explained by Magnus. Hence there is an intermediate stage of silence between the two stages of bubbles and sound. After illustrating these phenomena, the Professor exhibited the influence of sound on a vein or jet of water. A vein was made to enter a basin of water silently. When a small noise was made near the water-pipe the vein broke, bubbles appeared, and sound was heard. When a large tuning-fork was vigorously sounded, the vein, previously continuous and silent, broke and bubbles entered, their number and sound varying. The loud sound occurred when the ventral segment of the broken vein cut the water surface.

Mr. Francis Galton, F.R.S., on Friday evening next, will give a discourse on Men of Science, their Nature and Nurture.

THE LONDON MISSION.

The series of special religious services, prayer-meetings, preaching, and conferences, which many of the London clergy had undertaken, with the sanction of the Bishops of London, Winchester, and Rochester, was brought to a close at the beginning of this week. It included several extra afternoon services, last week, at Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral. The Bishops of Exeter, Manchester, and Ely were preachers at the Abbey. The Bishop of London preached at St. Martin-in-the-Fields, and addressed a congregation of the Guards at Wellington Barracks, which is the scene represented in our illustration. Many of the parish churches were visited by a special "mission preacher," whom the incumbent had invited for this occasion, and who delivered two or three sermons on week-days. In some instances, where meetings were held at unusual hours in the evening and artificial means of excitement were used, there may have been ground for the objections taken by many Churchmen to these proceedings.

Mr. Greenall, M.P. for Warrington, has given £1000 towards building a new hospital and dispensary in that town.

ROYAL MARRIAGE FESTIVITIES AT MOSCOW: BALL AND ILLUMINATION AT THE GOVERNOR'S PALACE.
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.

MOSCOW AND ST. PETERSBURG.

The recent festivities in the two capital cities of Russia, at the marriage of the Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna to his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, with the visit of their brothers and sisters, the English, German, and Danish Princes and Princesses of highest rank, to the Czar and the Empress of Russia, have been described and illustrated by this Journal. We present illustrations of the most splendid churches of St. Petersburg and Moscow, and of scenes at the last-named city during the Imperial and Royal visit.

The Church of St. Isaac, though not the cathedral church of St. Petersburg (that is the one dedicated to our Lady of Kazan), is a very grand edifice. It was built in the reign of the late Emperor Nicholas at an enormous cost, the piles for its foundation being sunk in a swampy soil, which alone was an expense of £200,000. The building is in the form of a Greek cross, with equal sides. Each of the four grand entrances is approached by a triple flight of steps, and each flight of steps is cut out of a single huge block of Finland granite. The pillars of the four porticoes are sixty feet high and seven feet in diameter, each of one piece of polished granite. Their Corinthian capitals are of bronze. This structure rivals the great temple at Baalbec. Over the centre of the building is a wide and lofty Byzantine dome, upheld by thirty pillars; its roof is of gilt copper, supporting a cupola with a golden cross, and it is surrounded by four smaller cupolas. Groups of statuary, in gilt bronze, adorn the pediment of the front entrance. The interior of this church is decorated with malachite and various coloured marbles. The principal shrine is a dome upon eight pillars, further ornamented with gilding. Our Special Artist has sketched four scenes in St. Isaac's Church, illustrative of the Russian forms of ecclesiastical worship.

At Moscow the Uspenski Sabor, or Church of the Assumption, in which the Emperors of Russia are crowned, occupies a place of the highest eminence in the Kremlin. Its interior is a blaze of gilding, which covers, with some large fresco paintings, the walls from floor to roof, and the pillars also that support the five cupolas. In this church are kept some great treasures: a golden Mount Sinai with a figure of Moses, given by Prince Potemkin; a Bible, which belonged to Peter the Great's mother, having its cover so loaded with gold and jewels as to weigh 120 lb.; the plain wooden throne of Vladimir the Great; a portrait of the Virgin Mary, painted by St. Luke; the skeleton of the Patriarch Nikon, and many other relics. Close to the Church of the Assumption is that of the Archangel Michael, which is even of greater sanctity. The Synod House, formerly the palace of the Patriarch Archbishop, is behind the cathedral. We gave last week the illustrations of the Spass Vorota, or Saviour's Gate, one of the entrances to the Kremlin palatial precinct, with its picture of our Lord and a burning lamp fixed above the doorway in the gate-tower; also one of the Church of Moscow. The several old and new palaces of the Czars in the Kremlin, the Granovitaya, the Bolshoi Dvoretz, and the Terema, are curious as well as gorgeous, and their state apartments were viewed by the Royal guests of Alexander II. a fortnight ago. The scene at the Grand Theatre, and that of the ball given by the Governor-General, completes the series of illustrations devoted to this subject.

JOHN PYE.

By the death, on the 6th inst., of Mr. John Pye, at the advanced age of ninety-two, we lose one of the foremost landscape engravers of his time, and one who, in other respects, will occupy a prominent position in the history of British art. At an early age, Pye became a skilful draughtsman. He left Birmingham, his native town, at eighteen, and, coming to London, was apprenticed to James Heath, who turned out many of the most eminent engravers of this century. So highly did Heath estimate the capacity of the Birmingham lad that he took him without the customary premium and gave him wages from the first. Pye remained with his master about four years, and during this time he began to develop those principles of chiaroscuro—that power of colouring, so to speak, in its elementary black and white—in which he soon became a master, and an acknowledged authority both with painters and engravers. He also evinced a rare faculty for interpreting atmospheric effects, which rendered him one of the most successful exponents of the works of Turner. The plate which first brought him into prominent notice was the engraving after Turner's "Pope's Villa," with the figures by C. Heath, published in 1811. When Turner saw this plate he said, "If I had known there was anyone in this country who could have done that I would have had it done before." Thenceforward there was much friendly intimacy between the painter and engraver, interrupted only by some peculiarities of character, if not injustice, on the one side, and natural sensitiveness on the other. The engraving of "Pope's Villa" led to the production of the important plate from "The Temple of Jupiter in Ægina," with which Turner was so pleased that he offered to paint a companion-picture expressly for engraving. Turner always spoke of Pye's engravings as the most satisfactory translations of his colour into black and white. Other remarkable plates by Pye after Turner were those in Whalley's "Richmondshire," "The Rialto," "La Riccia," and "Redcliffe Church, Bristol." In addition to a multitude of minor labours, he superintended the twenty-nine published engravings from pictures in the National Gallery, and executed, after Claude, "The Annunciation" and "Pastoral Landscape," and "The Sacrifice of Abraham," after Poussin, in this series. He also executed "The Holy Family," after Michael Angelo.

Pye was never elected into the pale of the Royal Academy; he, like John Linnell, would not conform to the condition, formerly exacted, of inscribing his name as a candidate for its honours. His "Patronage of British Art" deals in outspoken terms with the defects, at least as they then existed, of that institution, and he was probably instrumental in bringing about the reform by which engravers are now eligible for full membership, and are no longer limited to the associate grade.

He was virtually the founder of the excellently managed self-supporting "Artists' Fund," and contributed, with his friend Mulready, to its revival in 1825, when Mulready gave the copyright of "The Wolf and the Lamb" (the engraving of which, by Mr. J. H. Robinson, realised £1000) to the fund. Pye lived for some time at Paris, and received the distinguished honour of being elected Corresponding Member of the French Institute. Besides a choice gallery of cabinet pictures and a fine collection of engravings, he has left behind him a mass of interesting notes on the artists of his time, particularly Turner, which it is hoped will be published.

Mr. David Chadwick, M.P., has offered £5000 and 10,000 volumes of books, to build and stock a free library in the town of Maodesfield.

OUR SPECIAL ARTIST IN CHINA.

We may claim a right to feel particular interest in one of the new books that bring to home-staying readers so many widely-distant views of foreign lands and nations in every quarter of the globe. In August, 1872, as we trust the friends of this Journal will perfectly remember, its well-known Special Artist, Mr. William Simpson, was dispatched from London to Pekin, for the express purpose of attending the marriage of the Emperor of China and furnishing sketches of the Chinese Court and capital, to appear in the Illustrated London News. Mr. Simpson had done much service of this kind on former occasions, in different parts of the world. He was at the siege of Sebastopol in 1855, and went through several provinces of India two or three years after the sepoy rebellion of 1857, visiting also Cashmere and Thibet, to gather a stock of pictorial materials for works published by Messrs. Day and Son, which were of more than ordinary merit. In 1868 Mr. Simpson was commissioned by the proprietors of this Journal to go with the British military expedition to Abyssinia; and the illustrations of that campaign which he supplied, with those contributed by other hands, are preserved in a volume which has, at least for the sake of its subject, a permanent historical interest. Since that time he has thrice been sent to the Levant, in order to procure illustrations of Egypt, the Nile, and the Eastern tour of the Prince and Princess of Wales; the works of the Suez Canal during their progress; again, the ceremonies and festivities at the opening of the Suez Canal, the excavations and antiquarian discoveries at Jerusalem, and the ruins of Sebastopol, with the British and French military cemeteries there.

In 1870 and 1871 Mr. Simpson was one of our Special Artists for the great war between France and Germany; whilst another, Mr. R. T. Landells, was appointed to serve with the army of the Crown Prince of Prussia. Mr. Simpson was at one time with the French, at another time with the German, armies; he was at the opening of the war on the Moselle, at the siege of Metz, on the battle-field of Sedan, at the siege of Strasburg, and at the siege of Paris, where, finally, he was shut up with the Communists, and witnessed the last agonies of their struggle in May, 1871. We have chosen to bear this testimony to the extent of his experiences not merely in order to recommend his new publication, but to show by this example what kind of men are employed by the Illustrated London News in its service abroad. They travel promptly and boldly wherever the course of passing events, from week to week or from month to month taking a new direction, seems likely to arouse the public feeling of interest—now here and now there, all over the world. It is with a natural satisfaction that we observe the tokens of approval sometimes bestowed upon them personally by foreign Governments, and their recognition with marks of social esteem in the places they have to visit. Mr. Simpson's new book, entitled Meeting the Sun (published by Messrs. Longmans and Co.), shall for the same reason be welcomed by us, though its text, as a literary work, is entirely his own, and we can only claim the merit of the engravings, reproduced by the heliotype process for this handsome volume. It is bound in yellow and red, the Imperial colour and the colour significant of Marriage among the Chinese; and the doubled Chinese letter Shih, which denotes Felicity, adorns the cover of this book as an emblem of wedded bliss.

The title needs to be explained, but this enigma is not hard to solve. Let astronomers say what they will, if we are to believe our own eyes, the sun goes round this world from east to west. A traveller, therefore, going round the world from west to east, is sure to meet the sun. This was the case with Mr. Simpson; and on March 8, 1873, when he arrived at 180 deg. E. longitude, in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, he met the sun, of course, half way in his circuit from the meridian of Greenwich Observatory, around this terrestrial globe. Mr. Simpson and the sun, who have commonly agreed pretty well, here had a slight difference of opinion. It was about the precise day of their meeting. The sun made it a day; but whether it was a Saturday or a Friday, the 8th or the 7th of that month, was a point upon which they might have disputed all the twenty-four hours. Coming eastward from Japan to California, you reckon the past time a day too much; for you have met the sun every morning a little sooner than you ought to have done, or would have done by sitting still to await his rising. Mr. Simpson, with other passengers on board the Pacific Mail Steam-Ship Company's vessel Alaska, bound for San Francisco, had to consent to live one day over again. They spent twenty-six days, however, in crossing the ocean from Yokohama, a voyage of five thousand miles, which brought our Special Artist into the western hemisphere, and we had the pleasure of seeing him safely returned here on Midsummer Day.

He had started on Aug. 5, by the new Indian mail route, through Brindisi, and by the railway from Alexandria to Suez, not by the Suez Canal. On his road to Brindisi, we should observe, he has something to say of the Mont Cenis tunnel, the works of which he had thoroughly examined and delineated for the Illustrated London News, as well as the proceedings at the opening of the tunnel and the Mont Cenis Summit Railway, before it was superseded by the completion of that great work. The harbour works of Brindisi and the classical antiquities of that place, which is endeared to us by recollections of Horace and Virgil, are noticed also in their due place. But Mr. Simpson on this occasion, instead of travelling by railway the whole length of the Italian peninsula, from Piedmont to the Calabrian promontory, chose to embark at Venice in the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam-boat Poonah, which conveyed him down the Adriatic. He only stopped a few hours at Brindisi with that vessel, and was carried on to Alexandria, where he found important works in progress to improve the harbour, despite the competition of Port Said and the Suez Canal. Having quickly crossed Egypt by the railroad, he descended the Red Sea in the P. and O. steamer Ellora, and traversed the Indian Ocean to Point de Galle, Ceylon, arriving there on the last day of August. Next morning, having transferred himself to the Travancore for Hong-Kong, he commenced the farther easterly part of his long voyage, which took him by Penang and Singapore, and through the Straits of Malacca, to the shores of China. He was at Hong-Kong on Sept. 16, at Shanghai on the 22nd, and at Pekin in very good time to see all the preparations for the young Emperor's marriage, which took place in the middle of October.

In this ordinary route of European travel and traffic to the Eastern Empire of Asia there was nothing for Mr. Simpson to see but what hundreds of Englishmen and Scotchmen are seeing every year. Much of it was what he had seen before. He wielded indeed a skilful pencil; and with his trained faculty of observation, and with his knowledge of what is new and what is old in the Eastern world, now so full of strange contrasts and mixtures of European with Asiatic manners, he was enabled to send us an interesting series of sketches. Besides the incidents of the journey and voyage by the P. and O. route, including Mont Cenis, Venice, and Brindisi, he has put into this volume two or three views of the Suez Canal, and the scene of the Mohammedan religious procession from Cairo to escort the Holy Carpet to Mecca. Mr. Simpson, by-the-way, is an enthusiastic connoisseur of all the Oriental religions—Judaism, Mohammedanism, and the Coptic, Abyssinian, Armenian, and Russian modifications of the Greek Church; the Parsee faith, and other most ancient beliefs of Iran; the Brahminism of India, the Buddhism of Thibet, the creeds of Tau and of Kong-Fu-Tze in China, and that of Shin-Too in Japan—his eclectic philosophy has a share of consideration for each and all. The extant forms of human credulity are not enough for his eager study. We can even detect, in his allusions to "the old Scythic cultus, or the Aswamedha sacrifice of the horse, brought into India by the Aryan race," a hankering desire for a few more strange religions, which may have abused the minds of dim barbarous nations long since become extinct. Indeed, this intelligent and ardent curiosity, with regard to such old-world and other-world concerns, has always seemed to us remarkable in a man so keen and so alert to pursue the most practical objects of interest which beset us at the present day. Some of our readers may be aware that he has contributed several essays to the discussions of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, as well as the Architectural Society. By his exhibition of a set of water-colour drawings, last year, to show the remains of the Temple at Jerusalem, he has also lent some aid to the late revival of public interest in those subjects of religious history and topography. Without any pretensions to profound learning it will be allowed that Mr. Simpson's desultory references to all this sort of thing give his book a flavour of earnest thought. He thinks of the remote past and the future, whilst eye and hand are busy in lively delineations of the present. His mind is crowded with ideas of many different nations and ages, especially those expressed by symbolic forms and rites, in startling juxtaposition. The effect is rather piquant; and those who want a more complete and precise account of such matters can seek it elsewhere.

In China, more particularly the metropolis of China, he notices the customs and ceremonies of the Imperial Court, the temples of Pekin and the religious observances there, and the civil hierarchy of that great empire, with its stringent literary examinations, and the ordinary habits of the townsfolk as he saw them daily in the streets. We are shown the difference between the Tartar city and the Chinese city of Pekin, and the habits of their respective populations. In the former, which surrounds the Emperor's palace, the dominant race of Manchus, armed and drilled, form an Imperial Household Guard. But these privileged Guardsmen are seen lounging all day long with pet pigeons carried on sticks, or small birds in cages, as they appear in Mr. Simpson's sketch. He describes the Ta-Ching-Mun or Palace, with its gates and halls, bearing the sublimest names, the "Gate of Heavenly Peace," the "Hall of Steadfast Purity," and the "Pavilion of Supreme Felicity." The constitution of this venerable empire is discussed; and we are told of the late Regency of two Dowager Empresses during the boy Emperor's nonage. Our readers have not forgotten what a business it was to choose a wife for his Majesty by competitive examination among fifty or sixty eligible girls; and how the Board of Astrologers prescribed the happy day and hour for this wedding; and how the bride underwent a course of lessons from the Professor of Matrimony; all which particulars may again be reviewed in our Special Artist's book. He relates them with a humorous relish of their quaintness and queerness, which increases as he sojourns in China. The nuptial ceremony, indeed, he was not permitted to witness, nor did he ever behold either the Emperor or the accomplished maiden, Ah-Luh-Te, who was to be raised to the Dragon Throne. But he saw the processions, by day and night, between the bride's house and the palace; the parade of wedding gifts, the gorgeous apparel and furniture, the pomp of canopies, umbrellas, fans, and lanterns; finally, the box or closed chair in which she was carried at midnight to her illustrious bridegroom. By the friendly assistance of an English lady who lives at Pekin, our Artist got a clandestine peep at the grand wedding procession, notwithstanding the strict official prohibition to see it. We can imagine there must have been some fun in so doing; but there was, perhaps, a little danger too.

He next occupies our attention with the famous Temple of Heaven, the Temple of Earth, and the other places of established worship for the Imperial Court at Pekin. Their architecture and ritual, with all its understood symbolism, as interpreted by Mr. Edkins, seemed to him worthy of study. The meaner shrines and more vulgar deities of the Chinese populace were not overlooked. Every reader must have observed that lamentable figure of "A God Out of Repair;" and the pious self-devotion of a hermit-priest, nailed up in his box by the wayside, to receive the doles of passers-by for the cost of mending this wooden divinity. But nothing in China, we think, was more deserving of our Artist's notice than the system of Government literary examinations for all official employments throughout the empire. His illustrations and descriptions of the Examination Court, with its range of closets, in which the solitary candidates are doomed to meditate and write their answers to the questions that are set for them, may be "a caution" to our aspirants of the Civil Service here. The girls' schools, the pawnbrokers' shops, the sale of the Pekin Gazette by newsmen, and the Chinese "Punch and Judy" are delineated by our Artist's pencil with lively force and truth.

In Japan, where he passed one month, Mr. Simpson found many scenes of interest; but our well-known contributor, Mr. Wigram, of Yokohama, had long before supplied this Journal with numerous very clever illustrations of Japanese life. Something was yet left for Mr. Simpson to do there, after which he proceeded across the ocean to California, as we have remarked. Hearing of the Modoc Indians in the Lava Beds, where they defied the military forces of the United States, our adventurous Special Artist made his way to that wonderful natural stronghold of a desperate savage tribe. His views of the Lava Beds and Captain Jack's Cave, his sketches of the Indians, and his illustrations of several events in this strange warfare, attracted much notice both in Europe and America. The picturesque scenery to be admired in that western region of the New World continent was not left unvisited by Mr. Simpson. The Yosemite valley, the giant trees of Mariposa, and the lofty peak of Mount Shasta were deserving of a short excursion. He could not, by the way, with his curiosity about odd religions, omit to look in upon Brigham Young and the Mormons, at Great Salt Lake city. The Mammoth Cave of Kentucky was taken in his road through the States to Washington, before he embarked at New York for the homeward voyage. We think, on the whole, that this volume does our Special Artist much credit; and we trust that it will also be thought creditable, in some degree, to the Illustrated London News. Mr. Simpson has visited Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, and seen the behaviour of their people. If he were at all censorious—but he is not—he might say to the earth, "Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead!" But the round world might reply to him, as the fat knight to Prince Hal, "A better than thou; I am a gentleman, thou art a drawer!"

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF DESART.

The Right Hon. Catherine, Countess of Desart, widow of John Otway, second Earl, died, on the 13th inst., at 122, Pembroke-road, Dublin, aged seventy-five. Her Ladyship was eldest daughter and coheir (with her sisters, Mrs. Tuite and Mrs. Morris) of Maurice Nugent O'Connor, Esq., of Mount Pleasant, King's County, by Maria, his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas Burke, Bart., of Marble Hill, in the county of Galway. She married, first, Oct. 7, 1817, John Otway, 2nd Earl of Desart (by whom she was grandmother of the present Earl of Desart); and, secondly, Jan. 26, 1824, Rose Lambart Price, Esq., who died in 1826, leaving by her a daughter, Maria, married to John La Touche, Esq., of Haristown. The O'Connors of Mount Pleasant represented the famous Irish race, the O'Connors of Offaley.

THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF MILLTOWN.

The Right Hon. Barbara, Countess Dowager of Milltown, widow of Joseph, fourth Earl of Milltown, K.P., died at Monkstown, near Dublin, on the 14th inst. Her Ladyship, who was second daughter and coheir (with her sisters, Mrs. O'Reilly, Mrs. Butler, and Mrs. MacEvoy, of Tobertyn, in the county of Meath) of the late Sir Joshua Colles Meredyth, Bart., of Greenhills, in the county of Kildare, by Maria, his wife, only daughter and heiress of Lawrence Coyne Nugent, Esq., married, first, in 1822, Eyre, last Lord Castlecoote, by whom she had no issue; and, secondly, in 1828, Joseph, fourth Earl of Milltown, by whom (who died in 1866) she had three sons, viz.—1, Joseph Henry, fifth Earl of Milltown, who died, unmarried, April 8, 1871; 2, Edward Nugent, present Earl, born in 1835, and married, in 1871, to Lady Geraldine Evelyn Stanhope; and, 3, the Hon. Henry Leeson, Chamberlain to his Excellency Earl Spencer, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland; and two daughters (twins), viz.—Lady Barbara Chetwynd Stapylton and Lady Cecilia Turton.

SIR E. F. SCUDAMORE-STANHOPE, BART.

Sir Edwyn Francis Scudamore-Stanhope, second Baronet, of Holme Lacy, in the county of Hereford, Captain R.N., and heir presumptive to the earldom of Chesterfield, died on the 8th inst. He was born Dec. 15, 1793, the only son of Admiral Sir Henry Edwyn Stanhope, who was second in command in the expedition to Copenhagen, and was created a Baronet, in 1807, for his distinguished conduct. The gentleman whose death we record saw some service in the Navy. He was midshipman of the Surveillante in 1810, Lieutenant of the Castor in 1813 and 1814, and was made Commander in the latter year. In 1851 he became a Captain on the retired list. Sir Edwyn succeeded to the title at the decease of his father, Dec. 14, 1814; and, having inherited, at the demise of Frances, Duchess of Norfolk, the Holme Lacy estate of the Scudamores, assumed, in 1826, the additional surname and arms of Scudamore. He married, Jan. 20, 1820, Mary, daughter of Thomas Dowell, Esq., of Parker's Well, Devon, and by her (who died Aug. 3, 1859) leaves, with other issue, a son and successor, the present Sir Henry Edwyn Chandos Scudamore-Stanhope, third Baronet (born April 8, 1821), who married, Aug. 6, 1851, Dorothea, daughter of Sir Adam Hay, Bart., and has several children. Sir Edwyn served as High Sheriff of Herefordshire in 1843.

SIR F. P. SMITH.

Sir Francis Pettit Smith, Kt., the first practical introducer of the screw-propeller into the Royal Navy and Mercantile Service, died, on the 12th inst., at 15, Thurloe-place, South Kensington, aged sixty-six. Originally a grazing farmer, he developed the system of screw-propulsion; and for his services to the Navy her Majesty, in 1855, granted him an annual pension from the Civil List of £200; and in 1871 conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. In 1857 a national subscription was made for a testimonial to Mr. Smith, and a service of plate and £2675 were presented to him at a public banquet at St. James's Hall. Since 1860 he was Curator of the Patent Office Museum, South Kensington. Sir Francis was twice married, and leaves a widow and two sons. Our Number for Sept. 9, 1871, contained a portrait of Sir F. P. Smith.

THE HON. J. JOHNSTONE.

The Hon. J. Johnstone, Judge in Equity of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, whose death at Cheltenham was recently announced, was born in 1792. His grandfather, Lewis Johnstone, a Scotchman of the Annandale family, having married Miss Peyton, of Huguenot descent, removed to Georgia, and was Governor of that province when the United States were still colonies of Great Britain. His father entered the Army in 1775, and served during the war of American Independence, three of his uncles being killed in action, fighting on the British side. His mother was the only child of Captain John Lichtenstein, of Austrian extraction. Judge Johnstone was educated by a private tutor, the Rev. Dr. Duncan, of Ruthwell, Dumfriesshire. He went to Halifax, Nova Scotia, at the age of nineteen, was called to the Bar in 1815, and rose to distinction as one of the foremost lawyers in British North America. At an early period he adopted a political career, and until his elevation to the Bench he represented continuously one of the largest constituencies in the province. He was a member of the Executive Council, and became, successively, Solicitor-General and Attorney-General, was the acknowledged head of the Conservative party, and the leader of the Conservative Government when in power. Judge Johnstone was one of the earliest advocates of the confederation of the British Provinces, which measure he warmly supported throughout his life. In 1857 he was sent, together with the Hon. Adams Archibald, on a delegation to England, on behalf of Nova Scotia, to adjust the claims of the mining associations. In June, 1873, he was appointed Governor of Nova Scotia; but his declining health prevented his acceptance of the post. Judge Johnstone was distinguished as an eloquent orator, a man of great legal acumen and knowledge, of marvellous grasp of intellect, of chivalrous honour and unswerving rectitude.

The annual ball of the Royal London Yacht Club took place, yesterday week, at Willis's Rooms. The supper was presided over by the Commodore.

Fever has fallen to so low an ebb that the governors of the London Fever Hospital are considering whether they should not enlarge the scope of their benevolence. Their annual general meeting, held in the Freemasons' Tavern, was occupied with routine business and the election of trustees. An encouraging report was presented.

Guio, £100 and an annuity of £20; and there are some specific bequests of jewellery. The residue of her estate is left to her only son, Edward Southwell, the present Lord De Clifford.

The will and codicil, both bearing date Dec. 13 last, of Mark Philips, late of Welcombe, Warwickshire, who died on Dec. 23, were proved on the 10th inst. by Robert Needham Philips, the brother, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £400,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Clay, all his household furniture, plate, horses, and carriages, and Piercefield House, with such land thereto as she may select, not exceeding twenty acres, for life; subject thereto he devises all his real estate in the counties of Monmouth and Gloucester to his son the said Henry Clay, and all his real estate in the counties of Derby and Stafford to his son the said Charles John Clay. Testator also gives the residue of his personalty to his wife for life; at her death £10,000 is settled upon each of his two daughters, and the remainder is given to his said two sons. The deceased states that it is not from any want of love to him that he has not left his other son, Joseph Spenden Clay, anything, but that he is possessed of considerable property, and had requested him out of kindness to his brothers and sisters not to do so.

The will, dated Nov. 1 last, of the Hon. Richard Francis Moore, who died on Nov. 15, at No. 28, Coulton-road, Maidavale, was proved on the 10th inst. by Lady Elizabeth Anne Moore, the sister of the deceased, the sole executrix, the personalty being sworn under £60,000. The residue, including the proceeds of sale of her real estate, she gives in two equal shares to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest at Brompton and the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic in London, with a condition that a Maria Pughe ward shall be established in the former and an Anne Pughe ward in the latter.

At a meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works, yesterday week, various proposals for City improvements were considered. New rules for the regulation of clothes-drying on Blackheath were reported upon, and, after discussion, were referred back to the committee. A recommendation from the fire-brigade committee to offer prizes for improved fire-escapes was considered and referred.

The Marquis of Westminster presided over a meeting of metropolitan volunteer officers last Saturday, at which it was officially stated that the South Eastern, the London, Chatham, and Dover, the South Western, and the Brighton Railway Companies had expressed their inability to convey the volunteers to either of the towns named for the Easter Monday review, in consequence of the largely-increased traffic on that day, resulting from the operation of the Bank Holidays Act. General regret was felt at this, and a resolution was unanimously passed requesting the Secretary of State for War to forward to her Majesty the earnest expression of a hope that she may be enabled to review the metropolitan volunteers in the course of the ensuing season. To compensate to some extent for the abandonment of the Easter Monday Review, an all-comers prize meeting on a large scale will be held at Brighton in May. A large sum has already been subscribed. Portsmouth proposes to hold an Easter Monday review at its own risk. The Town Council have discussed the subject, and it is contemplated to issue invitations to the volunteers of the southern counties. Sir Hope Grant made his usual winter inspection of the London Scottish last Saturday. The prize distribution, which has hitherto been performed by Lady Elcho, was postponed, out of consideration for the bereavement recently sustained by her Ladyship and Lord Elcho. Mr. Justice Denman distributed the prizes to the Inns of Court Volunteers, in Lincoln's Inn Hall, on Thursday week. A great many ladies were present, including Mrs. Denman. Amongst the spectators also were Vice-Chancellor Malins and General M'Murdo. Lieutenant-Colonel Bulwer, Q.C., M.P., was in command.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1874.

A change of Government, although generally and justly regarded as an event of first-rate importance, does not in this country, as in some European States, entail consequences dangerous to public tranquillity. In our view of the case, we may be said to have passed through a revolution during the last month—a revolution, moreover, of more striking significance than had been anticipated by either of the political parties. But in the common-sense, sober, practical view of the change which has taken place, it represents little more than an alteration of time and mode in our plans of political development. Roughly speaking, any Administration possessing within itself the smallest germ of vitality feels itself under the necessity of giving legislative effect to what it regards as the ascertained desire of a majority of the people. No matter what may be the private, or even party, sympathies of its members, and even giving full credit to that weight of influence which office bestows, Governments can do little more than express in action what for the time being the nation wishes to be expressed. It may do so more or less vividly, or more or less perfunctorily; but its aim will be, and everybody knows it, to adapt its programme of measures to what it is convinced is the sense of public need. The Queen has changed her servants, and the present set differs in many respects from the last; but the object of the one as well as of the other is to do the work of the household, not to overturn the laws, nor to reverse the conditions, upon which its affairs have customarily been managed. The English people well understand this; and, unless a change of Ministry should involve an infraction of Constitutional law, or an implied usurpation of political authority, they feel no difficulty in extending to a change upon which their opinions may widely differ the sanction of their acquiescence.

We have now a new Administration, in conformity with the results of the general election. It has come into power by no overt act of its own. It is, we may say, the natural product of a strictly constitutional process. It will be viewed by some with regret. It will be welcomed by others with acclamation; but no one will deny that it is entitled to a fair trial. The circumstances in which it had its origin demand this; the character of its members enforces that demand; the political mood of the present time will, no doubt, secure it. Mr. Disraeli is now at the head of a Government which Parliament will recognise as a legitimate embodiment of the wishes of the people. His proposals, such as they may be, will have to be taken into respectful consideration. There is but little danger of their being exposed to factious opposition. No doubt they will be keenly criticised. In some instances they may be unable to pass through the fiery ordeal to which they will be submitted. But a fair, and even an indulgent, discussion of them is what he has a right, owing to the position he occupies, to expect. Such an expectation he might ground upon personal considerations only. But he is under no necessity to place his claim upon so narrow a basis. He has associated with himself in the Government over which he presides a body of colleagues whose intellectual and political ability have long since been recognised by the country. With Lord Cairns on the woolsack, Lord Derby at the Foreign Office, Lord Salisbury responsible for the government of India, and Lord Carnarvon for that of the colonies, none will be disposed to look upon the new Administration as intrinsically weak. In administrative ability it is very far indeed from being open to contempt; in debating power it is strong in both Houses—competent we imagine, in ordinary circumstances, to hold its own. One advantage it possesses which its predecessor lacked. There is no fear that what it does in the Commons will be repudiated in the Upper House. Thus, Mr. Disraeli will enjoy the fullest opportunity of exhibiting to the country whatever qualifications of statesmanship he may really possess. The chance has come to him, towards the close of a lengthened and brilliant career, of writing the next chapter of English history; and the public, not of the United Kingdom only, but of Europe and America, is curious to see what will be the drift and character of that which he will deem it worth while to write.

Parliament will meet on Thursday next. Its first business will be to choose a Speaker and to swear in members. Its next, to order the issue of writs for a fresh election of those Commoners who by the acceptance of office under the Crown have vacated their seats. It will be upwards of a week, therefore, after the opening of both Houses before the commencement of the business of legislation can take place. There will be little to show what the general policy of her Majesty's Ministers will be for some time to come, unless, indeed, which is far from certain, Mr. Disraeli should take the opportunity of the motion for an Address to the Throne to give an outline of his political programme. The Estimates will probably be those of his predecessors in office. Time will not admit of any such mature preparation of important measures as will allow of their being introduced before Easter. The first indication of what the nation may expect from the substitution of a Conservative for a Liberal Government will appear in the financial proposals of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and it is not at all unlikely that the passing of the Estimates and of the bills required to give effect to the Chancellor's Budget will occupy the greater part of the forthcoming Session.

There is, however, much to be done out of Parliament. The arrangement of the relations we are to sustain in future towards the tribes living within or bordering upon British settlements on the Gold Coast will test the statesmanship of Lord Carnarvon; and the impending—we may almost say the commencing—famine in Bengal will furnish an occasion for the display of all his undoubted administrative talent by the Marquis of Salisbury. There is nothing just now, we believe, to excite anxiety in the mind of the Foreign Secretary; but the state of the Continent is such as he will be called upon to watch with care, and to deal with, from time to time, with wise self-restraint. In most other respects the want of the day is political repose. Of course, it will not last long, nor is it desirable that it should, for rest is very apt to run into stagnation. Of retroaction there is no fear. What we have done, we have done, and are not inclined to undo. It cannot be denied that a vast deal has been done in a comparatively short time—perhaps with less disturbance of vested interests than might have been expected, though not without occasioning troubles the combined force of which Mr. Gladstone's Government was destined to endure. The Constituent Bodies have determined, by a decisive majority, to slacken for a while the pace at which legislation was proceeding. The new Government will be likely enough to submit to their behests; and hence the immediate prospect before the country is, a short breathing time and little progress.
